Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that is not the primary object. The primary object is a response to the pressure that the Commissioner of Education says has been brought to bear upon him for some years to enable the Bureau of Education to aid, advise, and assist in this work. Let me also say to the gentleman from Indiana that there have been offers of pecuniary assistance—proffers made by benevolent individuals and by societies, who desire to contribute to the carrying on of this work and desired that the Bureau of Education should do it, and the bureau was unable to receive this money or to distribute it, because it lacked the power.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has stated that the primary purpose of this bill is not to lay the foundation for getting Congress to make an appropriation in order to diffuse education and destroy illiteracy, and so on. If that be not the purpose of it, why is this language found in the bill:

And for the payment of necessary expenses such sums as may be appropriated for this purpose from time to time by Congress.

Why was that language put in the bill?

Mr. TOWNER. I should certainly think if we were passing a bill giving power to the department such as I have referred to, it would also be wise to give it the power to make use of an appropriation, if Congress should make any.

Mr. COX. Then, does not the gentleman believe, if the bill becomes a law with that language in it, that by persistent and continuous pressure brought to bear on the Committee on Appropriations it will eventually lay the foundation for large appropriations to carry on work which should be done absolutely by the States?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not so believe. If the gentleman thinks so, his imagination goes further than my own.

Mr. COX. I do not know whether it is the gentleman's imagination or not, but my observation leads me to think that when they are attempting to get an appropriation some time in the future, the few little words hung in the bill here lay the foundation upon which appropriations can be made.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say this to the gentleman from Indiana. The Commissioner of Education came before the Committee on Education, which considered this bill, and reported unanimously in favor of its passage. It seemed to the Committee on Education that the Commissioner of Education and the bureau should have the power, at least, to go as far as is sought to go by the terms of this bill. And merely because the bill by its terms authorizes the bureau to use any money that might be afterwards appropriated by Congress for that purpose, it does not seem to me, ought to be considered as an objection to this bill.

Mr. COX. I have read the report of the committee, and for several years it seems to have been smarting under the idea that Congress is not appropriating enough money for this bureau. Money is all they want to give them power. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I wished to add another objection to it.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LAND IN NOXUBEE COUNTY, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6831) to quiet title to lot 5, section 33, township 14, range 18 east, Noxubee County, Miss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6831) to quiet title to lot 5, section 33, township 14, range 18 east, Noxubee County, Miss.

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lot 5, section 33, township 14, range 18 east, in the State of Mississippi, for which no confirmation has heretofore been granted and no patent has been issued, be, and the same are hereby, granted, released, and relinquished by the United States to the owners of the equitable title thereto and to their heirs and assigns forever, as fully and completely in every respect whatever as could be done by patents issued therefor according to law: Provided, That the confirmation granted hereby shall amount only to a relinquishment of any title that the United States has or is supposed to have in and to said land, and shall not be construed to abridge, impair, injure, prejudice, or divest in any manner any valid right, title, or interest of any person or body corporate whatever, the true intent of this act being to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said land under the laws of Mississippi, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of the said interest, title, and estate of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like very much to have the gentleman make a statement as to what interest, if any, the United States Government can have in these lands?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely none, in my opinion. An Indian named Outh-Lah was for a time supposed to have located on it, but that was back in 1833. In fact, he exhausted his right by making another location in a different neighborhood. It may be that at one time he took some steps toward locating on this one.

Mr. MILLER. May I inquire if the lots involved were a part of Florida when it was acquired by the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No.

Mr. MILLER. That part known as West Florida?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I think it was always a part of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. MILLER. Well, a part of the State of Mississippi was at one time a part of what was known as West Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is here, and he may be able to answer the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think this part of the State was ever located in Florida. This land was located in the northern part of the State.

Mr. MILLER. My purpose in asking the question was to ascertain whether this is one of those cases where there was a conflict between a Spanish grant and an English grant.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; that does not arise in this case.

Mr. MILLER. I might further inquire, Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is here, whether this is part of the old Choctaw Indian reservation, and if the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws are affected by this act?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not think they are affected by this act.

Mr. MILLER. I thought if they were, certainly the gentleman would be on the job.

Mr. HARRISON. This is in Mr. CANDLER'S district, and I am not informed as to the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

USE OF FORT M'HENRY MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12806) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Fort McHenry Military Reservation, in the State of Maryland, to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, making certain provisions in connection therewith, providing access to and from the site of the new immigration station heretofore set aside, and appropriating certain money.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12806) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Fort McHenry Military Reservation, in the State of Maryland, to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, making certain provisions in connection therewith, providing access to and from the site of the new immigration station heretofore set aside, and appropriating certain money.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, Md., to occupy and use the military reservation of Fort McHenry, Md., except that part mentioned in the fourth paragraph hereof, as a public park upon the agreement of said corporation to maintain and protect the reservation and the public property thereof during the continuance of its occupancy at its own expense: Provided, That the said permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission to use said grounds whenever and at such time as he may deem it expedient to do so.

SEC. 2. That any and all improvements, changes, and alterations in the grounds, buildings, and other appurtenances to the reservation, made by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, shall be made only according to detailed plans submitted to, and approved by, the Secretary of War in each case, prior to the commencement of any work under such plans, and that all such improvements, changes, or alterations, made by said corporation, shall be made without expense to the United States, and in the event of the withdrawal of said permission, such improvements as the Secretary of War may deem valuable to the military service shall become the property of the United States without cost to the Government; and such structures as may have been placed upon the reservation by said corporation, which are directed to be removed therefrom by the Secretary of War, shall be removed forthwith and the grounds placed in a condition entirely satisfactory to him, at the expense of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, and no claim of any character whatever incident to the occupation by the city of said reservation shall ever be made by said corporation against the United States.

SEC. 3. That permission is hereby granted the Secretary of the Treasury to use permanently a strip of land 60 feet wide belonging to said fort grounds, beginning at the north corner of the present grounds of the fort and extending south 63° 30′ east, 650 feet to the south corner of the site set aside for the immigration station at Baltimore, said strip of land being located along the northwest boundary of the land ceded to the Baltimore Dry Dock Co. and the land of the said immigration station, the same to be used, if so desired, in lieu of acquiring, by purchase or condemnation, any of the land of the dry dock company, so that the Secretary of the Treasury may, in connection with land to be acquired from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., have access to and from said immigration station and grounds over the right of way so acquired to the city streets and railroads beyond, the Secretary of the Treasury to have the same power to construct, contract for, and arrange for railroad and other facilities upon said outlet as fully as provided in the act approved March 4, 1913, setting aside a site for an immigration station and providing for an outlet therefrom: Provided, however, That if the Secretary of the Treasury accepts and makes use of said strip of land for the purposes aforesaid, the War Department shall have use of the railroad track and other roads constructed over which to reach the city streets and railroads beyond from the other parts of the fort grounds.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of placing the said Fort McHenry Reservation in proper condition and repair prior to permitting their use by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, in order that they may be so continued, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be extended in the repair, alteration, or removal, or other disposition of the buildings and other structures located upon said grounds and upon the repair of the roads now constructed thereon, to be expended by the direction of the Secretary of War or such officer as he shall designate: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated may be drawn from time to time as may be required in the progress of the work upon requisition of the Secretary of War.

With committee amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Clerk has read the bill as reported from the committee. In the copy of the bill I have the last section—section 5—is stricken out, and other changes have been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a proposed committee amendment. The Clerk has read the bill. The committee amendments will be reported later.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that this bill is so important, Mr. Speaker, that it really ought not to be considered in this way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, first, whether the mayor and city council of Baltimore are a municipal corporation?

Mr. LINTHICUM. They are.

Mr. MANN. Then they ought to be so described by the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The bill can be amended in that respect.

Mr. MANN. I see in the bill reference is made to the "fourth paragraph." What is the fourth paragraph, and where can it be found?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the gentleman will find that according to the amendment the bill has been changed as to the number. I notice the number is wrong in this bill. In the committee amendment that change has been made. I can explain to the gentleman what is meant by that portion.

Mr. MANN. I can see by the report what is meant, but that is not what it says. In the first place, that language ordinarily would refer to the section. There are only four paragraphs in this bill originally, and that is four sections, although the bill says "section 5." In the next place, there are not five sections in the bill. It is a very careless error on the part of some one. Then they propose to strike that out, and it leaves only three sections and three paragraphs, yet the exception is said to be taken in the fourth paragraph when there is not any fourth paragraph in the bill.

Does not my distinguished friend think that somebody ought to go over this bill carefully, so as to know what it means and be able to say what it means?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman that I shall not object to any amendment he may suggest to correct any defect he may find in the bill. But what is meant by the exception is this: A 60-foot strip, which is reserved for the right of way to the immigration station and to other parts of the fort grounds.

Mr. MANN. I know that my distinguished friend from Maryland is very careful about the work he does in the House. Hence I notice that, though he introduced the bill, he did not write it in this present form. I do not know who did it. It does not say what it means, and it does not mean what it says. Somebody ought to go over it carefully. Whether there are other defects in the bill that are material, it is hard to tell. What is this property worth?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I presume if it could be used for commercial purposes it would be worth a million dollars; but it could not be used for commercial purposes on account of the great reverence that the city of Baltimore and the people of Maryland have for this property; and I will say I think the gentleman from Illinois should have the same.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know whether or not my reverence goes far enough to give away a million dollars' worth of property because the city of Baltimore may have reverence for it. The mayor of the city of Baltimore estimates the value of this property at a million dollars?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; but we are not asking that it be given us, but loaned until the Government has need for it. Every interest of the Government has been protected by the War Department in this bill, and the committee amendments perfect the bill according to their instructions.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure how far we ought to go toward giving away a million dollars' worth of property in the city of Baltimore for park purposes.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that I was on the subcommittee which went into this matter very carefully——

Mr. MANN. Apparently they did not read the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I notice an inaccuracy in the printing of the bill, but the subject matter has been very carefully considered. It gives away no property of the Government. It simply gives to the city of Baltimore the right to use the 34 acres in the reservation as a public park at the expense of the city of Baltimore. It reserves to the War Department every possible regulation and control of the reservation; I think every interest of the Government is protected. In fact, I think it would save the Government some expense to let the city of Baltimore take proper care of that reservation.

Mr. MANN. I suppose my friend from Kansas thinks it is rather generous on the part of the city of Baltimore, when we let them have this for a park, that we do not have to bear the expense of maintaining it as a park, instead of letting Baltimore do that.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is up to the United States Government either to maintain the property as it should be maintained or allow somebody else to do it. The city of Baltimore desires to do it, and we think it would be a good plan to let it do so.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, there seem to be a good many loopholes in this bill that call for rectification, and I think it would be wise for the committee to give it further consideration for the purpose of remedying the defects in the bill, and so I shall object to its consideration by unanimous consent for the present.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will ask the gentleman if he will kindly point out what he considers defects, for the information of the committee that has given this matter so much care.

Mr. MADDEN. One of the defects is that you refer here to the provisions of section 4 of the bill, and there is no such section——

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a technical error. I will ask the gentleman to point out any substantial defects.

Mr. MADDEN. The uncertainty of the language in various other provisions of the bill, which seem to lead to the conclusion that the city of Baltimore will be the owner of this property for all future times.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is absolutely no such language in the bill. I wish the gentleman would specify——

Mr. MADDEN. I can not help but conclude that there is danger. I am willing to let the matter go over without prejudice——

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask the gentleman to let the matter go over without prejudice.

Mr. MADDEN. The understanding is that the gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to pass the bill without prejudice.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JACKSON BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6750) granting to the city of New Orleans right of way for a street across the Jackson Barracks Military Reservation, in the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city of New Orleans, a municipal corporation in the State of Louisiana, a permanent right of way across the front of Jackson Barracks Military Reservation, parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, for an extension of North Peters Street, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a space of the present width of said North Peters Street to be set aside for the purposes of this act.

With a committee amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That there is hereby granted to the city of New Orleans, a municipal corporation in the State of Louisiana, a right of way, to be used solely as a public street or highway, across the property of the United States, known as the Military Reservation of Jackson Barracks, the following-described premises, to wit: Beginning at the intersection of the limit of frontage granted by the Secretary of War, on November 13, 1912, to the board of levee commissioners, Orleans levee district, with the westerly boundary line of reservation of Jackson Barracks, La.; thence northeasterly along said boundary line 40.56 feet, more or less; thence southeasterly parallel with and 40 feet distant at right angles to the limit of frontage granted to the board of levee commissioners, Orleans levee district, 676.71 feet, more or less, to a point on the easterly boundary line of reservation; thence southwesterly along said boundary line 40.56 feet, more or less, to its intersection with the limit of frontage granted to the board of levee commissioners, Orleans levee district; thence northwesterly along the limit of frontage granted to the board of levee commissioners, Orleans levee district, 676.71 feet, more or less, to the point of beginning, and containing sixty-three one-hundredths acre, more or less, situated in the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana: Provided, That said premises above granted shall be improved and maintained without cost to the United States as a public street or highway: And provided further, That all materials, buildings, and other improvements which may be upon the said premises above described shall be removed therefrom by the said city of New Orleans at its expense and delivered to the proper military officer in charge of said Jackson Barracks: And provided further, That said premises shall not be at any time so used by the city of New Orleans as to prevent its use for military purposes in time of war or emergency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESTOPINAL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PORT ANGELES, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3454) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to lease to the city of Port Angeles, Wash., certain property.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized, directed, and empowered to lease and demise to the city of Port of Angeles, State of Washington, all of that tract of land reserved for lighthouse purposes by Presidential Order of February 10, 1908, and bounded on the southwest by suburban lots Nos. 135 and 147, as shown by the plats of Port Angeles town site, State of Washington, approved by the United States surveyor general of the State of Washington on November 4, 1863, and September 12, 1892, together with out lots Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and such portion of out lot No. 7 (all in township 31 north, range 6 west, Willamette meridian), of the Ediz Hook or False Dungeness Lighthouse Reservation, Wash., as may be required to give a frontage of two statute miles measured in a northerly and easterly direction along the westerly and northerly boundary of said reservation, beginning from a point on high-water mark opposite the northwesterly corner of lot 147 of the said Port Angeles town site; also the tide lands on the Strait of Fuca and on Port Angeles Harbor abutting on those portions of the Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation heretofore described, for and during the full period of 99 years, for its use, except as hereinafter specified: Provided, That in said lease it shall be stipulated that the Government of the United States may at any time during the term thereof go upon said reservation and establish and maintain post lights or such other aids to navigation as it may deem proper at any points on the reservation affected by this lease, and shall have access thereto and a sufficient right of way thereon at all times: Provided further, That no excavations, other than excavations for foundations for building purposes, shall be made, and no soil or other material forming the spit shall be removed from the lighthouse reservation; and that the buildings to be erected on the said premises shall not obstruct or interfere with any lights serving as aids to navigation.

SEC. 2. That said lease shall contain a provision that, in consideration of said lease, the said city of Port Angeles will construct and maintain in good condition at all times a roadway, paved with macadam or other material approved by the Secretary of Commerce, 30 feet in width, and extending from a public highway on the mainland to Ediz Hook Light Station, over the portion of the reservation so leased, as well as over the remaining portion which the Lighthouse Service will continue to use for lighthouse purposes, the said roadway to be above the limits of high-water mark. The lease shall further provide that the line of said roadway which traverses such portion of the Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation not covered by this lease may be laid out as may be directed by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 3. That there shall be a stipulation in said lease that all charges levied or to be levied on said premises during such term shall be at the expense of the city of Port Angeles, and no claim shall arise against the United States because of this lease or the termination thereof.

SEC. 4. That the said lease shall further provide that the Secretary of Commerce may at any time during the said period of 99 years, at his discretion, terminate and cancel said lease, in case said city of Port Angeles shall fail to construct and maintain in good condition the roadway herein provided for or neglect to pave same as hereinbefore provided for, or shall excavate on said lighthouse reservation for any purposes other than for building purposes, or shall take or remove therefrom soil or other material belonging to the lighthouse reservation, or shall, in any way, interfere with the right of the United States to establish and maintain post lights as specified above or fail to observe other provisions stipulated in said lease on its part to be kept and performed. It shall also be stipulated in said lease that all improvements made upon said lighthouse reservation by the said city of Port Angeles, and all buildings and other structures erected thereon by said city of Port Angeles, under the terms of said lease, shall, upon the termination of said lease, in natural term or by cancellation of the same, be and become the property of the Government of the United States, unless said improvements and buildings and other structures erected thereon shall be removed within six months from the date of the expiration of the lease; and that in event said structure shall be removed by said lessee, the premises shall be restored to the same condition as before their erection.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Commerce may include in said lease any other provisions or stipulations which in his judgment may be deemed necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 6. That said lease shall stipulate that the said roadway to be constructed and maintained by said city of Port Angeles, hereinbefore provided for, shall be built and completed on that portion of Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation to be leased to the said city of Port Angeles, and also on that portion of said reservation reserved for lighthouse purposes, within one year from date thereof.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "times," insert:

"And that the said city of Port Angeles shall not sublet any portion of the said property without first having obtained the consent of the Secretary of Commerce and his approval of all the terms and conditions in any such subleases."

Page 4, line 1, after the word "commerce," insert:

"In addition to the aforesaid consideration, the said city of Port Angeles shall pay to the Government of the United States such annual rental for the aforesaid property as may be decided upon by the Secretary of Commerce."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until we have some explanation of the measure. It seems to be a rather important bill which we are considering.

Mr. MANN. It covers a tract of land a mile and a half wide and 3 miles long.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill the value of the land we seek to give to this city under a 99-year lease.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It has no value that I know of at the present time. It is a low-lying spit, in the shape of a new moon, extending out into the water, with a lighthouse on the end of it. I am not aware that it has any particular value at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to the history of the acquisition of the tract by the United States Government?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will refer the gentleman from Wisconsin to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER], who is very familiar with all the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us know more about it. It may be worth several million dollars for aught we know.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the questions asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], this is not a tract of land a mile and a half wide, or 3 miles long, except when the tide is out. There are something less than 50 acres in the entire piece of ground, formed by the eddies and currents of the Pacific coast, on the eastern extremity of Jefferson County. This matter has been very thoroughly gone into by the Committee on the Public Lands, and we have communications from the Interior Department, also from the Department of Commerce. This letter which I have here from the Interior Department explains the fact that in 1862 this portion of land was set aside for public purposes and as a lighthouse reservation—about 10 acres for lighthouse reservation and the rest for town-site purposes.

Mr. MANN. When was it all covered into the lighthouse reservation?

Mr. FALCONER. In 1862.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman just said that about 10 acres of it was set aside for lighthouse purposes.

Mr. FALCONER. In 1863 all of it but 50 acres was withdrawn for town-site purposes. We would like to lease that portion of it reaching out about 2 miles from the mainland, averaging all the way from 150 yards to 600 yards in width, to the city of Port Angeles for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, if the situation is as the gentleman describes it, and a portion was reserved for lighthouse purposes in 1862, why does the bill refer to a lighthouse reservation of 1908?

Mr. FALCONER. I will send to the Clerk's desk the letter from the Interior Department and ask that it be read, if the gentleman would like to have the information.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the information from the department is largely included in a report of the committee. The bill itself says a lighthouse reservation created in 1908.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The entire town was a reservation for a number of years.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 19, 1913.

Hon. J. A. FALCONER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I am in receipt, by your reference for report, of House bill 9332, which proposes to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to lease to the city of Port Angeles, Wash., a portion of Ediz Hook Lighthouse Reservation.

By Executive order of June 19, 1862, a reservation was made "for lighthouse purposes of the Ediz Hook (False Dungeness Bay, Straits of Fuca) form low-water mark at the point and on all sides, not exceeding 10 acres in area." The same order created for public uses "a reservation of 5½ miles front by 1 mile deep on the south side of and fronting on Puget Sound, according to the locus indicated on plat B herewith, in township 30, ranges 5 and 6 west, Washington Territory." By Executive order of March 10, 1863, the reservation created by the order of June 19, 1862, except in regard to so much of said lands as may be needed for lighthouse purposes, "is revoked in respect to the uses mentioned, but is confirmed as a reservation for a town site under the provisions of an act of Congress * * * approved March 3, 1863."

The lighthouse reservation was subdivided into lots and designated as lots 1 to 11, inclusive, "on the spit." When the town site was subdivided a strip of about 6 acres between lot 1 of the lighthouse reservation and suburban lots 135 and 147 was left unplatted. By Executive order of February 10, 1908, the strip was added to the lighthouse reservation.

As at present constituted and reserved this undisposed of area or lighthouse reservation is under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of Commerce, and I note that on December 1, 1913, the Secretary of that department advised you that he had no objection to the proposed lease, but suggested that in lieu of the phraseology contained in House bill 9332 there be embodied the provisions of a substitute bill prepared in the Department of Commerce, which suggestion, you state, will be followed.

This department is aware of no objection to the enactment of the legislation proposed.

Respectfully,
A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have here a statement from the city clerk of Port Angeles, making it clear just what this strip is. One reason that the Lighthouse Board is anxious for this to pass is that the city of Port Angeles is to build a paved road to the lighthouse, and one does not exist there now. I will read a portion of the letter from the city clerk:

PORT ANGELES, WASH., January 3, 1914.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.:

I have your letter of December 27, with inclosures to the secretary of the chamber of commerce.

Replying to your questions, will state that there is no plank road on the spit. There are no buildings, except a few fishermen's huts and the lighthouse and residences occupied by keepers, which are situated at the very outer end of the spit. There is no brush whatever. The best data I have been able to obtain on how high the spit is above the highest tide is 4 feet, and will not vary on any portion of the spit, as it is practically level. As near as we can figure out the acreage asked for by the city amounts to 47 acres, and the total acreage of the spit is 62.5 acres. I trust this will answer your questions satisfactorily.

I trust that you will be able to get a bill recommended by the Committee on Public Lands satisfactory to them and to the city, and I assure you that the same will be greatly appreciated by the citizens of Port Angeles.

Yours, very truly, J. L. BEAM, City Clerk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will some gentleman from Washington explain the purposes that the municipality wishes to use this land for?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Washington says that there are 47 acres, and the report says that this strip is 1¼ miles in width and 3 miles long.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The spit consists of 47 acres above high tide.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman read a statement that all of it was about of the same elevation, about 4 feet above high tide.

Mr. FALCONER. There are 47 acres, and that represents the dry land. At extreme low tide it is a mile and a half wide, perhaps; but there is no portion of it outside of the 47 acres that is not covered by water during high tide. This particular piece of land has no growth on it whatever, except a little brush bordering on a lagoon near the shore end. It is absolutely worthless.

Mr. MANN. What are you going to do with it?

Mr. FALCONER. The city of Port Angeles wants it for manufacturing plants.

Mr. MANN. Without any revaluation; an indefinite and indeterminate lease.

Mr. FALCONER. It will cost something to build 3 miles of roadway 30 feet in width and property developed which will pay taxes.

Mr. MANN. When you rent a piece a mile wide and 3 miles long to build manufacturing enterprises without a revaluation it seems to me that you are asking too much. You can not do it by unanimous consent without our having more information. Here is a proposition to lease coming from a committee that did not have jurisdiction over it. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction of this matter. This bill is a Senate bill. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and they come in with a proposition to lease for nothing a piece of land a mile and a quarter wide and 3 miles long for manufacturing purposes without any revaluation provision in it. The gentleman from Washington would not for a moment entertain such a proposition from any other State than his own, and he would not from that unless compelled to.

Mr. FALCONER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I would entertain such a proposition from any State. This is to build up a piece of property, to put upon it industries that are taxable and will be valuable to the United States Government in way of taxes. The ground is not a mile and a quarter wide, but very narrow in places.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how wide it is. I read from the report that it was from a mile to a mile and a quarter wide and 3 miles long.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. One mile is to be reserved at the lighthouse end.

Mr. FALCONER. There is a provision that the Secretary of Commerce may charge any rental he may see fit added to the roads to be built over 3 miles long.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FALCONER. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it proposed to cut streets through this land?

Mr. FALCONER. Oh, no; it is only 150 yards wide in some places.

Mr. MADDEN. They are going to build manufacturing plants facing on this road?

Mr. FALCONER. No; they build them facing on the water.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the depth of the water there?

Mr. FALCONER. It is not very deep on the north side. You run out some distance before you get to shipping depth.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose it is proposed to build piers out from the land to a proper depth of water?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes; it is protected on the south side from inshore winds and strong currents. It makes a safe place for booming and holding logs.

Mr. MADDEN. About how many acres does the gentleman say that there is in this?

Mr. FALCONER. Forty-seven, or less than 50.

Mr. MADDEN. How much in the whole strip?

Mr. FALCONER. About 60 acres. We leave the outer mile for lighthouse purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would not the whole thing figure up 1,500 acres?

Mr. FALCONER. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; here is a map of it that will show the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The city wants at least a frontage of 2 miles?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On one side it is less than 2 miles.

Mr. MANN. The bill says 2 miles; it may be that there is nothing accurate about the bill and report.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, as a matter of information, this bill proposes to lease this water frontage for 2 miles?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes. It is to lease the whole strip except the outer 10 acres.

Mr. MADDEN. About what is the width of this land?

Mr. FALCONER. From 150 to 600 yards at high tide.

Mr. MADDEN. And this proposes to lease one side of it?

Mr. FALCONER. It is to lease the whole spit, except the outer mile.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I think I can state why the area of this strip varies so much, in the estimation of gentlemen. When they speak of its containing just so much land they refer to high tide and low tide. That is what makes the difference. At high tide there are 47 acres of dry land and at low tide there is considerably more.

Mr. MADDEN. Would we lease the low-tide lands in this?

Mr. FALCONER. We lease all the water front.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Of course we take it all out of the deep water.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague from Illinois, Mr. MANN, if he does not think under section 5 of the bill that the Secretary of Commerce would have the power to insert a revaluation clause in the lease which the bill contemplates between the Government and the city?

Mr. MANN. Possibly he would; but what difference does that make? We do not enact legislation upon the theory that when we say what we want the administrative officers will add a little to it. I will ask my colleague whether he is in favor of the Government of the United States leasing property for manufacturing purposes without a revaluation clause, where the lease is for all time, practically?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. No; I am not.

Mr. MANN. Then let us put it in here.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. The committee that conferred with the department and with the lighthouse people upon this matter felt after that conference that there was no need of putting in the bill all of the details that might properly appear in the lease.

Mr. MANN. Then why did they put in six pages of details?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Oh, there are not six pages of details.

Mr. MANN. I should say that there is much more detail than that.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. There are a great many things apart from the revaluation clause that ought properly to go into the lease, and we felt it was not necessary to put them in the bill. There were some points raised by the members of the committee when the matter was before the whole committee, and upon those points being discussed with the lighthouse people and with the Solicitor for the Department of Commerce it was suggested by them that the bill be not encumbered with a lot of these matters that might more properly appear in the lease. They said they expected to insert them in the lease.

Mr. MANN. Would my colleague be in favor of authorizing the construction of that dam over a navigable stream and authorizing the Secretary of War to give a lease without a revaluation clause in it?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Not expressly giving the authority to make a lease without a revaluation clause in it; but I should think there would be no objection to authorizing the department to make a lease where there was assurance that the department was going to put a revaluation clause in the lease.

Mr. MANN. But there is no such assurance about it. There can be no such assurance. No administrative officer can say what he is going to do about a bill in the future when it becomes a law, for he may not be there.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, would it be satisfactory to my colleague if we were to make an amendment such as he suggests, and to then let the bill pass?

Mr. MANN. I think it would take possibly some preparation to get up such an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the people of the city of Port Angeles, which is in the district which I have the honor to represent, have no objection to a revaluation clause. Their letter here from the city counsel hopes that any terms will be made that will be satisfactory. The Lighthouse Board has looked at it a great many times and it is anxious to have the lease made.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman stated a while ago, but where is the authority for that statement that the Lighthouse Board is anxious about the matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have it in writing.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have it read. There is a report from the Department of Commerce, but there is no such statement in their report.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, would it be agreeable that the bill be passed over without prejudice at this time, allowing it to remain on the calendar?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing that it should go over, so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF THE LATE SENATOR BACON.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House resolution 419.

Resolved, That the House accept the invitation of the Senate extended to the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral services of the Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Georgia, to be held in the Senate Chamber on Tuesday, the 17th day of February next, at 1 o'clock p. m.

Resolved, That the committee of the House heretofore appointed by the Speaker to attend the funeral services of the late Senator BACON be instructed to act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

House resolution 420.

Resolved, That on Tuesday, February 17, 1914, at 10 minutes to 1 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the resolution heretofore adopted accepting the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral services of the Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Georgia, the House shall proceed, with the Speaker, to the Senate Chamber, and at the conclusion of the services it shall return to this Chamber.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the resolutions we have just passed, and in order that we may expedite the consideration of the Indian bill, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether he has ascertained at all what effect that will have on committee work? Tuesday morning, as the gentleman knows, is the morning more committees meet than any other day in the week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is probably true.

Mr. MANN. Because it is Cabinet day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But we can have a quorum here if it is necessary.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose it will be necessary and they will come in at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We will lose an hour or more on account of the funeral of Senator BACON, and we want to make it up by starting an hour earlier, if there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MARRIAGE OF HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN AND ENTRYWOMEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 11102.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11102) providing that the marriage of a homestead entryman to a homestead entrywoman shall not impair the right of either to a patent, after compliance with the law a year, to apply to existing entries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us know who is the author of the bill.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the object of the bill, which the reading of the bill has doubtless already informed the House, is to remove the obstruction contained in our Federal statutes to the marriage of homesteaders with each other. As the law now is, a boy homesteader can not marry a girl homesteader—and it is the same with widowers and widows—without the forfeiture of one of the homesteads. Mr. Speaker, I know of no other calling, vocation, or lawful and praiseworthy condition in life where marriage is interdicted by law. I regard it is an anomaly that such a provision should be found to exist in our otherwise beneficent homestead laws. This feature, in my judgment, is thoroughly repugnant to the fundamental idea of the original homestead act, the purpose of which was to provide homes and encourage home building, presumably in most instances by families. It is very clear that if such an obstruction to marriage were to be found in the statutes of most any of the States it would be held by the courts to be contrary to public policy and therefore void. A homesteader in my district suggests to me that the portion of the statute against which my bill is directed constitutes class legislation.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to know the name of the Representative who introduced this bill——

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I think there is a good deal of merit in the criticism this homesteader makes because, while male and female homesteaders, while complying with the law, may not marry each other except under penalty of the forfeiture of one of the homesteads, either may marry anybody else not a homesteader. It is plain that this statutory infringement upon the right to make a choice of a life companion is a positive discrimination in favor of those engaged in other pursuits and against those engaged in homesteading. It hinders or prevents a male or a female homesteader from choosing a life partner who is also a homesteader. It is very palpable that the pernicious effect of the law is to reduce the list of suitors of the female homesteader from which she might otherwise choose; a fellow homesteader, maybe her neighbor, may be her first choice. The law operates in the same damaging way to the aspirations of the male homesteader. He may have to give up his choice of a schoolma'am homesteader and go into town and make a match which may not prove a success upon the farm. I contend here is a Federal statute which interferes with one of the most natural and highest rights of civilized social life. I regard it as a very grave reflection upon our congressional legislation affecting adversely and fundamentally, as it does, an institution so old and sacred as marriage.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I shall yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to increase the size of the homestead by permitting the people who take homesteads to join?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Not in the least; well, yes and no; the intention is to permit individual homesteaders to join, but not to require that their homesteads join or adjoin.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Nebraska think that he has a good deal of nerve to say it is against public policy to prevent marriages, while the gentleman all his life has been preventing one that ought to have taken place? [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I think, Mr. Speaker, if it be regarded as a dereliction, my not to have found and succeeded in improving a good opportunity by marrying, at least one time, that I may here by securing the enactment of this bill compensate many thousandfold the small loss caused by my personal celibacy.

Mr. Speaker, the present statutory discrimination against homesteaders relative to marriage is in square conflict with the very popular idea of many years' standing in this country, that ways and means should be devised, not only for keeping the youth upon the farms, but to induce a large percentage of the population of our cities to return to the farms. We all agree that this unbalanced economic condition is daily becoming a more and more serious problem for legislative solution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I thought the passage of this bill was designed in the interest of and would let the gentleman from Nebraska join his affairs in life with some native entrywoman upon a homestead I would certainly be in favor of it. [Laughter.] I doubt whether the gentleman from Nebraska could make up for his dereliction in life by proposing to let some homesteader or homesteadess join their affairs unless he be one of them.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The purpose of my bill is to clear the way for all worthy bachelors, maidens, widowers, and widows who possess the courage to become homesteaders, home builders, and home owners, so desirable to our citizenship.

Mr. MANN. I would like to help the gentleman from Nebraska get married. [Laughter.] I think we ought to compel him to get married; and if this will help any, we will all be for it.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. We will accept the help of the gentleman from Illinois very gratefully—anything to get the bill passed.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. If consent is given to the consideration of the bill, would the gentleman consent to an amendment that he is to be included as one of the parties to this nuptial contract?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Already I am included in its provisions, because I am not excepted.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield for a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that I am very well acquainted with some of the conditions which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] has mentioned in this bill, leaving out any personal interest that the gentleman from Nebraska may have in it, is a very meritorious measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] a question?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How much time does a homesteader have to stay on the land during the first year?

Mr. NORTON. During the first year? Under the present law, not necessarily more than seven months.

Mr. MANN. What do they have to do the first year on the land?

Mr. NORTON. They frequently spend a good deal of that time getting acquainted with their neighbors.

Mr. MANN. That is about all, too.

Mr. NORTON. The law requires that they put under cultivation one-eighth of the area the first year.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be a very easy matter under the existing law and this, if it becomes a law, for people to take double the amount of homestead land, 1,280 acres, out in the district of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?

Mr. NORTON. Even if that took place it would not, in my opinion, be unwise on the part of this Congress to enact this legislation, and thus encourage the marriage of young men and women out West.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman believes that all the land ought to be taken up as quickly as possible. Some of us do not. We think it ought to be given away to a few people.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks if it would not be a very easy matter, if this bill should become a law, coupled with existing statutes, for people to take double the amount of homestead land, to which they are entitled. I answer, certainly not. What my bill will accomplish is to preserve the right the single person acquired when he filed upon land to secure a patent, notwithstanding he has become so culpable as to get married, in the meaning of the present statute.

The present law would have him or her remain single for three or five years until patent has been issued. What good does this do? What public good is thereby subserved?

Mr. Speaker, it is the flimsiest kind of a fallacy that to permit two homesteaders to marry would result in land monopoly. If the two homesteaders who would marry, except for this peculiar statute, remain single to avoid a forfeiture of one of the homesteads, the result is that these two persons acquire title to two homesteads. The consequence is that these identical two persons are possessed of twice as much land as they would have been permitted to acquire title to had they married before either had acquired title to his or her homestead. It is clear the pernicious effect of the statute is to award a bonus of a homestead for not marrying, or to impose a fine of a homestead when homesteaders marry each other. It would be more in keeping with our institutions if a bonus of a homestead were awarded a married couple. The many reasons for this are too obvious to require citation to this intelligent legislative body.

Mr. Speaker, let us look a little further into the practical workings of the present statute. An unmarried homesteader may, before acquiring title, marry another homesteader who has but recently acquired title without either, under this condition, forfeiting the homestead. They are not required to wait until both have acquired title in order to avoid forfeiture. Again, an unmarried homesteader may, before acquiring title, marry a very large or the largest landowner and yet perfect title to the homestead.

I point out these features to show that the inhibition in the present statute does not prevent the monopolizing of either public lands or lands privately owned, and that the provisions of my bill enacted into law will not be promotive of land monopoly. But I am in full accord with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], that it would constitute wise and salutary legislation to make the acquirement of title to lands an incentive to marriage or a premium on marriage. Such legislation would be in consonance with our institutions and laws. Why, the new income-tax law gives marriage $1,000 advantage over single life, and who gainsaid the wisdom of the clause? Not one. If I were permitted, I might show numerous instances and examples where marriage is favored and fostered rather than discouraged or opposed by legislation, but right on the face of it it is extremely absurd that a man homesteading should not be permitted to marry the woman of his choice, who is at the same time homesteading, without the forfeiture of the homestead of one, though this be all of any kind of property that she or he has in the world.

Mr. MANN. How long do they have to live on the land the first year?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. They do not have to live longer on it the first year than the second or third year——

Mr. MANN. Oh, that does not answer my question——

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. It is seven months that is required the first year and each year—this time of residence at least.

Mr. MANN. That is only a recent law.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Yes; that is the three-year residence law.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question with reference to line 7 of the bill, which provides that the husband shall make the election.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The husband has the right to name the home always, and the bill is in conformity with this rule of law in all the States in the Union.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman has been talking about obstructions to marriage; does the gentleman believe it is in the interest of marriage to provide in this bill that the husband is to make this election? Why should not the entrywoman also be permitted to join with him in making that election?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. At present this is in conformity with the existing law; a few years hence, with the advancement of woman's suffrage, the wife may be accorded equal say with the husband, may become entitled to it in law, but doubtless she receives such consideration now in most cases as a matter of comity.

Mr. MANN. That is all right until after he has had a wife for a while who has learned to run the house.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the present statute is against public policy because it constitutes an obstruction to marriage. It is against public policy because it hinders homesteading and homebuilding. Because it is clearly repugnant to public policy in these two respects it should be repealed. Let two homesteaders marry without being fined one of the homesteads. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote; I ask for a third reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11102) providing that the marriage of a homestead entryman to a homestead entrywoman shall not impair the right of either to a patent, after compliance with the law a year, to apply to existing entries.

Be it enacted, etc., That the marriage of a homestead entryman to a homestead entrywoman after each shall have fulfilled the requirements of the homestead law for a year shall not impair the right of either to a patent, but the husband shall elect, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, on which of the two entries the home shall thereafter be made, and residence thereon by the husband and wife shall constitute a compliance with the residence requirements upon each entry: Provided, That the provisions hereof shall apply to existing entries.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out the comma after the word "law" and striking out the "a" and insert "one" in lieu thereof in the same line, and after the word "year," in line 5, insert the words "next preceding such marriage."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TITLE TO ALLEY IN CITY OF MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8683) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to relinquish the rights of the United States in and to a part of a certain alley in the city of Marshalltown, Iowa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to relinquish all the rights and interests of the United States to the Railroad Young Men's Christian Association in and to that portion of a certain alley situated in the city of Marshalltown described as follows: All that part of the alley situated in block 21 in the original town of Marshall, Marshall County, Iowa, extending between the south line of Church Street and the north line of the intersecting alley running east and west in said block.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

There was no objection.

The bill was again read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by transferring the words "to the Railroad Young Men's Christian Association" from lines 5 and 6 to line 4, after the word "relinquish."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, by transferring the words "Railroad Young Men's Christian Association," in lines 5 and 6, to line 4, after the word "relinquish."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 3439, with committee amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] moves to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 3439, with committee amendments. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3439) appropriating funds for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, to be expended, by and under his direction, for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera: Provided, however, That not less than $50,000 of said sum shall be available for expenditure in carrying on examinations and inspections authorized by the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., pp. 832, 833), regulating the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, shipment, and importation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and for the enforcement of the provisions, including detection of violations, of said act and the regulations made thereunder.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk did not report the bill correctly. The gentleman from South Carolina moved to pass the bill with committee amendments. It should be reported with the amendments, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend title by striking out the period after the word "cholera" and insert the words "and dourine."

On line 4, page 1, strike out the figure "5" and insert "6," so that it will read "$600,000" instead of "$500,000."

On line 8, page 1, after the word "cholera," strike out the colon and add the words "and dourine," and add a comma thereafter and the following language: "including the employment of assistants, clerks, and other persons, and the payment of all other necessary expenses, in the city of Washington and elsewhere."

On line 8, page 1, after the word "Provided," strike out the comma and the word "however" and the comma.

On page 2, line 8, after the word "thereunder," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "And provided further, That not more than $100,000 of the sum hereinbefore provided shall be used for the investigation, treatment, and eradication of the disease known as dourine."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAUGEN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] demands a second.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended to 40 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on the motion be extended to 40 minutes on a side. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how many minutes on a side would that make—40 or 60?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Forty minutes on a side.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish also to ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can submit only one request at a time. Is there objection to extending the time?

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether that extension of time can not be got at by printing?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this is a question of considerable importance, and full time ought to be given.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, a question of very much greater importance is up than that. We have had for years a provision in this House providing for the discharge of committees from consideration of bills. That will be reached in an hour for the first time in three or four years, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall feel obliged to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] objects. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make another request for unanimous consent, namely, that I may be permitted to offer an amendment setting aside $300,000 for the distribution of antihog-cholera virus.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request can not now be entertained. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER rose.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before he begins?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I wanted to ask the gentleman one question, because of an amendment which the committee reports. Is dourine known to any other animal except the horse?

Mr. LEVER. Not that I know of.

Mr. COOPER. I notice in the title of that pamphlet the words "dourine of horses." But if the amendment is adopted as the gentleman proposes it will read "hog cholera and dourine." Would not that mean two diseases of hogs without a further limitation?

Mr. LEVER. No. So far as is known, dourine is known only among horses.

I wish to address myself briefly, for my time is quite limited, to the three propositions involved in this bill.

Hog cholera was introduced, it is said, into this country in 1833, and has been prevalent more or less ever since. The Department of Agriculture estimates an annual loss of from fifty to one hundred million dollars a year—a conservative estimate would be about $70,000,000 a year—from this disease among one of our most important meat-producing animals. It has been shown, and in my mind the figures are entirely too low, that during last year more than 2,245,000 hogs died of this fatal disease. The disease has been increasing most rapidly throughout the entire country for the past four or five years, as is evidenced by information which has been received through the Federal Bureau of Statistics, Federal meat inspectors, and other agencies within the State. It would be hard to estimate the loss which this country has suffered from this scourge, and it seems to me that the time has come when it is the duty of Federal, State, and local agencies to arouse themselves to the situation.

We must not overlook the fact that pork or hog meat of some description forms the basis of the everyday meal of a large proportion of our population. Beef and mutton are important factors in our food supply, but not nearly so much as is the meat of the hog. This disease affects not only the man who raises hogs, but as vitally affects the man of the city who eats hog meat. Every decided decrease in the number of hogs in the country must of necessity show itself in a corresponding increase in the price of bacon and other meats of the hog, as well as the decided increase in the price of beef and mutton. The bill on its face may not impress one with its great importance, but anyone familiar with the facts knows that it presents a very large economic problem. Recent statistics issued by the Department of Agriculture indicate a total shortage of meat-producing animals—cattle, sheep, and swine—of nearly 20,000,000 since the census of 1910. This means that there has been a loss of nearly 9 beef cattle, 7 sheep, and over 3 hogs for each 100 of the total estimated population of the United States at this time. To put it another way, population has been steadily increasing while meat-producing animals have been steadily decreasing in number; or to put it still another way, the number of mouths to be fed are increasing out of proportion to the supply of meat products with which to feed them. The meat question is becoming acute, and unless present tendencies are checked by vigorous action we shall soon have to learn to produce more meat or eat less of it. The time is rapidly approaching when only the more well to do of our people can afford to eat meat at all. With such facts before us, can anyone doubt what his duty in the premises can be? I think not. We must make a fight against this disease which so seriously threatens one of the chief sources of our meat supply.

The last Agriculture appropriation bill carried the sum of $75,000 for demonstrating the best method of preventing and eradicating hog cholera. Under this appropriation work was carried on experimentally in four distinct areas in the great hog-producing belt of the country—Missouri, Iowa, Indiana, and Nebraska—and the results obtained by the department from these experiments indicate in the strongest manner the possibility, yes, the probability, of the ultimate eradication of this disease in these areas. The committee reporting this bill believes, as I believe, that with the proper cooperative efforts of the States, local communities, and the Federal Government, and with a reasonable expenditure of money hog cholera can be reduced, controlled, and ultimately eradicated within a reasonable time. I desire to insert at this point a statement of Dr. M. Dorset, in charge of this work for the Department of Agriculture, before the House Committee on Agriculture, as follows:

Dr. DORSET. I have some figures made up from the results of the work this summer. Of hogs actually sick we lost 25 per cent. Of well hogs in diseased herds 2.8 per cent died, and of hogs in exposed herds only about 0.7 per cent died. In an infected herd there are always a certain proportion of hogs that are well when the inspector gets there. The inspectors examine the hogs and take the temperature of all hogs in the herd, and thus separate the sick from the well.

First, Dallas County, Iowa: In 1911 they raised 77,274 hogs; they lost 11,337; percentage of loss, 12.7.

In 1912 Dallas County raised 84,618 hogs and lost 19,821; percentage of loss, 18.9.

In 1913 Dallas County raised 118,550 hogs and lost 9,182; percentage of loss, 7.1. Now, with regard to the losses in Dallas County in 1913, 5,289 out of 9,182 died before the 1st of July, before our men went there at all, whereas 3,893 have died since the 1st of July.

In 1912 they raised 59,661 and lost 20,550; percentage of loss, 25.6.

In 1913 they raised 59,792 and lost 10,376; per cent of loss, 14.7.

Now, again, in Pettis County, of the 10,376 hogs that died in 1913, 9,035 died before the 1st of July. Our inspector did not go into that county until the 1st of August. I think a loss of only 1,341 hogs since the 1st of July in that county is a very gratifying showing, for there is every indication that that county would have lost at least three times as many hogs as it did if our men had not gone in there.

Mr. SLOAN. Are those later months bad months in that respect?

Dr. DORSET. After the 1st of July is when most of the hogs are lost.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not the fact, too, that the losses from hog cholera this year have been nearly twice what they have been heretofore—or a great deal larger, at least?

Dr. DORSET. No; it is not my judgment that hog cholera is worse this year than ever before. I think we merely hear more of it; the farmer reports it; he has learned there is something which will prevent it.

Now, as to Montgomery County, Ind.: Hogs raised in 1911, 73,920; losses, 20,414; per cent of loss, 21.6. In 1912, hogs raised, 74,554; losses, 23,983; per cent of loss, 24.3. In 1913, hogs raised, 75,974; lost, 5,098; per cent of loss, 6.2.

In every county we find that in 1913 there has been less loss from hog cholera than in either of the two years preceding. We also find that in some of the counties where the losses were the largest in 1913 most of the loss occurred before our men went into the county.

I have figures showing exactly the results in the case of herds that were treated. These losses that I have reported here are of all hogs that died in the county. When our inspectors went in Montgomery County the 1st of July there were 65 outbreaks in the county. In order to carry out the plan we had mapped out, to treat the sick herds and inoculate herds surrounding, we would have had to treat immediately after the 1st of July not less than 300 herds in that one county. We had not the hog-cholera serum to do that; we had only a little experimental plant, and that plant had to be enlarged after the 1st of July, so that the disease was getting along and a good many hogs were lost in herds that it was not possible for us to treat.

I desire also to insert a further statement made by officials of the Department of Agriculture before the House committee, showing in a striking manner the results of its experimental work in these areas:

These facts indicate to my mind that the enormous annual losses which the people of this country suffer because of this disease can be reduced to a mere minimum.

The Department of Agriculture strongly urged the passage of this bill before the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture. It is important that Members should know how the $500,000 provided for hog cholera is likely to be expended by the department. In a letter addressed to me on February 5, 1914, B. T. Galloway, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, writes:

The department recommends that there be made an urgent appropriation of $500,000 to be immediately available for the purpose of—

(a) Demonstrating the practicability of eradicating hog cholera from selected sections of the country;

(b) Supervision of private serum plants, so as to protect farmers against the use of spurious and dangerous serums; and

(c) Demonstrational and educational work among farmers in cooperation with the States, in order to bring about a better understanding of the disease and the approved methods of combating it.

Under the work of demonstrating the practicability of eradicating hog cholera from a given area the department will extend its work to 15 counties, selected with regard for climatic and other peculiar environments, and will expend $300,000 along these lines. It is important that we should demonstrate, if possible, the fact that we can eliminate hog cholera, for nothing less than this will save us from a constant recurrence of the disease with its accompanying losses. Fifty thousand dollars of this amount is to be used in placing Federal inspectors in private serum plants to protect the farmer against the use of spurious, dangerous, and impotent serum. The use of a dangerous serum can easily start an outbreak of cholera in a community, and the farmer has been the victim of heavy frauds in the kinds of serum sold to him. There are between 75 and 100 of these plants and this amount is necessary to provide a thorough inspection of them. For demonstrational and educational work, in demonstrating to the farmer the efficacy of the preventive in the form of serum and virus and in teaching him to know that the disease can be controlled and the methods by which this can be done, $150,000 will be used. These are the lines of work which the department has in mind and the amount which will be expended for each.

The remaining $100,000 is to be used in an effort to stamp out dourine, a malignant and communicable disease of horses. Testimony before the Committee on Agriculture is to the effect that 10 per cent of range horses is affected by this disease, which threatens not only the existence of the horse industry in the Northwestern States, but threatens to spread into every State in the Union. I wish to insert in this connection a statement of W. F. Crewe, State veterinarian of the State of North Dakota:

STATEMENT OF W. F. CREWE, STATE VETERINARIAN OF NORTH DAKOTA.

The statistics of this disease, as occurring in North Dakota, are somewhat limited, but are sufficient to indicate to us that it would require considerable work and investigation in order to eradicate the disease.

The disease has been found in the following counties: Dunn, Williams, McKenzie, Billings, Bowman, Morton, and Emmons.

As has been previously stated, the work on dourine is simply preliminary. We found 27 stallions infected out of 203 examined; 77 mares infected out of 215 examined.

On the Standing Rock Reservation 165 animals have been destroyed on account of being infected with dourine. The inspection on the reservation was not complete, and it is anticipated that there are still quite a number of animals there that are diseased. We expect to cover this territory during the coming season.

The amount of work done has been much larger in the State of Montana, and, of course, it has been determined that the disease exists to a great extent in that State. I have wired to Dr. Butler, the State veterinarian of Montana, to forward you his statistics.

On account of the insidious nature of this disease animals may be used for work for quite a period, and it makes it quite a difficult proposition to condemn the animals unless there is some provision made for indemnifying the owners for the loss when the animals are destroyed. It is generally considered that this is the only method to properly eradicate the disease.

Proper supervision could not be kept over the large number of animals that may be quarantined, and they would be changing hands, and in this way the disease would continue to spread.

I might further state that we have found the disease quite extensive in one particular herd, which comprises some 600 mares. We found all the stallions, 6 in number, affected with dourine, and reports indicate that 6 stallions have died from the disease during the past two years. Out of the limited number of mares we have tested of this herd we have found over 50 per cent diseased, and we must presume that this will be the condition found when the balance of the herd has been tested.

His statement shows the great seriousness of this situation and the absolute necessity for prompt action in regard thereto. Gentlemen from the States in which this disease is most prevalent will go more into detail as to the necessity for this appropriation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to put into operation methods by which the meat supply of the country may be conserved and the destruction of the horse industry prevented.

How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed six minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, in the 20 minutes given each side for debate under the rule, of course, time granted will not permit full discussion of this all-important subject, but the best that can be done under the circumstances is to simply submit a brief statement. The proposed bill carries an appropriation of $500,000, and if the plan submitted by Dr. Galloway, the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, is carried out $50,000 will be available for the inspection of the serum plants, $150,000 for education and demonstration, and $300,000 for the eradication of hog choera, the eradication to be confined to 15 or possibly 20 counties.

Dr. Galloway's statement is that the existing serum plant is adequate to supply the department with the serum necessary to carry on its work in 15 counties. Dr. Melvin and Dr. Dorset, in charge of the work, testified before the committee that the existing serum plant proved inadequate to supply three counties with serum for department use last year; that the existing serum plant is a small affair, half the size of the committee room and a few portable tin houses; that the department had to purchase serum in Missouri for its use in one of the three counties selected for the purpose of eradicating hog cholera; that if a hundred thousand dollars be appropriated for a laboratory, then a couple of hundred thousand could be used in addition thereto; that the department should not be expected to use serum prepared outside of the department; that the serum is the only remedy known to the department; that the serum now on the market is not up to requirements; and that not even the States can be trusted in supplying potent serum. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has just stated that the serum now on the market or at least much of it is of the bogus kind and does not come up to the standard.

Whose statement will we accept—Dr. Galloway's, who contends that the existing plant is adequate, or the statement of those in charge of the work? All are agreed that much of the serum manufactured and sold is of the spurious and bogus kind. Now, gentlemen, is it wise to appropriate $500,000 for the eradication of hog cholera without providing for the production and distribution of the remedy prescribed, it being the only remedy known? If it is the only remedy known, and if potent serum can not be obtained from other sources, and if potent serum is essential in preventing and curing the disease, under the circumstances I believe the bill should be amended so as to set aside at least $300,000 for the purchase, production, and distribution of the serum. There can be no question—that is, if the serum has any merit whatsoever—but that the Government in supplying the unfortunate hog raiser with potent serum at its approximate cost will bring better results than in its going into 15 or 20 counties of the 2,500 counties in the United States and applying questionable serum; and even if the 15-county plan is adopted under existing circumstances, the Government ought to be provided with adequate facilities to at least supply itself with potent serum. There can be no justice in the Government organizing 15 counties, purchasing and applying serum characterized as spurious and bogus, or the kind that is sure to kill. That seems unjust, at least to those in the 15 counties, who might object to its use.

If the plan proposed is carried out, of course all the people in the 15 counties must submit their hogs to the treatment in order that the disease may be eradicated in that given area; hence if the serum used kills instead of curing the hog, unless the Government reimburses the owner for his loss an injustice is done to him. Hence, no matter what plan is pursued, potent serum should be provided for, but if the serum is of value, why give it away? Why force it onto 15 counties? Why not make it available for the use of all hog raisers? My intention was to offer the following amendment:

Strike out the period after the word "thereunder," line 8, page 2, and insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That $300,000 of the sum appropriated shall be set aside and used for the purchase and production of antihog-cholera serum, to be sold and distributed at its approximate cost."

But now that the bill was brought up under suspension of the rules and is not subject to amendment, and a request for unanimous consent to offer the amendment has been refused, it can not be considered at this time. Yet I wish to protest against the proposed plan, as, in my opinion, the serum can be made available only through the Federal Government.

I can not conceive that any private enterprise will invest its money to produce a serum up to the standard, and sell it in competition with States which are subsidized to the extent of $100,000, and sell it at cost. The testimony before the committee is that Ohio has a new plant costing $100,000; that it will be able to supply about one-fifth of the demand in the State. The others will have to go without.

The State of Iowa, the greatest hog-raising State in the Union, with a Government plant in the State and with a plant supported by the State, was unable to supply the demand, and $33,000,000 worth of hogs died last year of hog cholera in the State. In view of the inadequate supply of serum, the uncertainty of its future supply, and the harm done by the use of spurious serum, I believe it would be wise to make a part of this appropriation available, and to direct the Secretary to set aside and use the sum designated for the production of serum, at least for the Government's own use. I would go further than that and supply States unable to supply their own people having use for the serum.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman explain to us what is the horse disease called dourine, and what is the necessity for the appropriation relative to that?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN], who is more familiar with it than I am.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I never heard of it until to-day. We have none of it in our State.

Mr. HAUGEN. Availing myself of the privilege granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to call attention to the questions raised. First, the one raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHEELEY]. How is the money to be expended? The bill provides for $500,000 to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera. That not less than $50,000 of said sum shall be available for inspection in serum plants; or, in other words, it is left to the discretion of the Secretary how the $450,000 for investigation, treatment, and eradication shall be expended. If the Secretary sees fit, he can expend all of it for serum, sending men in the field, for railroad fare, or for various other items that may properly come in under the clause. If the expenditure of $450,000 is left to the Secretary, then I take it that it is fair to accept of the statement made by his representatives as to what is to be done with it. First, is the serum to be furnished by the Government? The answer is, "Yes." Dr. Galloway, Acting Secretary, presents a plan identical with one pursued last year; that is, to organize in 15 or 20 counties with the view of eradicating hog cholera in these counties. Dr. Dorset states, see page 25:

Mr. HOWELL. In the counties where you have done the work, has the department borne all the expense?
Dr. DORSET. It has borne all the expense of its own men and of the serum used.
Mr. HOWELL. You have never made any charge to the farmers for the serum used?
Dr. DORSET. It was all used free of charge.
Mr. LEE. Then, the department furnished the serum?
Dr. DORSET. Used in its work; yes.
Mr. LEE. You do that now?
Dr. DORSET. We have been doing it all the time.
The CHAIRMAN. How long have you had this serum plant at Ames, Iowa?
Dr. DORSET. Nearly 10 years. That is an experimental station for the study of hog cholera. It was at that station that we worked.

I take it from this that there can be no mistake as to the practice pursued in the past; as to the future, we have Dr. Galloway's statement on page 9:

Mr. HAUGEN. Now, you said the serum should be furnished by the State. That is the recommendation you made?
Dr. GALLOWAY. Only for part of this work.
Mr. HAUGEN. We are talking now about the serum.
Dr. GALLOWAY. That is what I am talking about, too.
Mr. HAUGEN. You say that should be furnished by the States?
Dr. GALLOWAY. That is where the work is to be demonstrational, out among the people, and not involved in this county eradication work.

Dr. Galloway's statement clearly points out that the serum for demonstrational work for the 15 or 20 counties to be selected is to be furnished by the Government free of charge. That $300,000 is to be set aside for demonstration in the direction of eradicating hog cholera from a definite area. Hence we have Dr. Galloway's statement that the serum is to be furnished free for its use in the 15 or 20 counties to be selected. The chairman of the committee, Mr. LEVER, states that not one dollar of this money is to be used in the manufacture and general distribution of hog-cholera serum; that the Government will use some of the appropriation in continuing the operation of the plant at Ames and use the serum manufactured there only in its demonstrational work in the field. Hence it is clear that all the serum to be manufactured by the Government is to be used in the 15 or 20 counties, and if the supply is found inadequate, I take it that the department will continue to purchase serum and supply all the counties selected with serum free of charge. As to the supply, Dr. Galloway's contention is that the capacity of the existing plant is sufficient to supply the department with serum for its use in 15 counties. Dr. Melvin's and Dr. Dorset's statement is that its capacity is very limited and proved inadequate to supply the required amount of serum for use in three counties, and that the department was obliged to purchase serum in Missouri for use in one of the three counties where the work was carried on last year; if so, the Government will be able to manufacture enough serum to supply 2 of the 15 or 20 counties and will have to purchase for use in the other counties a serum characterized by the department and chairman of the committee as spurious and bogus, the question is, Which 2 of the 15 or 20 counties will be favored with the Government-made potent serum and which of the 15 or 20 counties will be supplied with the spurious and bogus serum, sure to kill, or will the Government serum, classed as potent serum, guaranteed to cure, and the spurious and bogus serum, which it is admitted will kill, be evenly divided between these 15 counties?

Are counties to be selected, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHEELEY], in response to pull? If so, it is fair to assume that counties with the strongest pull will be supplied with the pure Government-made serum, and doses will be administered according to the strength of the strings pulled by the hog raiser. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the department will have the last say, and will determine how the money shall be spent. Its plan is to spend $300,000 in 15 or 20 counties for serum and expenses in applying it on hogs in that given area, and 2,485 counties are to go without Federal aid, as not a dollar is to be set aside for the distribution of serum outside of the 15 counties or a serum plant, as suggested by Dr. Melvin, except in case more than 15 counties are selected, and inasmuch as the treatment and application is to be free of charge, undoubtedly pressure will be brought to bear for free serum in more than 15 counties; but as the $75,000 appropriated last year proved inadequate to supply 3 counties, the free distribution of serum and veterinary service to apply it can not be extended beyond 15 counties, as only $300,000 is to be used, and instead of increasing the number the number may have to be reduced, possibly to half that number. But it matters not if the work should be extended to 10 or 15 counties; the plan is unjust in its discrimination and favoritism; it is impracticable, because it reaches only a few and leaves out many. Dr. Dorset's statement is that the serum costs a good deal of money and that the repeated treatment of hogs every year by the Government should be discontinued. The Government has been demonstrating for years. Last year Congress appropriated $75,000, and directed the department to demonstrate.

The department reports that it manufactured and purchased serum and gave it away in three counties and sent inspectors into another, and reports, among other things, 9,182, or 7.1 per cent, of the hogs died in Dallas County. The experiment station reports 15,954, or 17 per cent, of the hogs died in Dallas County, and that where the Government-made serum was used and where, according to the department's report, 1,998 out of 5,686 infected hogs were treated. Upon that showing it is proposed to appropriate $50,000 for the inspection of serum plants, not in inspecting State plants or plants manufacturing or selling their product only within the State, including those which Dr. Melvin states can not be trusted. The inspection is to be extended to, and under the Constitution must be limited to, those in interstate commerce. For nearly a year we have had a law upon our statute books to regulate the production, sale, shipment, and importation of the serum. The department now has, and has had since March 4, 1913, the power to inspect and regulate. It declares no further legislation is required to regulate its production and distribution, as under the law the Secretary is authorized to make rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the production, sale, and shipment of this spurious and bogus serum, to issue and revoke licenses, to issue permits for its importation, to inspect such establishments and such products, and that any of its employees may, during the day or night time, enter and inspect any establishments where serum is made.

The act provides for a maximum fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for one year. Hence all the power that can be given the department by law was given a year ago. Twenty-five thousand dollars was given the department for the enforcement of the law for the current year, yet it is claimed that the serum now on the market is not up to the standard; hence, unless the States which alone have power to regulate plants not engaged in interstate commerce pass laws to prevent the manufacture and sale of spurious serum, the traffic will go on. In that respect the Government has gone as far as it can go and has done its duty. In addition to the $50,000, $300,000 is to be appropriated for serum and application thereof; $150,000 for education purposes, expenses in Washington and elsewhere; and not a dollar to be used for the construction and equipment of a serum plant or to supply the people outside of the chosen few with potent serum.

As to the efficacy of the serum, the department claims to have given it a thorough test and that it has been found to be a fairly sure remedy and an absolute preventive. I know of a number of instances where it has been used and has brought good results. The firm of Thompto & Heiney, of my home city, last year inoculated some 800 hogs exposed to the cholera, and, I believe, many infected with the disease, at first and at times, with excellent results, but at times without results, believed to be due to spurious serum. The representation made by the department and a number who have given the serum a thorough test has led me to believe that it has merit and that it is of value, not so much as a preventive, but when used immediately after the herd becomes infected with hog cholera, for if the serum is used on the infected hog, which in all probability is doomed to die if not treated, and it kills the hog, there is practically no loss outside of the expense of treating the hog. On the other hand, if the well hog, not in immediate danger of hog cholera, is inoculated and dies, then not only the expense of the treatment but the loss of the hog also is incurred. While many believe in the remedy, yet there are many who contend that it is harmful; that it has killed more hogs than it has cured. I have received protests criticizing Congress and the department, and I have been told that other Members have received similar communications, and in order that the facts on both sides of the question may be shown, I deem it fair to quote in part from at least one of them. Recently I received a letter from Dr. E. F. Lowry, vice president Hawkeye Progressive Veterinary Medical Association of Iowa, Ottumwa, Iowa, under date of February 9, 1914. I am not personally acquainted with Dr. Lowry, but I have inquired of Members who are personally acquainted with him, and have been told that he is a man of good standing and that his statement can be relied upon; besides, the position he holds as vice president of the association would indicate that he is a man of responsibility. Mr. Lowry states in his letter:

OTTUMWA, IOWA, February 9, 1914.

Hon. Representative HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see the appropriation matter for fighting hog sickness is up for consideration now, so I thought I might be able to cast a little light upon the subject. You will see that I, with a lot of my patrons and friends, are interested. I am interested from a professional standpoint—a breeder myself—and for a lot of my friends and for breeders who have been stung by this serum mistake. It is a failure as a preventive and a cure. Seven years has proved that it neither prevents nor cures the disease, while, on the other hand, it has killed thousands of well hogs and spread disease into thousands of well herds and caused unnecessary expense and loss. It will continue to do so as long as it is used.

* * * * * * *

Every dollar that Congress appropriates to further the manufacture and use of serum is only pouring oil upon the burning fire and helping a lot of fellows who are taking advantage of the conditions to graft off the unfortunate hog men.

Stop the use of serum and spend $100,000 one year in this way, and make a lot of political soft-job grafters keep their mouths shut for one year and quit sending in false reports of how many thousand hogs serum has saved. Then we will stop the whole trouble. But as long as Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture will be dictated to and listen to these Bureau of Animal Industry serum boosters and agriculture college boosters and veterinary college boosters, who all have an ax to grind, just that long hog sickness will continue to spread and rage and cause loss. I think seven years has been long enough to aid these jobbers and grafters in their fat jobs.

Reports for 1913 ought to settle the serum question forever. What good will Government inspection do? It won't make hog-cholera serum cure four diseases that are killing the hogs. It doesn't pay the men whose well hogs it kills when it is used upon them to prevent sickness, and I have the records to show that thousands of hogs were killed the last two years that way. If you are going to boost the serum business by a big appropriation, then make the law such that the veterinary who uses the serum and the people who make it shall be held equally responsible for losses when they occur from use of serum upon well hogs as a preventive and it kills them. I herewith send you a small list of such losses. This is only a drop in the bucket to others which I have on hand. The State of Nebraska has just recently settled a loss of this kind. Several suits of this kind are pending in Iowa, Nebraska, and Missouri courts, and hundreds more ought to be filed. If your Appropriations Committee will let me come before them, or the whole Congress for that matter, for an hour, I will give you facts and figures of the viciousness of this mistake and graft that the others will never tell you about. You ought to get at the facts from both sides. I know you are getting figures from the serum boosters all the time as to what wonderful things serum has done; but do they ever tell you of the havoc it has played in hundreds of well herds? Not on your life. But I can tell you of hundreds of them if you will let me come down there, and give you names and numbers of such losses. Just put the lid on the use of serum for one year and see what the result will be. You can't make it any worse.

Hoping you will let your conscience guide you aright in this matter, and that you will not appropriate any more money to help this serum graft unless you fix the law so responsibility for losses can be placed upon the veterinary and serum company for them, then I will say go to it, for I know then in a short time the graft serum business will receive a deathblow.

Yours, for the truth and right,

E. F. LOWRY.

In the letter were a number of lists inclosed giving the names of parties who suffered loss through the use of the serum, also a copy of what is purported to be the Canadian law:

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1913.
PRESENT: HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE GOVEROR GENERAL. IN COUNCIL.

Whereas it is deemed advisable and in the public interest that the importation, manufacture, or sale of hog-cholera serum and virus be prohibited in the Dominion of Canada:

Therefore His Royal Highness the Governor General, in council, in virtue of the provisions of clause (1) of section 28 of chapter 75, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, is pleased to order as follows:

The quarantine regulations established by order in council of the 30th of November, 1909, as amended by adding the following section thereto:

"SEC. 88½. The use of hog-cholera serum or virus being considered a source of danger, the importation, manufacture, sale, or use of such serum or virus is prohibited."

F. K. BENNETTE,
Assistant Clerk of the Privy Council.

The Honorable the MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.

I take it that if Canada found it necessary to prohibit its importation, manufacture, sale, and use, the department has been misinformed as to Canada having eradicated hog cholera by use of the serum, as Dr. Melvin stated to the subcommittee February 4, printed on page 12, as follows:

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. Hog cholera came here, as I understand, in 1833. They had it a good many years before that in England, and they had been experimenting over there

Dr. MELVIN. Their method was different. The Canadians claim to have eradicated it from Canada, and have had it eradicated for some two or three years now. It was introduced originally, they claim, from the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did it take them to eradicate it in Canada? Do you know?

Dr. MELVIN. I do not know exactly, but several years. But they have very few hogs, comparatively, in Canada.

As to Dr. Lowry's letter, it explains itself, and no comment is necessary. In conclusion, I will say that I neither vouch for the efficacy of the serum nor do I wish to be understood as criticizing it. I have pointed out contentions both supporting and protesting against the use of the serum, so that the RECORD may show the facts that the serum is the only cure known and the only remedy proposed; that potent serum is not available; that, if money is appropriated for the eradication of hog cholera, then the remedy prescribed should be made available by the Government by providing for a potent serum, not to be given away or to be forced on anyone, as it is proposed to do, but to prepare and distribute it; hence it will be made available not only to a few, as under the proposed plan, but to many who desire it, and if of value, not only a few hogs but many will be saved.

Under leave granted to print, I append to my remarks my views as printed in the report on the bill:

VIEWS OF MR. HAUGEN.

In view of the inadequate supply of potent antihog-cholera serum, the lack of facilities for the production of the serum, the urgent recommendation made by Dr. Melvin and Dr. Dorset, in charge of the work for better facilities, and the importance of the work, it would seem advisable to set aside a part of the proposed appropriation for the production, sale, and distribution of the serum. Attention is called to Dr. Melvin's statement, printed on page 27, Hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives, December 9 and 10:

"Dr. MELVIN. Mr. Chairman, may I make a statement?

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

"Dr. MELVIN. Two bills have been introduced in the Senate for very large amounts on this work. Now, if any such sums as those are finally appropriated, it will be necessary for us to have very much larger laboratory facilities than we now have, because the small equipment we now have is only sufficient to take care of an appropriation of this size. Then, of course, we shall have to increase the size of our serum plant in proportion to the amount of money that is finally appropriated for this work."

"Mr. HOWELL. Is there not still some difference of opinion among those who know, or claim to know, about the efficacy of your treatment?

"Dr. MELVIN. I do not think there is any doubt among those who know, Mr. Howell; it is on the part of those who do not know. [Laughter.]

"Mr. HOWELL. But there is more or less dispute about it, is there not?

"Dr. MELVIN. I do not think there is. There are other organizations. For instance, Ohio has a very complete organization; they have a laboratory that they are just beginning to use, costing $100,000 to build. Next year they will handle a great part of the State—not all of it, because it would take, in my opinion, four or five such laboratories to produce serum sufficient for the entire State of Ohio. Their experiences have been right along the line of ours—that where they made proper serum they could control the disease.

"Mr. HAWLEY. Do the State laboratories make a good serum? What is your experience in regard to that?

"Dr. MELVIN. We have only their data to go on. We have not used it ourselves, except in the case of Missouri, where we have used their serum very satisfactorily.

"Mr. HAWLEY. It is not difficult for a skilled operator to make, is it?

"Dr. MELVIN. No; but a man must have training along that line; and he must know what proper sanitation is in order to make a serum that will not be infected from outside sources.

"Mr. MAGUIRE. You are confident that this is an absolute preventive, are you?

"Dr. MELVIN. Yes, sir; I am.

"Mr. CANDLER. You said a moment ago that you did not sell any; hence, the State has to manufacture it itself in order to get it?

"Dr. MELVIN. The State or private manufacturers. There are a good many private manufacturers.

"Mr. CANDLER. The United States does not manufacture enough to divide up even with the States?

"Mr. HAUGEN. How many States are manufacturing?

"Dr. GALLOWAY. Thirty.

"Dr. MELVIN. About 30."

Page 30:

"Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, what I would like to get is a statement from Dr. Melvin, giving his opinion whether this appropriation should be increased, and if so, to what extent, in order to be used advantageously."

"Dr. MELVIN. I think it would be highly advantageous to the country to have it increased.

"Mr. HAUGEN. To what extent? I think we all appreciate that you have more knowledge of this situation than probably any Member of Congress, and I would like to know about what you think as to the extent to which it could be carried out advantageously.

"Dr. MELVIN. One idea I had in mind was that, if the department is expected to continue this work for any considerable time, an appropriation sufficient to put up a good up-to-date laboratory for the preparation of serum, and also for the further study of the disease, should be made. We have not learned all about the disease that we think may be learned; and, if we had a proper permanent equipment of this sort, it would be highly desirable. The equipment would cost at least $100,000. Then we would be prepared to take up work in a number of States—probably 20. This would require an outlay of probably $400,000 or $500,000. As it is, our original plant was a very small affair, put up of matched boards. The floor space was not half the size of this room. To provide for this work we bought some of these portable tin houses, put them up, and made them into laboratories. We are doing efficient work there, but there is nothing permanent to it; and it is not even on our own ground, but on leased ground. We had to put up temporary buildings; and, if we are to continue in this work for ten or a dozen years, which seems probable, I think we should first start with a proper equipment and be prepared to show these manufacturers, and the State people as well, what, in our opinion, is a proper laboratory.

"Mr. HOWELL. If you had such a laboratory as that, your idea would not be to make serum enough to supply it for anything except your own work?

"Dr. MELVIN. I do not think we would; no, sir. I do not think we could supply much outside of what we would need in the several States, because it is a tremendous proposition.

"Mr. HOWELL. You said 'in the several States.' Do you mean for your own work in the several States?

"Dr. MELVIN. Yes.

"Mr. REILLY. Dr. Melvin, are not several of the State universities and agricultural schools preparing to furnish serum for their own States?

"Dr. MELVIN. Yes, sir; some of them.

"Mr. REILLY. Is it not probable that all of them, after this is demonstrated, will do that?

"Dr. MELVIN. They will in a limited way, but I do not think they will be prepared so that all hog raisers can get it from them.

"Mr. HAUGEN. What amount would you suggest, then, for the next year's appropriation?

"Dr. MELVIN. It is a big problem; it would take probably half a million dollars to do it properly, in an extended way.

"Mr. TAYLOR. Why could you not take $100,000 to perfect your plant, etc., and $75,000 to keep your men that you now have? Why would not that cover it?

"Dr. MELVIN. That would hardly be in proportion. I think if we had a plant for $100,000, the other ought to be larger—a couple of hundred thousand dollars."

Dr. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, who has probably given the subject of eradicating hog cholera more thought and consideration than any other person, clearly points out the necessity of the production of and providing for a supply of the serum, at least enough to supply the department in carrying on its investigation and demonstration. He states that if the $75,000 appropriation is increased it will be necessary for the department to have much greater laboratory facilities, because the little equipment which it now has is sufficient to take care of the $75,000 appropriation only; that its plant is very small, put up of matched boards, the floor space not half the size of the committee room; that portable tin houses were bought and made into laboratories; that the State of Ohio has recently erected a laboratory costing $100,000, and that hereafter the State will be able to handle a great part of that State, but not all, for in his opinion four or five such laboratories would be required to produce serum sufficient for the entire State. He states that the department has been compelled to purchase serum for its own use and that an appropriation should be made sufficient to put up an up-to-date laboratory for the preparation of the serum. That with equipment costing at least $100,000 it would be prepared to take up work in probably 20 States, or, in other words, in one county of each of the 20 States, or 20 counties out of 2,500 counties in the United States, and that the proposed plan would require an outlay of probably $400,000 or $500,000. Also, that if he had a plant for $100,000 he could use a couple of hundred thousand dollars.

He further states, page 32:

"Dr. MELVIN. I do not think we ought to be expected to use serum except that which we feel fully satisfied is all right.

"Mr. HAUGEN. But you have a way of testing it, have you not?

"Dr. MELVIN. Well, it has to be tested in batches.

"Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

"Dr. MELVIN. And that requires a good deal of work.

"Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not safe to assume that the States will furnish a serum that is properly made?

"Dr. MELVIN. Most of them would. I would be afraid to trust all of them."

I take it that no one will question the authority. If so, and if it is the purpose of Congress to aid the unfortunate hog raiser in saving his cholera hog, and to ultimately eradicate hog cholera, I take it that it will follow the advice of those with experience and expert knowledge in charge of the work. Dr. Melvin has made it plain that for every $300,000 appropriated for this purpose $100,000 should be appropriated for laboratory facilities. If his conclusions are well founded, Congress should set aside a couple of hundred thousand dollars for laboratory facilities out of the $500,000 carried in the proposed bill in order to enable the department to supply itself with the serum required. In support of Dr. Melvin's contention I quote Dr. Dorset, whom the bureau has placed in charge of the work:

"When our inspectors went in Montgomery County the 1st of July there were 65 outbreaks in the county. In order to carry out the plan we had mapped out, to treat the sick herds and inoculate herds surrounding, we would have had to treat immediately after the 1st of July not less than 300 herds in that one county. We had not the hog cholera serum to do that; we had only a little experimental plant, and that plant had to be enlarged after the 1st of July, so that the disease was getting along and a good many hogs were lost in herds that it was not possible for us to treat.

"The CHAIRMAN. Where is your plant located?

"Dr. DORSET. We have a small plant near Ames, Iowa. It has been there for nearly 10 years.

"Mr. HOWELL. Have you used only your own serum?"

"Dr. DORSET. No. We have used in Dallas and Montgomery Counties serum which we have made. In Missouri we have used a serum made by the University of Missouri, because we were unable to make enough serum to take care of Pettis County, as we found after the work was started.

"Mr. HOWELL. Do you know anything of the serum that is on the market, or have you used any?

"Dr. DORSET. Well, sir, I believe that the product on the market is variable in quality. Some of it is probably good and some of it is probably impotent.

"Mr. MAGUIRE. It is all made from your formula, is it not?

"Dr. DORSET. It is supposed to be, but I do not think it always is."

Also Dr. Dorset's statement as to its applicacy, page 23:

"The CHAIRMAN. Will you please tell the committee, Dr. Dorset, what you have accomplished in the year's work?

"Dr. DORSET Mr Chairman, we have only been at work for five months, and I feel that the work is not finished; that we have simply been organizing the territory. However, I did have our men take some statistics in these counties, and they have recently sent in their figures. The figures for 1913 are estimates, because the year has not yet ended, of course. But I wanted to indicate to the committee what had been accomplished, if I could. Shall I read them, Mr. Chairman?

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

"Dr. DORSET. First, Dallas County, Iowa: In 1911, they raised 77,274 hogs; they lost 11,337; percentage of loss, 12.7.

"Mr. HAWLEY. And are you sure that every hog was lost by hog cholera?"

Page 24:

"Dr. DORSET. No, sir; I am not sure. We have been obliged to take the total loss.

"Mr. HAWLEY. Presuming it was due to hog cholera?

"Dr. DORSET. Yes; we credited it all to hog cholera. In 1912 Dallas County raised 84,618 hogs and lost 19,821; percentage of loss, 18.9.

"In 1913, that is this year, Dallas County raised 118,550 hogs and lost 9,182; percentage of loss, 7.1. Now, with regard to the losses in Dallas County in 1913, 5,289 out of 9,182 died before the 1st of July, before our men went there at all, whereas 3,893 have died since the 1st of July.

"In 1913 they raised 59,792 and lost 10,376; percentage of loss, 14.

"Now, again, in Pettis County, of the 10,376 hogs that died in 1913, 9,035 died before the 1st of July. Our inspector did not go into that county until the 1st of August. I think a loss of only 1,341 hogs since that 1st of July in that county is a very gratifying showing, for there is every indication that that county would have lost at least three imes as many hogs as it did if our men had not gone in there."

If the testimony produced is to be accepted, if States or private concerns are not producing an adequate supply, if not even the States can be trusted in producing a potent serum, if spurious serum such as is being produced proves ineffective, and if potent serum can not be obtained even by the department to carry on the proposed investigations and demonstrations, much less by the hundreds of thousands of farmers suffering a loss annually from fifty to a hundred million dollars, there can be no question but that Congress should heed the suggestion—that is, to provide for adequate laboratory facilities to enable the department to produce the serum, at least to supply enough for its own use. In my opinion, a provision should be inserted in the bill providing that $300,000 of the sum so appropriated shall be set aside and used for the production, sale, and distribution, at the approximate cost of production, of antihog-cholera serum and thus enable the department to prepare the serum, not only for its own use but for use of others in preventing and curing the disease.

One objection raised to the manufacture, sale, and distribution of the serum by the Government is that the Government should not engage in business enterprises in competition with private business enterprises. Now that the Government for years has grown, purchased, and distributed in the aggregate millions of dollars' worth of vegetable and flower seeds, plants, and shrubbery, operating the biggest printing plant in the world, operating thousands of postal savings banks, and about to operate 8 or 12 Federal reserve banks, the President having recommended the building of railroads in Alaska, and the House about to pass a bill already passed by the Senate authorizing its construction, and already operating railroads in Panama, and a line of boats between Colon and New York, it would seem that the objection to setting aside a part of a $500,000 appropriation for the production, sale, and distribution of an article to meet an emergency of such importance was not well taken. While I am opposed to Government ownership and operation in general yet, if necessary to meet an emergency such as we are confronted with in this instance, it would seem advisable, as it appears the only course open to bring about results desired. A situation has been created, the department has prescribed the cure, but one that can not be made available except through the States and Federal Government. The testimony is that some 30 States and 75 or 80 private concerns are manufacturing the serum, but not all up to the standard. Not even the States can be trusted.

It is proposed that a more rigid and effective inspection should be provided; if so, it would insure the production of potent serum. I can not believe that a sane business man will invest his capital, manufacture, and sell an article in competition with States subsidized to the extent of $100,000 annually, selling its products at cost. If not, it goes without saying that when the proposed inspection is enforced and the manufacturers are compelled to manufacture serum up to the standard, none whatever will be manufactured by private concerns and the production of the serum will be confined to the States and Federal Government. The testimony is that the State of Ohio, with its hundred-thousand-dollar laboratory, the largest, will be able to take care of about one-fifth of the work in the State, other States with smaller appropriations and less facilities, many without any appropriations or facilities, will, under the conditions, be without aid save, perchance, the State might induce the department to cooperate with it in one of its counties. Applying it to my own State with 99 counties, which, according to reports received and compiled by the agricultural extension department of the Iowa State College, shows that farmers in the 99 counties of Iowa through the ravages of hog cholera during the year 1913 lost 2,827,907 hogs, valued at $28,278,070. Hogs marketed at a sacrifice due to cholera scare, 2,470,493, at a loss of $4,940,986. Loss to cattle feeders due to shortage of hogs, $500,000. A total loss to farmers of $33,720,056. According to this statement, my own county (Worth) lost 20,875, or 46 per cent of the hogs in the county. Another county in the district (Floyd) lost 28,456, or 46 per cent. Cerro Gordo County, 28,662, or 45 per cent. In the 10 counties in my district there were 116,111 hogs lost. In other districts: Sac County, 71,811, or 70 per cent; Story County, 30,616, or 38 per cent; Tama County, 31,608, or 28 per cent; Washington County, 25,302, or 25 per cent; Winnebago County, 18,551, or 44 per cent; Blackhawk County, 30,154, or 28 per cent; Boone County, 28,257, or 43 per cent; Buena Vista County, 60,147, or 66 per cent; Sioux County, 103,765, or 71 per cent.

This, I believe, is sufficient to illustrate what we may expect from the proposed legislation and under the proposed plan by the department. See Dr. Galloway's statement, page 4, hearings before subcommittee, February 4, 1914:

"Dr. GALLOWAY. Yes. I am developing this discussion to the end of eliminating everything on hog cholera from the regular appropriation bill and substituting an emergency measure. To carry out the work of inspection would require, as I indicated, approximately $50,000. That will enable us to put these men in the establishments."

Page 5:

"The CHAIRMAN. Now, Doctor, let me see if I get your idea. First of all you would use $300,000 in the matter of demonstration, to the satisfaction of the department, in the direction of eradicating hog cholera from a definite area?

"Dr. GALLOWAY. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. You would use $50,000 in placing inspectors in serum plants to see that proper serum was being manufactured?

"Dr. GALLOWAY. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. And, in the third place, you would use the balance—$150,000—in educational work among the people in cooperation with the States?

"Dr. GALLOWAY. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. The States furnishing the serum?

"Dr. GALLOWAY. Yes; the States furnishing the serum.

"Mr. LEE. The States or the individuals?

"Dr. GALLOWAY. The States would furnish the serum."

Here we have the plan submitted by Dr. Galloway, the acting Secretary of Agriculture, and as such the highest authority, and of course the plan will be carried out unless specific directions are given. Dr. Galloway states, page 4:

"We have come to the conclusion that we could carry this work on with our existing serum plant in about 15 counties. If it is to be extended in additional counties, then we would of necessity have to enlarge our serum plant, and that would increase the amount to that extent. To do the work we require about $300,000."

On the other hand, Dr. Dorset states, page 20:

"Now, the work of the year has been located in four States—in Montgomery County, Ind.; in Pettis County, Mo.; Dallas County, Iowa; and in Gage and Johnson Counties, Nebr. The work in Nebraska so far has amounted to little except as a preliminary to real work which we hope to begin in the spring. We put one inspector in Nebraska about the 1st of November, I believe, and that is all we have done in Nebraska."

Page 25:

"Dr. DORSET. No. We have used in Dallas and Montgomery Counties serum which we have made. In Missouri we have used a serum made by the University of Missouri, because we were unable to make enough serum to take care of Pettis County, as we found after the work was started."

Dr. Melvin states, page 31:

"As it is, our original plant was a very small affair, put up of matched boards. The floor space was not half the size of this room. To provide for this work we bought some of these portable tin houses, put them up, and made them into laboratories. We are doing efficient work there, but there is nothing permanent to it; and it is not even on our own ground, but on leased ground. We had to put up temporary buildings; and, if we are to continue in this work for 10 or a dozen years, which seems probable, I think we should first start with a proper equipment and be prepared to show these manufacturers, and the State people as well, what, in our opinion, is a proper laboratory.

"Mr. TAYLOR. Why could you not take $100,000 to perfect your plant, etc., and $75,000 to keep your men that you now have? Why would not that cover it?

"Dr. MELVIN. That would hardly be in proportion. I think if we had a plant for $100,000, the other ought to be larger—a couple of hundred thousand dollars."

Whose statement will we accept? Dr. Galloway's, who states we could carry the work on with our existing serum plant in about 15 counties; or Dr. Dorset's, who states that the work of the current year was confined to 4 counties, that the work in 1 amounted to little—or simply to putting an inspector in the county on November 1—that the actual work of demonstration and eradication was confined to 3 counties, and that they were unable to make enough serum to take care of all 3 of the counties, but were obliged to purchase serum for 1. The reason given for purchasing the serum is that the $75,000 appropriation for last year was not available until the 1st of July, but Dr. Melvin states that it takes 10 days to prepare the serum, and ordinarily they would use it right away; and Dr. Dorset states, page 20:

"The plan of work was to secure cooperation of the State authorities, first of the State college and through the State college the extension department of the college, then the cooperation of the live-stock sanitary board or the State veterinarian. Our bureau was to place men in a certain area, which was to be selected, in which we would endeavor to demonstrate methods of eradicating hog cholera. The work then was planned along three lines: First, the education and the organization of the farmers in the district selected, to be carried out primarily by the State college. The second was to involve sanitation and restrictive regulations, to be enforced by the State veterinarian. The third part of our work was to be the active supervision by the Bureau of Animal Industry and the inoculation of diseased herds and exposed herds with the antihog-cholera serum.

"We have had a great deal of trouble getting these organizations started. Difficulties which the State colleges and others have not been able to overcome have made the organization very slow, and we have found ourselves, three or four months after the work began, without a suitable organization for carrying it on."

"Mr. HAUGEN. First you draw the blood from a cholera hog?

"Dr. MELVIN. You get your immune hog first, then you get your blood from a hog that is sick with cholera and inject a certain amount of that into this immune hog and produce what we call a hyperimmune, and then from him draw the blood and use that blood in this immunizing work.

"Mr. HAUGEN. That is mixed, I understand, with carbolic acid?

"Dr. MELVIN. That is merely to preserve it.

"Mr. HAUGEN. How long would that take?

"Dr MELVIN. That would take, I think, about 10 days.

"Mr. HAUGEN. Then you test it by applying it on a hog?

"Dr. MELVIN. Ordinarily they would use that right away. They do not test all of these different batches. Some do. Some take the blood and serum from several hogs and then try it to see whether it does protect or not. They inoculate a hog or two hogs with this diseased blood, and then also with the serum, to see whether it does render them immune or not. That is the proper way to do it."

According to the statement of Dr. Dorset, in charge of the work, it took months to secure cooperation with the State. He states that they had a great deal of trouble in getting the organizations started. The appropriation for the organization and the production of the serum was made available on the same date, and after the money was available for the serum months passed before it could be applied. It would seem that a board shack, half the size of the committee room, and a few small portable tin houses could be put together in a few months, allowing 10 days and even 6 weeks for the manufacture of the serum by a great department with thousands of employees and $75,000 available. If so, the reason given can not be accepted; but be that as it may, the fact is that Dr Galloway, whose word is properly law in the department in this instance, contends that $300,000—or $20,000 shall be allotted for each of 15 counties for work identical with that carried on in 4 counties last year; that the proposed work can be carried on in 15 counties with its existing serum plant, which Dr. Melvin and Dr. Dorset, in charge of the work, contend proved inadequate to provide serum for use in the 4 counties for carrying on work identical to that which it is proposed to do in 15 counties now.

Under the proposed plan, the 15 counties to be selected will receive aid to the extent of $20,000, or 15 out of the 2,500 counties will be partly provided for, and the balance, 2,485, must go without. As, for instance, Iowa was fortunate enough to receive the aid of one of the allotments for the current year for Dallas County. According to the report, 15,954, or 17 per cent, of the hogs in that county died. Dr. Dorset's statement is that only 9,182, or 7.1 per cent, died. (See p. 24.) The contention is that a large number of hogs were saved in Dallas County. Undoubtedly that is true; but while Dallas County was benefited, the other 98 counties were left to take care of themselves, and lost more than 2,800,000 hogs. In other words, the other counties helped to pay for the serum and expenses connected with the demonstration in Dallas County and were left to bury their own hogs. On the other hand, had the money allotted to Dallas County been used for the production, sale, and distribution of potent serum throughout the whole State, undoubtedly a large number of the 2,800,000 hogs that died in the other counties would have been saved. Besides, it must be obvious to all that when Iowa, the greatest of all hog-raising States, with a Government plant maintained in the State, with liberal annual appropriations made for the production of the serum, is not able to supply the demand, but loses through the ravages of hog cholera more than $33,000,000 in a single year, that other States with less facilities to combat the ravages of hog cholera are absolutely powerless in supplying the demand for the serum.

If so, if private concerns are not likely to supply the demand, and if potent serum is the only effective remedy found and has merit and will, when applied, cure or prevent cholera, then it is obviously necessary to make at least a part of the appropriation available for the production, sale, and distribution of a potent serum. Under the circumstances the department should prepare and keep on hand serum, if not enough to supply the demand, at least to do so as far as possible, to supply emergencies in States unable to supply the demand in the State. If $300,000 is set aside for that purpose as a working capital, it will enable the department to purchase or manufacture serum for sale at its approximate cost. From time to time, as the supply exhausts itself, the money would be coming in in proportion to the amount disposed of and made available for the purchase or manufacture of a new supply. Most likely it will prove inadequate to meet all emergencies that may arise, but that is not reason for not providing for a part of what is needed. The $300,000 will supply a large number and will be of inestimable value in saving millions of hogs.

It is contended that the language in the bill will give the department authority to manufacture and distribute the serum. S. 3439—that is, the proposed bill—appropriates the sum of $500,000 for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera, and for carrying on examinations and inspections authorized in regulating the preparation of the serum. Granting that it gives authority, it will be ineffectual, inasmuch as the department has clearly indicated what it proposes to do with the proposed appropriation, and that is to continue doing what it is now doing—to allot $300,000, or $20,000 to each of the 15 counties to be selected, $50,000 for inspection, and the balance, $150,000, for demonstration, including the expenses in Washington. That is the present plan suggested by Dr. Galloway, Acting Secretary of the department, and if approved of by passing S. 3439, as it is proposed to do, it will of course have to be carried through, and I take it that for that reason the language submitted in the Book of Estimates, page 18, which provides that part of the appropriation asked for may be used for the construction and equipment of an antihog-cholera serum plant was not included in the bill. Hence the department will have $500,000 to use—$50,000 for inspection of plants not likely to come into existence and $300,000 to demonstrate the value of a serum not available even for the use of demonstration.

I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who is chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has referred hastily to an amendment that I offered in the committee to the Senate emergency hog-cholera bill providing for an appropriation of $100,000 for the investigation, treatment, and eradication of a horse disease called "dourine." Dourine is of a syphilitic nature, and there is absolutely no cure for it. It is not a new disease. There was an outbreak of this disease in Illinois in 1888, and the Federal Government took hold of it and supposed that it had stamped it out, but one stallion infected with the disease was shipped into Nebraska and that brought about an outbreak there in 1892. They supposed that this had been stamped out eventually, but apparently they were mistaken, and some infected animals having escaped detection brought on another outbreak in 1899.

In 1901 they had a third outbreak there, which also went into South Dakota and got into the range horses on the Indian reservations, where it is very difficult to stamp out. In 1903 and 1911 they had outbreaks of this disease in Iowa, and there they succeeded in eradicating it so that it did not return. Now we have it very extensively in Montana and also in the western part of North Dakota, and there we have to deal with it largely on the ranges. The horse industry there is a very important one, and the horses are raised under range conditions, where it is very difficult either to detect the disease or handle it, because the range horse has to be lassooed and thrown to the ground and held in order to get the necessary blood for the so-called "fixation test." There is no other way known, so scientists say, of discovering this disease but through a blood test. Hence you see how difficult it is to deal with the disease under range conditions.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELGESEN. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask whether or not the quarantine law relative to diseases such as the Texas fever and other cattle diseases would be in force against this horse disease.

Mr. HELGESEN. It probably will when you discover the disease, but you first have to discover it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have been quarantined for years against the cattle diseases, and it seems to me it should also apply to horse diseases.

Mr. HELGESEN. But you can not quarantine animals until you first find them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HELGESEN. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman inform the committee how this disease is carried from one animal to another?

Mr. HELGESEN. It is communicable through breeding. Now, I have a letter from the State veterinary of North Dakota, written February 10, 1914, in which he says:

The statistics of this disease as occurring in North Dakota are somewhat limited, but are sufficient to indicate to us that it would require considerable work and investigation in order to eradicate the disease.

The disease has been found in the following counties: Dunn, Williams, McKenzie, Billings, Bowman, Morton, and Emmons.

As has been previously stated, the work on dourine is simply preliminary. We found 27 stallions infected out of 203 examined; 77 mares infected out of 215 examined.

On the Standing Rock Reservation 165 animals have been destroyed on account of being infected with dourine. The inspection on the reservation was not complete, and it is anticipated that there are still quite a number of animals there that are diseased. We expect to cover this territory during the coming season.

The amount of work done has been much larger in the State of Montana, and of course it has been determined that the disease exists to a great extent in that State. I have wired Dr. Butler, the State veterinarian of Montana, to forward you his statistics.

On account of the insidious nature of this disease animals may be used for work for quite a period, and it makes it quite a difficult proposition to condemn the animals unless there is some provision made for indemnifying owners for the loss when the animals are destroyed. It is generally considered that this is the only method to properly eradicate the disease.

Proper supervision could not be kept over the large number of animals that may be quarantined, and they would be changing hands, and in this way the disease would continue to spread.

I might further state that we have found the disease quite extensive in one particular herd, which comprises some 600 mares. We found all the stallions, 6 in number, affected with dourine, and reports indicate that 6 stallions have died from the disease during the past 2 years. Out of the limited number of mares we have tested of this herd we have found over 50 per cent diseased, and we must presume that this will be the condition found when the balance of the herd has been tested.

He also reports that out of 360 animals tested on Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, 113 mares were killed and 23 stallions castrated.

In a letter from Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, written February 14, 1914, he says:

It is very important that the bureau shall be able to begin an active campaign in this eradication work as soon as practicable in order that the force working on dourine may be fully organized and in operation before the season for the spring round-up opens, as most of these inspections have to be made under range conditions.

This indicates the necessity for an appropriation that will be immediately available, for unless we can segregate the diseased animals before the breeding season opens thousands of additional animals may be infected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELGESEN. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The gentleman said the symptoms were not discernible. He means in the early stages?

Mr. HELGESEN. Yes; in the early stages of the disease. As the Bureau of Animal Industry says that there is no remedy for this disease except "ruthless slaughter," and as the conditions in Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota are as they have now been described to you, I hope that my amendment will prevail.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, doubtless there are Members who will think this appropriation unnecessarily large—$500,000—for the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera. Even a cursory consideration will remove, I am sure, such misapprehension. Swine production is not only one of the farmer's principal sources of profit, it is also the source of one of the principal food products of mankind. It is believed that in the increased production of swine lies the most promising method of maintaining the meat supply of the world. The pig will grow in any climate and under almost any conditions. It is prolific and reaches an early maturity. Pork products appeal to all classes; to the laborer, as well as to the epicure; to rich and poor alike.

Especially is it an important American product. In 1912 the number of swine in the United States exceeded 65,000,000. One-third in number and one-half in value of all the swine in the world are produced in the United States. We annually contribute more of this great food product to the world's supply than any other four nations combined. Every State is a producer, but the number varies very greatly—from nearly 10,000,000 in Iowa to less than 25,000 in Arizona. I submit a table showing the distribution in the various States.

Number of hogs in the United States Jan. 1, 1912.

10 principal States.	Number hogs.	Value.
Illinois	4,640,000	40,832,000
Missouri	4,491,000	31,437,000
Nebraska	4,267,000	37,550,000
Indiana	4,031,000	31,039,000
Ohio	3,578,000	29,341,000
Kansas	2,808,000	22,183,000
Texas	2,544,000	16,027,000
Georgia	2,098,000	14,057,000
Wisconsin	2,051,000	19,690,000
Total, 10 States	40,197,000	337,107,000
Total, other States	25,213,000	186,221,000
Total, United States	65,410,000	523,328,000
Total, United States, Jan. 1, 1913	61,178,000	603,109,000
Total, United States, Jan. 1, 1914	58,933,000	612,951,000

It will be noticed that the numbers for the years given are steadily declining. The percentage of decrease from January 1, 1913, to January 1, 1914, was 3.7. This decrease was due in a large measure to the prevalence of hog cholera.

While the number of hogs produced has declined, the price has increased. The average value per head January 1, 1914, was $10.40, or 5.5 per cent above the average value on January 1, 1913, and 13.4 per cent above that of 1910. While the total number in two years had decreased 6,477,000, the total value had increased $89,623,000.

There is considerable variation in the price. While the average value for the whole country, as before stated, is $10.40, the average for Connecticut is $16.20, for Iowa $12.60, and for Arkansas $7.40.

That a matter affecting seriously a food product universally used, of over $600,000,000 in value, produced by every State in the Union, is of grave national concern does not need to be proven.

NATURE OF THE DISEASE.

Hog cholera, or swine plague, is a virulent, deadly disease, almost certainly fatal when fully developed. It is both contagious and infectious. Although it has been known and dreaded for many years, it is only recently that any reliable knowledge of the disease has been ascertained. We now know that it is caused by a microorganism that exists in the blood. It is so small that the most powerful microscopes are unable to identify it. However, its existence is demonstrated by many tests. It has been shown that the disease never exists without giving evidence of its originating germ. Dr. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, says:

It is just as impossible to have hog cholera develop without the germ being present as it would be to grow corn without the seed being present. * * * It can not originate spontaneously any more than corn can grow in a field where no seed has been planted.

It is exceedingly difficult to eradicate because it is so easily transmitted. It is not only carried by contact, but by birds, dogs, streams, and even by the feet of men going from one farm to another. It is carried on the roads and on the railways, until it is distributed over the entire Nation and probably exists in every State.

It is most prevalent in the late summer and fall. The frosts of winter seem to stay for a time the ravages of the disease, so that early in the spring it is at its lowest ebb; but from that time it increases rapidly until fall.

The disease does not seem to affect one particular breed of hogs more than another. Generally the careless farmer is more apt to have the disease among his herd than the careful one, but sanitary conditions and the best of care are not protection against infection.

It has been generally believed until late years that the disease was difficult of diagnosis. With our present knowledge it may be easily identified. Indeed, it is believed that at least 90 per cent of all deaths of hogs from disease are caused by hog cholera. In a recent bulletin issued from the Department of Agriculture at Washington the farmer is advised:

Remember that hog cholera kills millions of hogs where other diseases kill thousands. Dismiss from your mind all thought of such diseases as "lung plague," "infectious pneumonia," "pig typhoid," etc., for these are generally merely fanciful designations given to hog cholera by uninformed men.

EXTENT OF THE DISEASE.

As early as 1833 there appeared in Ohio the disease now known as hog cholera. Since then it has taken its yearly toll of death and consequent loss almost without interruption and with constant increase until last year, when it reached a tremendous total, greater than ever known before.

The losses from this one cause to the farmers of America are so large as to appear extravagant. A national live stock association, after a careful investigation, placed the average annual loss for the last 40 years at over $40,000,000. It is almost certain that last year the loss exceeded $100,000,000. Prof. Kennedy, of the Iowa Agricultural College, says of the losses of 1912:

The national hog-cholera loss last year was 900,000,000, or 1,000,000,000 pounds of meat. This was 10 pounds per capita. Iowa's loss was 150,000,000, or 62 pounds per person, and was more this year. * * * Iowa's loss this year would be $20,000,000.

Indeed, a later estimate made by Prof. Kennedy of Iowa's loss last year exceeds that amount. From reports received from every county in that State for the year 1913 he estimates the loss through hog cholera alone in number 2,827,907; value, $28,279,070. He further estimates that 2,470,493 hogs were marketed at a sacrifice for fear of infection at a loss of $4,940,986. He also estimates a further loss to cattle feeders, due to the shortage of hogs to follow the cattle, at $500,000.

These estimates may seem fanciful to some, but the loss is actual, and the number of dead hogs resulting from an attack of the plague can be readily ascertained.

Something of the devastating nature of the disease can be understood from the returns from some of the Iowa counties. Thus Sioux County lost 71 out of every 100 hogs, or a total loss for that county alone of 103,765. Sac County lost 70 out of every 100; Plymouth, 64; Lyon, 70; Hancock, 66; Buena Vista, 66; Kossuth, 69. Twenty-two of the ninety-nine counties of the State lost over one-half their hogs last year.

These losses are not confined to one State. The plague is found in every State where hogs are produced. Losses are greatest in States where production is greatest.

It should be understood that these losses are not limited in their effect to the farmer alone. To lose in a single year 10 pounds per capita of the country's meat supply is a national calamity. It affects every citizen. As is well stated in the committee report accompanying this bill:

The losses entailed by hog cholera are of interest both to producer and consumer. The city man can no more escape the burden of this scourge than can the country man. All interests are concerned most directly and vitally.

THE REMEDY.

As early as 1878 the Department of Agriculture took up the study of diseases of swine along with that of other domestic animals. Little progress with regard to swine diseases was made for several years, and each year the losses increased. In 1885 the department arrived at the conclusion that the principal cause of such losses was due to a disease which was identified and thereafter known as hog cholera. It was thought the cause was a bacterium found in the tissues of infected hogs, which was named the hig-cholera bacillus. The Bureau of Animal Industry began a vigorous prosecution of laboratory investigations and field experiment in an endeavor to find a remedy. It was finally determined that the so-called hog-cholera bacillus was not the cause of hog cholera, but merely an accessory factor; that the true cause was a microorganism which is taken into the blood and other fluids of the body and there developed; that the disease can not be spontaneously acquired, but is invariably caused by the introduction of the microorganism; that hogs that recover from the disease are thereafter immune.

Upon this basis of facts the work of discovering a remedy was thereafter intelligently prosecuted. In 1905 the bureau began experiments with immune hogs. They injected immune hogs with large quantities of blood from hogs sick with the cholera. It was found this did no material harm to the immune hog. Then blood was taken from the immune hog and this blood was taken to protect hogs not immune and not infected. As a result the following facts were demonstrated:

1. When hogs immune against hog cholera are injected with blood from hogs sick of hog cholera the blood serum of the immune hog acquires the power to protect hogs not infected.

2. The serum thus secured may be used to protect susceptible hogs in two ways: (a) The serum alone is injected; this confers an immunity lasting from three weeks to two months. (b) The serum is injected with a minute amount of blood taken from a hog sick of hog cholera; this is known as the simultaneous method, or double treatment, and it produces an immunity which lasts for many months, if not for life.

3. The serum is essentially a preventive. It does not cure hogs already seriously sick, but it may be used successfully as a cure if administered in the very early stages of the disease.

This treatment is now approved by all Government and State experts and is recognized as the only method of successfully combating the disease. Unfortunately, however, the remedy is not cheap, is difficult to prepare, requires expert administration, and is easily adulterated.

As a result of experiments which the Government conducted in Iowa, it was found that when an infected hog was introduced in a herd some of which were treated and some not, only 4 per cent of the treated hogs died, while 89 per cent of the untreated hogs died.

Last year the appropriation did not become available for Government work until July 1, and the cholera was well advanced in the infected States by that time. The results of the Government experiments showed that as a preventive merely the number of healthy hogs treated with serum alone in Pettis County, Mo., was 3,825. Of these, 6 died. In Montgomery, Ind., 943 were treated and 33 died. The average loss was eight-tenths of 1 per cent. With the double treatment, out of a total treated, 36 died, a loss of five-tenths of 1 per cent.

On diseased hogs they experimented with serum alone, and in Pettis County 3,801 were treated, of which 597 died. In Montgomery County 2,797 were treated, and 610 died. In Dallas County, Iowa, 4,959 were treated, of which 1,693 died. Of 11,557 diseased hogs treated 2,910 died, with the serum treatment alone; 7,026 were treated with the double treatment, of which 204 died, a loss of 2.8 per cent.

These and other experiments still more favorable seem to demonstrate the value of the serum treatment as a preventive and, to a certain extent, as a cure.

On the other hand, there have been many unfortunate experiences of those who have tried the serum treatment, and have lost both the money paid for the serum and their hogs. Indeed there are many who believe the serum treatment harms rather than helps. It is believed by those who are hopeful of the serum treatment that such unfortunate results as have occurred from the use of the serum are the result rather of poor serum or maladministration than of any incompetence in the remedy. In any event, a survey of the whole field seems to warrant the conclusion that the serum treatment now appears the only hopeful method of combating the disease.

That this is true is evidenced by the widespread, and it may be termed official, adoption of the serum treatment. Not only have the national authorities adopted it, but more than 30 States have already taken part in the work of testing, preparing, or distributing the serum. Iowa has invested $48,000 in a laboratory for its preparation; Ohio, $100,000; and other States less amounts.

DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING GOOD SERUM.

The difficulty in obtaining pure serum is now the greatest obstacle to be overcome. To secure the remedy of a standard potency and free from adulteration requires either strict Government inspection or Government preparation. To guard against adulteration and bogus serum, manufactured and sold by private parties, we passed a law last year making it unlawful to place on the market "any worthless, contaminated, dangerous, or harmful virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals." We also gave the department power to make rules and regulations regarding such production and to inspect the product of private manufacturers of such serums. Under this law no serum shall be sold that has not been prepared under the authority of a Government license. The present bill carries a special provision to carry out this work and appropriates $50,000 therefor. It is quite likely the amount is inadequate to prevent the sale of impotent, adulterated, or bogus serums. There is a widespread belief that no serum should be allowed to be sold that has not either been prepared or directly inspected by either the national or State officials.

It is the belief of Mr. HAUGEN, Representative from Iowa, ranking Republican member of the Committee on Agriculture, and himself a practical farmer, that the appropriation which is carried in this bill should be mostly devoted to the preparation or purchase by the Government of serum and its distribution or sale to the people. It is his belief that by a cooperative effort on the part of the National Government and the States more could be accomplished in this way than by further experimentation and demonstration work. There are many who share his view.

Prof. G. R. Bliss, in charge of the cooperative work of the Government and State in Scott County, Iowa, writes:

We have lost annually millions of dollars' worth of hogs during the past three years. There has been a great scarcity of serum, and that manufactured by State or Government laboratories was practically impossible to get. You probably know that the serum put out by private concerns is not always reliable and that many bad results have been secured from the use of such serum. A farmer frequently invests about $1 per pig for serum, and has absolutely no way of knowing whether or not the material injected is of any value. If from a State or National laboratory, where it has been thoroughly tested, he can be fairly sure of the strength and purity of the serum. Because of this uncertainty thousands of farmers have hesitated about treating their herds, and have lost them as a result.

Prof. Bliss is thoroughly convinced of the value of the serum treatment, and gives the following useful suggestions on the subject in a pamphlet sent out to the farmers:

No cure for hog cholera has ever been found, and there is only one positive preventive—the serum treatment.

Some farmers may think they know how to keep hog cholera from their premises for years by certain methods of feeding, breeding, disinfecting, or sanitation, but we have seen dozens of such finally overtaken by the disease. There isn't any medicine or precaution of any kind except the serum treatment which can be relied upon. The cholera germ is no respecter of persons or methods.

Hog cholera is no joke. The man who thinks he can let the disease run its course and save most of his hogs is generally doomed to disappointment. Natural and inherited immunity is all that will save him. He who saves 15 per cent is fortunate above the average.

In most cases a man does not realize how sick his pigs are at first, and neglects treating them until it is too late.

The success of the serum treatment depends on the following factors: Strength and cleanliness of the serum, amount of disease in the herd, amount of natural immunity present, coolness of the weather, cleanliness of the premises, kinds of feed given, etc.

The three most important factors which determine life or death are all variable and almost impossible to control. They are the strength of the serum, the deadliness of the cholera germ, and the amount of natural or inherited immunity present.

A pig sick with cholera needs clean quarters, no dust, plenty of cool, clean water, fresh slop or milk, good pasture (clover or alfalfa is best), and no corn.

The symptoms of chronic cholera are as follows: Loss of appetite, coughing, hard breathing, constipation, and disposition to lie in sheds in the early stages. As the disease progresses the curl leaves the tail, the ears droop, the animal gets thin and weak, staggering as it walks, the eyeball is bloodshot, and the eyelids often gummed so that the pig acts as though blind. Sometimes the head is held to one side. In the last stages the bowels are very loose and the excrement green and watery.

It is evident that merely issuing a license to a company to manufacture serum will not insure either the potency or the purity of the product. There must be efficient inspection, and, it may be, personal supervision by officials in order to secure satisfactory results. It is to be hoped that the experience that will be obtained this season under the provisions of this bill will enable us to certainly determine just what is needed. Referring to this matter, Prof. W. J. Kennedy, of the Iowa Agricultural College, writes:

Up to the present time our commercial serum has never been properly tested. The Federal Department of Agriculture issues a license to plants doing an interstate business, but that is not enough. We should have a man placed at each of these centers or plants to test every drop of serum or virus made and sold, just the same as we have Federal meat inspection at our packing plants. This would help in the following ways:

1. It would standardize serum and virus; something that is absolutely necessary at this time. Just as long as there is such a wide variation in the potency of serum and virus as has prevailed during the last two years, there will be a lack of confidence among farmers concerning the efficiency of the serum treatment of hogs against cholera.

2. It would make it possible for the farmers to distinguish between real serum and the many fakes, so-called serums, and hog-cholera cures that have been so generally peddled from farm to farm by agents, many of whom were carrying the disease from infected to healthy herds.

3. It would prevent the outbreak of the disease caused by the use of a poor grade of serum with good virus where the simultaneous treatment was used.

4. The fact that the serum and virus were Government tested would insure their usefulness, greatly enlarge the demand, and thus naturally reduce the losses from the disease.

Wallace's Farmer, a leading agricultural journal of the Central West, says:

It is now several years since Drs. Dorset and Niles, of the United States Department of Agriculture, gave to the public the result of their investigation of the diseases known as hog cholera and swine plague, and demonstrated by careful experiments conducted in different parts of the country that they had discovered a method by which these diseases, or this disease, could be controlled by inoculation. Their claims for this method seem to have been fully sustained by careful experiments conducted at various experiment stations and elsewhere. There seems to be no doubt but that this method, if carefully followed, will prevent hog cholera, and it is probably not too much to say that the disease could be stamped out if the authority and the funds necessary were placed in competent hands.

It is my belief that this bill will aid in the accomplishment of that most desirable result. I shall support it, and hope to see it pass.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, as a rule I am not in favor of large appropriations of money and never unless I believe it is absolutely necessary. But in this case I am in favor of this appropriation. As the distinguished chairman of the committee said awhile ago, this question of hog cholera affects the food supply of the whole country. A great many people are complaining about the high prices of meat, beef, pork, and mutton, and that condition will continue to exist until we get more cattle and more hogs in the country. The number of hogs that have died every year on account of cholera is appalling. I want to take the time to give you a concrete example. In the county of Pettis in my district I have the figures on the loss of hogs from cholera for the last three years, and they astounded me and doubtless will others who have not taken the trouble to look it up.

In 1911 there were 13,740 hogs died in that county from cholera. In 1912 there died 20,550. In 1913 there died 10,376, making a total loss of 44,666 hogs in this one county in three years. Something ought to be done to stop this great waste. I believe the Government can not do better than to aid the farmers in the country who feed the world in preventing this terrible destruction in one of the prime food products of the country. Consider for a moment the financial loss. I figured the price of hogs at 8 cents a pound and I believe the department makes it 8½. I figured the weight of the hogs at 100 pounds each and I am sure it will be nearer 200 pounds each, for they do not raise scrubs in that county.

But even at these conservative figures we have this appalling statement of the losses of hogs in this one county, as follows:

Year.	Died.	Weight.	Price per pound.	Loss.
		Pounds.	Cents.
1912	20,550	100	8	164,400

Total loss for three years, $357,328.

The report shows that for the year 1913 the loss was only 1,341 hogs, which died in that county after July 1. I am also informed that the Government agent did not get into that county until about August 1. I think therefore we can fairly attribute the great decrease in the loss of hogs from cholera in that county during the late summer to the intelligent work of a Government expert.

If the farmers of this one county lost in three years hogs easily worth $357,328, then the total loss to the farmers throughout the United States must have been well up into hundreds of millions of dollars. If the Government has found or can find a way to eradicate or prevent this disease and thereby conserve this valuable meat supply, we can well afford to give them the money to do it with, and I am therefore in favor of this appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. METZ].

Mr. METZ. Mr. Speaker, I want to point out the need of inspection of the plants making this and other serums. I know something about this, because I represent the largest manufacturer in Europe and import more serum than anybody else in the United States. The German Government has an inspector in every plant, and they test every batch. The Government guarantees it. In this country there is no such inspection or control. While I was comptroller of the city of New York one manufacturer bought from the board of health diphtheria serum and put it up and sold it as his own, and then kicked because the city went into competition with him.

There ought to be Federal inspection of all these serums that go into interstate commerce, and the only way to get that is to have a Government inspector in the plant, and then you will have a guaranty that the stuff goes out right. St. Louis, I believe it was, put out a diphtheria antitoxin some years ago, and while it cured diphtheria it gave the people lockjaw, because the horses used in the preparation of the serum were not first tested for lockjaw and happened to have the lockjaw germ in them. It is most essential and necessary to have the plant under Government control before a particle of serum is put out for any purpose, and I approve of that part of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. Apparently this division of time is being made between those representing various degrees of advocacy of the bill, and those of us who would like to look at the other angle of it have not an opportunity to be heard. I would like to have a few minutes in order to get some information about the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have addressed the House have tried to enlighten the gentleman from Kentucky, and if they have failed it is not my fault.

Mr. SHERLEY. Nor is it mine, but I would like to have the opposition to the bill have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman is in opposition to the bill, he is entitled to be heard. I did not know that anyone was opposed to the bill. Of course the gentleman is entitled to be heard if he is in opposition to the appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I certainly am opposed to it so far as the information given indicates its purpose. I am opposed to buying serum and giving it to people who can afford to buy it for themselves.

Mr. LEVER. That is just what we are trying not to do.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield time to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much?

Mr. HAUGEN. Three minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, what I want to submit to the House is simply this proposition: We are proposing to appropriate the large sum of $600,000, though one gentleman says that that is an insignificant sum. It may have become so in Congress. We have gotten to the point where any amount of money can be appropriated and apparently it is insignificant. I have no objection to spending any money that is necessary for Government investigation, but I think there is a clear line to be drawn between an investigation in order to enable the individual citizen to control a disease of cattle and supplying people with the medicine to control it after the investigation has been made.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Just one moment. I may be misinformed but from what I have heard here and have tried to find out, it is proposed to make a particular serum and give it out to be used for the treatment of this disease. If that is not so, what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. LEVER. Let me give the gentleman what the department says it wants to do with this money. First, it is for demonstrating the practicability of eradicating hog cholera from selected sections of the country—15 counties.

Mr. SHERLEY. Right there—has not the efficacy of this remedy already been demonstrated for years past?

Mr. LEVER. No; it has not.

Mr. HAUGEN. Why, certainly it has.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to say to the gentleman that it has been demonstrated in my section of the country.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know I have heard it stated here repeatedly in years past that it had been demonstrated. What is the second ground?

Mr. LEVER. For the supervision of private serum plants, so as to protect the farmers against the use of spurious and dangerous serums.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much money for that purpose, and what is the method by which you are going to do it?

Mr. LEVER. Fifty thousand dollars for that purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. I might vote for that $50,000, particularly if you would arrange the way it is to be done instead of simply saying that it is going to be done. What is the rest?

Mr. LEVER. For demonstrational and educational work among the farmers in cooperation with the States, in order to bring about a better understanding of the disease and the approved methods of combating it. There are three propositions.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do not take my three minutes. The opposition to this bill is getting 3 minutes out of 40.

Mr. ANSBERRY. But there is only one person in opposition to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps there would be more if we had that side of it discussed. The point I make is that we ought not to come in here with a bill appropriating $600,000, with 20 minutes debate on a side, 40 minutes in all, 37 of it being used by those who advocate the bill to tell what a good thing it is and 3 minutes in opposition. I am perfectly willing to appropriate money for investigation, but there ought to be a line drawn between the Government doing the work that the individual can not be expected to do and the Government doing everything for the individual whether he can do it or not. Take this matter of serum——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can I get any more time?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is all the time I have. If the gentleman had spoken earlier, I would have been glad to give him time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I spoke as soon as I got a chance at the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Can not the gentleman from South Carolina give the gentleman from Kentucky more time?

Mr. LEVER. I can not. I have no time left. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I look upon the passage of this measure as purely a business proposition. We are told that the annual loss in this country from hog cholera is over $50,000,000. If, by the expenditure of a reasonable sum of money and by active, close cooperation with the States, this great loss can be materially reduced, and well-informed specialists tell us that in time it can practically be eradicated, then by all means let us make this appropriation of $500,000 and allow the good work to go on without delay.

It has become the established policy of the General Government to give aid to the States in combating evils with which they can not effectively deal single-handed and alone. The Agricultural appropriation bill this year will carry an appropriation of about $375,000 to fight the cotton-boll weevil, nearly $300,000 to prevent the spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moth, $400,000 for the extermination of the cattle tick, and $625,000 for quarantine work and the eradication of diseases of cattle and sheep. The ravages of the boll weevil and cattle tick are confined to the South, the gypsy and brown-tail moth to the New England States, diseases of cattle and sheep principally to the Southwest and West. No one doubts the wisdom of these expenditures, and all will agree that much good is being accomplished by assisting the States in fighting these evils. How much stronger must be the appeal to us which comes in behalf of the extermination of hog cholera, a scourge which is found in every State in the Union. The greatest losses, of course, are found in the large hog-producing States. In Iowa alone, in 1913, the loss from hog cholera is estimated to have been $15,000,000, while in each of the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Missouri the loss amounted to over $5,000,000.

Beef, mutton, and pork constitute the great meat supply of the Nation. Beef and mutton are important, but it is an undisputed fact that pork—hog meat—is the basis of the every-day meal of the average family, and is more generally used than any other meat. If we can be of assistance in the eradication of hog cholera, and thus increase the meat supply of the country, it is our duty to do it. The statistics of the Agricultural Department show that the number of hogs is constantly decreasing. Last year, while the number of hogs was less, the value, because of increased prices, was greater than in preceding years. With increasing values and increasing demands because of the increase of population, one would naturally think that production would be stimulated, and that farmers would turn their attention to the raising of more hogs; and they would but for the ever-present fear of the dread disease—hog cholera. The farmer who has felt the effects of this scourge and who has lost large numbers from this disease is slow indeed to reembark in the business of hog raising. He prefers to turn his attention to something where the risk is not so great. If the losses from hog cholera can be lessened and in time the dread disease practically eradicated, the farmers of the country will be encouraged to turn their attention to the raising of hogs, and that industry will once more become a very profitable part of the work on every farm in the land.

The matter of handling a disease which entails the loss of many millions of dollars upon the principal meat-producing animal of the country presents a problem nation-wide in its scope. The losses which occur from hog cholera affect the consumer as well as the producer—the man who lives in the city as well as the man who lives on the farm. All interests are alike centered in the question of ridding the country of this great evil.

There is no doubt in the minds of those who have made the subject a study but that hog cholera can be reduced, controlled, and in time substantially eradicated. During the last Congress our committee recommended an appropriation of $75,000 to be used to demonstrate the best method of preventing hog cholera. Under this appropriation the work was taken up in four counties located in the great hog-producing States of Missouri, Iowa, Indiana, and Nebraska. The appropriation was made late in the session, hence the work in these counties could not begin until near the middle of the summer of 1913. I will discuss only the station located in my own State of Missouri. This was established in Pettis County, and the plans were such that the demonstration extended over the entire county. The result of the work of eradicating hog cholera in Pettis County by the Department of Agriculture is intensely interesting. During the first six months, up to the 1st of July in 1913, before the Department of Agriculture began its work, the loss in that county was a little over 9,000 hogs. During the last six months of the year, after the work of the department had been thoroughly inaugurated, the total loss amounted to only about 1,000 hogs. This demonstrates conclusively that this disease can be controlled and practically eradicated.

In my own State the work has been taken up by the legislature, working through the State agricultural college. The last legislature appropriated $50,000, and a farm near the agricultural college at Columbia, consisting of 87 acres, has been purchased. Upon this farm will be erected suitable buildings, and the agricultural college of the State will manufacture the serum and supply it to the farmers of the State at its actual cost. What has been done in Missouri is being done in other States. Ohio has recently appropriated $100,000 for the establishment of a modern plant to take care of the disease in that State, and when the matter of the prevention or cure is thoroughly demonstrated it will be taken up by the legislatures of the other great hog-producing States.

There is another feature of this bill to which I wish to call special attention, and that is the provision which gives the Government authority to examine and inspect establishments which manufacture hog-cholera serum. This will enable the Department of Agriculture to place inspectors in these factories, and they will prevent the interstate shipment of serums until by careful tests they are convinced that the potency and effectiveness of such serums can be guaranteed. Thus the interstate shipment and sale of worthless "hog-cholera cures" will be prevented and the farmers protected from dangerous serums which often result in spreading the disease instead of preventing it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that the United States now produces one-twelfth of the sheep, one-eighth of the cattle, and one-third of the hogs of the world. We produce more hogs than any other four nations combined. We can, by the appropriation of the money herein provided and by earnest and hearty cooperation with the States, greatly reduce the losses and ultimately rid the hog-raising industry of its greatest enemy; in fact, its only enemy—hog cholera. As I said in the beginning, it is purely a business proposition. I sincerely hope that this bill will pass.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I will address my remarks chiefly in an effort to answer the statements made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. The great difficulty in the treatment and eradication of hog cholera is because it is so easily spread. It has been shown to have been carried by birds flying from an infested lot over to a lot that was not contaminated with hog cholera. It is tracked in from one farm to another on the shoes of people. It is brought in at times by live stock other than hogs. Horses coming from one farm which has hog cholera to another farm track the germs in on their hoofs. It is spread by hogs which are infected being shipped in cars on a railroad or in wagons and the dirt dropping out along the right of way and along highways. It is spread in these and other ways. It is for the purpose of bringing about a more intimate knowledge of how it is spread, its treatment, perfection of a cure, inspection of serum and serum plants, and at the same time to show how the disease may be eventually stamped out.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will.

Mr. BARTON. The gentleman says there will be 14 or some 20 counties that will demonstrate the application of this serum. Now, who will select those counties? Are they scattered over a State or concentrated in one or two places?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It will be at the discretion of the Department of Agriculture. Along that line, I will say that it is a very difficult problem to combat hog cholera, and by exerting efforts in particular localities it may be demonstrated that it is possible to drive it out entirely. The mortality rate of hog cholera is as high as 100 per cent, and I have personal friends in the fourth district of Kansas who have lost every one of their hogs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, the importance of this appropriation and the emergency demanding its speedy passage are based upon the following facts:

The United States has more than one-third of the swine in the world. It has more than any other four nations combined. Recent estimates show us to have not more than one-eighth of the cattle nor more than one-twelfth of the sheep. Our swine furnish more than 75 per cent of our meat products for export.

Swine are more generally grown and more evenly distributed throughout the United States than any other food animal, as the following tables demonstrate:

Estimated 90 per cent of loss due to hog cholera.

The money losses among swine are greater than those among any other kind of food animal. Hogs, like cattle and sheep, are afflicted by various diseases, yet only one disease seriously concerns the hog producer, and that is the so-called cholera. This disease until recently was deemed nonpreventable and, of course, noncurable. Government experts of the Bureau of Animal Industry have discovered what is now generally accepted as an effective preventive and a fairly workable remedy. This is the application of a serum which the Bureau of Animal Industry, the various agricultural colleges, farm demonstrators, and veterinarians generally agree that when properly applied to exposed herds where infection has not actually taken place a saving of 97 per cent to 100 per cent can be uniformly effected, and where herds have been attacked 75 per cent have been generaly saved.

Losses have been heavy for 50 years. Roundly speaking, loss for 1911, 21,000,000; 1912, 42,000,000; 1913, 65,000,000, regarded as low estimate. This loss consumers and producers bear, and it is an economic loss more than twice the interest on our national debt. It would build a transcontinental railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific; it would capitalize the President's Alaska railroad and meet rural-roads appropriation; it would more than capitalize the eight new regional banks. The States are collectively doing a great deal against the plague. Their total appropriations for serum, serum plants, and demonstrators will equal the amount asked for in this bill.

The recent legislatures have passed stringent defensive quarantine laws to protect the States, but the laws lack uniformity, and in States in which there are one-fifth of the hogs they are wholly without quarantine protection. One-half the hogs which go to public slaughter cross State lines and become interstate commerce, which indicates basis and necessity for governmental action.

Eleven million swine are absolutely unprotected by State laws.

Nearly all the States desire to cooperate with the Government.

At all the great stockyard centers, stock are being brought from more or less panicky owners, sold and returned back to the country as immune. The campaign has taken such proportions that the Government must move strongly and promptly to do its fair share. It is expected that during the coming fiscal year State legislatures generally will see their necessity for great intrastate activity and extension and perfection of their quarantine laws which should be as far as possible uniform.

Farmers throughout the country, knowing the great losses incurred or threatened, are being deterred from continuing any pork production or increasing their present production, so that the number of hogs in this country is decreasing. This will operate as a loss to them and an increased expense to the purchasers and consumers of hog products.

There are several problems for the Government and the State scientists yet to solve, one of which is how long would immunization continue? Second, how far is the recognized remedy reliably effective? And third, what is the effect upon the future crops of hogs as to becoming immune through the immunization of two or more generations? The especially good feature of this bill is that it makes the amount available in the spring when cholera is less frequent, and will enable the department and their cooperators to be fully prepared by the middle of the summer, when cholera usually begins and increases as the autumn proceeds.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. Just for a short question.

Mr. SHERLEY. We are not doubting the value of hogs that die of cholera, but what I want to know is why Uncle Sam should pay for the serum and give it to them?

Mr. SLOAN. That is not the case——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to have a minute to answer that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky is absolutely correct. The proposition is to go into the country and give the serum.

Mr. SLOAN. I quite disagree with the gentleman's statement as to the last fact.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to read the hearings before the committee and he will know——

Mr. SLOAN. I was there and——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to prevent the greatest economic waste that is occurring in any industry in this country at the present time. It is not a new line that this appropriation takes. It is in pursuance of a course heretofore taken in reference to animals——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell me how much of the $600,000 is expected to be paid for serum to be given to these people?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The bill does not provide for this.

Mr. SHERLEY. The bill may not provide it, but it may not prevent its being done. Is it not true in point of fact that that is where most of that money is going to go, for serum to be given to these people?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not necessarily so; I decline to yield further to the gentleman. The gentleman does not understand the bill at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am doing my best to get somebody to make me understand it, and I am always met by a statement of a lot of loose talk without coming at the facts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, if the gentleman will let me speak for a moment in my own time——

Mr. SHERLEY. Surely.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky the situation is simply this: This is a problem that is presenting itself to a great many of the farmers of this country. If the gentleman from Kentucky understood as much with reference to hog raising as perhaps he does of the raising of horses or something of that kind, he would know the farmers of this country have been the prey of all sorts of quacks selling them fake serums, and the only way this subject can properly be handled is by the Government of the United States.

It is too vast for any single person to make, and it is too vast to be handled in any other way.

Mr. SHERLEY. If we are going to furnish them with the serum, why should it be left with the 15 counties who are strong enough with the Department of Agriculture to get a pull?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is arguing about something that is not in the bill at all, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the trouble. It is not in the bill.

Mr. METZ. The bill does not provide for giving away any serum at all. It provides for instruction as to the use of the serum, as I take it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct. It is necessary in order to prove the value of this serum that serum shall be used in demonstrating. The department believes that it can show that localities as large as counties can be rid of hog cholera. If they prove this, it will demonstrate that a State can be rid of hog cholera, and if a State, then a nation. This is the reason, as I understand, that the department wishes to make demonstrations in certain counties. This is to be done not only by the use of the serum but also by other precautions which are as necessary as the serum. The serum is only a preventative and not an absolute cure. For these reasons I am in favor of the bill as it stands, without amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity of supporting by voice and vote this very meritorious measure. It is unique in that, although on the surface it is drawn apparently solely in the interests of the farmers of the country when, as a matter of fact, it is of prime importance to every citizen of our great country, for the flesh of the swine is the universal meat food of more of our citizens than is the flesh of the beef or of the sheep, and because of this fact anything we do to-day to eradicate hog cholera is done not in the interest of any one class but in the interest of all. Gentlemen have told us during the progress of this debate that the annual toll levied by hog cholera is in money value approximately $75,000,000, and it is thought that by an appropriation of $500,000 this great loss can be materially decreased, and, of course, if this be true, then we have contributed, if we pass this bill to-day, something to lessen the fast rising cost of meats which go into the household economy of every citizen of the land.

We are told that in 1913 we had 61,178,000 hogs in the United States, and in 1914 this number was reduced to 58,933,000, a decrease of two million and a quarter hogs; and 90 per cent of this decrease was due to the hog cholera, although the money value of the hogs in 1914 was greater by nearly $10,000,000 than the preceding year. It requires no great amount of wisdom or knowledge of mathematics to grasp, by a careful study of these figures, why the cost of pork to the householder has advanced during the past year. This terrible disease first made its appearance in the United States in my own State of Ohio some time in 1833, and it is thought that it was imported with some blooded swine from Belgium. In compensation, however, our own great State of Ohio has expended more for the extinction of this plague than has the Federal Government. We have a factory which cost our State more than $100,000 that is turning out a serum and virus with which hogs are vaccinated as a preventive against this dreaded disease, and the experiments carried on by the agricultural department of Ohio have demonstrated that in many instances this serum and virus has been of great value. The difficulty, it is said, has been to procure men who know exactly how to inject the serum and virus into the hog. As I understand it, this serum and virus was invented or discovered by Dr. Dorset, of the Agricultural Department here in this city, and during a period of seven years' experience with this serum it has been proven efficacious. I agree with the committee that it is the part of wisdom to cooperate with the State and local agencies in dealing with this problem, because it requires the joint effort of both to teach the value, by practical demonstration, of this serum and virus. I think it the part of wisdom to provide, as this bill does, authority for some agency of the Government to inspect establishments engaged in the manufacture and preparation of hog-cholera serum and virus. I understand there are some 85 such institutions in the United States, and it has been alleged that because of a lack of care in the preparation of the serum and virus by these institutions that in many instances good results were not obtained; so that this bill, in effect, will control the manufacture, sale, and distribution of serum and virus for the prevention of hog cholera.

I have received many communications from individual farmers and from organizations of farmers in my district urging me to support this bill, and most of these men have a scientific as well as a practical knowledge of this great economic subject; they have experimented with the serum and virus manufactured under the watchful eye of our own State agricultural department, and I am willing to accept their judgment as to the value of this method of treatment. However, as it has been well said, this serum and virus is not known to be an absolute preventive; many experiments have proven it of great value, but it is thought that further experiment may be necessary; indeed, some go so far as to say that it has actually had the effect of spreading the cholera.

Mr. SHERLEY. You are going to use $50,000 for that purpose. What are you going to do with the other $150,000?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SHERLEY. I refer you to the chairman of the committee. That is what he said.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I think I am within the facts when I say that it is not absolutely known to be a certain preventive; in other words, it is still in the experimental stage, so to speak, and I understand that we are to spend $150,000 in further experimentation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand it is a perfect cure.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Personally, I believe myself that it is a sure preventive; however, I believe that vaccination is a sure preventive of smallpox, but there is very respectable authority that maintains that it is not; and so it is with this serum and virus. However, I think the consensus of opinion, or perhaps it would be better to state that the great weight of opinion, is in favor of it being a preventive.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONNOLLY].

[Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAGUIRE].

[Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has four minutes remaining, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has two.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT]. That leaves me one minute, then?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One minute.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, addressing myself to facts of which I have some personal knowledge, I desire to say that in the State which I in part represent there are something like 380,000 head of horses. A very large percentage of these horses range over the 21,000,000 acres of unappropriated public lands in that State. But recently there appeared among the horses—mostly the range horses—of that State a very malignant form of horse disease, known as dourine. It is killing those horses by the hundreds, and we have got to take some such emergency step as this to prevent it from going any further. I think that this appropriation will save the horse raisers of this country millions of dollars by using the money at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has four minutes remaining.

By unanimous consent, Mr. STOUT, Mr. ANSBERRY, and Mr. METZ were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in both phases of this proposed legislation, but at this time more particularly in the amendment providing for the use of $100,000 included in the bill for the investigation, treatment, and eradication of dourine. Now, at the outset I realize that I should have more time than has been allotted me to do justice to any discussion whatever of this subject. Dourine is one of the most dangerous and destructive diseases to the horse-raising industry that we have ever had to contend with in this country. In various writings this disease has been described under different names, among which may be mentioned "el dourine," "maladie du coit," "equine syphilis," "genital glanders," "breeding paralysis," "chancrous epizootic," and "beschalkrankheit."

The disease is believed to have originated in Asia. Dr. John R. Mohler, Chief of the Pathological Division of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, who has made an extensive study of this disease, writing in the year 1911, gives the following history of the disease, which I deem will be interesting to many of the Members of the House:

The disease was first definitely described in 1796 by Ammon as occurring among the animals belonging to the sovereign of Prussia at Trakehnen. During the first half of the nineteenth century it was described as occurring in many countries of Europe, including Germany, France, Austria, and Switzerland. It was also known to be prevalent along the northern region of Africa, in Algiers. It is supposed to have been introduced during the early part of the nineteenth century into continental Europe through the importation of breeding horses, especially Arab stallions, from the Orient.

In the United States the diseases was first suspected in 1885 and recognized in 1886 by Dr. W. L. Williams, who was then a practitioner at Bloomington, Ill. The infection was traced to a Percheron stallion, imported from France in 1882, which had a brand mark under the mane very much resembling the letter D (dourine?). It is supposed that he was affected with the disease and had been branded in France before being transported to this country. The nature of the disease not being at first recognized, its dissemination occurred before attention was attracted to it. The State of Illinois, however, took hold of the outbreak, and as a result of rigid prophylactic measures the disease was eradicated from the State in 1888, but not before an affected stallion had been shipped to Gordon, Nebr., thereby starting up a new center of infection in that locality.

In 1892 dourine was again brought into public notice by the appearance of an outbreak among the breeding horses of northwestern Nebraska, the history of which suggested that it originated with this Gordon stallion. An inspector of the Bureau of Animal Industry investigated the outbreak and found that upward of 200 mares and stallions were affected with the disease. Steps for the eradication of this outbreak were begun in June, 1893, at which time some of the diseased animals had died, and the breeders were using all the precautions possible to prevent its spread. Under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture all diseased animals still alive, including 32 in Nebraska and 5 in South Dakota, were purchased and destroyed.

After an expenditure of about $5,500 the disease was considered to have been eradicated from that section of the country. Five years later the infection again made its appearance in the same portion of Nebraska, and early in 1899 the bureau again began the work of eradication. Many inspections were made and those animals which were found diseased were purchased and killed. Many obstacles were encountered and the disease evidently kept smoldering during 1900.

In 1901 the infection appeared with increased vigor, this time in the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Indian Reservations in South Dakota, in addition to northern Nebraska, and more stringent measures were immediately inaugurated to control the spread of the disease. During the next year 10 diseased stallions and 76 diseased mares were purchased and slaughtered and 29 diseased stallions were castrated. However, eradication in this region was extremely difficult, owing to the wild condition of the country as well as of the horses and from the fact that many horse owners would try to conceal from the inspectors animals which they knew to be affected with the disease. This reappearance of the disease among horses in Nebraska and South Dakota after it apparently had been stamped out caused a thorough investigation of its latent qualities and other peculiarities, and as a result Veterinary Inspectors E. T. Davison and W. J. Fretz were stationed at Rushville, Nebr., with instructions to prosecute vigorously the work of eradication. In 1903 there were 16,287 horses inspected, of which 511 were found diseased and were killed, while 1,899 stallions were castrated. Careful and vigorous work was continued in this way, with the result that 8,705 horses were inspected in 1905, but only 1 stallion and 8 mares were found suspicious and destroyed and 9 stallions castrated.

During the year 1903 dourine was reported in Van Buren County, Iowa, and steps were immediately taken to stamp it out. As a result 410 horses were inspected, 2 exposed stallions were castrated, and 18 mares slaughtered. No connection could be established between this outbreak and that in Nebraska, but it was quite definitely determined that an imported Percheron stallion purchased by a company of farmers was responsible for its appearance.

In 1906 the last suspicious cases of dourine—1 stallion and 2 mares—were destroyed in South Dakota, and sufficient time has since elapsed to warrant confidence that the disease has been completely eradicated from that section of the United States.

In Canada the presence of dourine was discovered by Dr. Burnett in 1904, and the causative trypanosome was demonstrated by Dr. Watson in 1907, from the vulva of a mare. From the occurrence of this disease until the latest available published report, in 1909, 628 animals were purchased and destroyed. A marked diminution in the number of infected animals is apparent in the report, and the disease is said to be under control.

As already stated, an outbreak of dourine has recently (June, 1911) been located in Taylor County, Iowa, where 4 stallions have been found affected and 5 exposed to this disease. One of the former stallions has since died of the infection. In addition, 5 mares have shown symptoms of dourine, 1 of which subsequently died of the disease, 9 are suspicious cases, and 94 have been exposed, but at present show no evidence of infection. These diseased animals, together with all exposed stallions and mares, were immediately quarantined by the State. Those showing lesions of the disease were purchased by the Government and destroyed, while the exposed animals are still in quarantine under observation. Several Federal and State inspectors are making farm-to-farm inspections with the view of discovering any latent or hidden cases, and it is now believed that the infection is entirely under control. The source from which this center of infection was derived is only a matter of conjecture, but there is apparently no connection between this and any of the previous outbreaks. No authentic information as to the origin of the outbreak has been discovered up to the present time, but all cases lead back to a Percheron stallion which was imported in 1909 and brought direct to Lenox, Iowa. The possibility of such animals bringing the infection into this country must be apparent from the following explanation:

Schneider and Buffard maintain that in France dourine appears nearly every year in the Department of Basses-Pyrenees on the Spanish frontier. It is stated that mares get infected by the asses or horses by which they are covered. It is the custom to have a mare first covered by an ass, and if not impregnated she is then served by a stallion. The asses operate on both sides of the frontier, and in this way introduce the disease into France from Spain, where it has been known to occur for years, especially in Navarre.

This is an infectious disease usually affecting only horses and asses. It is due to a species of trypanosoma, known as the "trypanosoma equiperdum." This belongs to the same genus of parasitic protozoans which cause surra and nagana, diseases very fatal to horses and cattle in Africa, and which causes the disease among humans in Africa known as sleeping sickness. The typanosoma causing the latter disease is known as "trypanosoma gambiense," while that causing surra is known as "trypanosoma evansii."

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to the fact that about 30 years ago Mr. A. H. Pierce, of Pierce, Tex., imported a number of so-called Brahman cattle from India. They were imported to be crossed with the native cattle of Texas, as it was believed the crossbred cattle would be less affected by cattle ticks, which were present at that time in southern Texas in such enormous numbers. The experiment in crossbreeding proved quite successful in so far as that the progeny of the Brahman and native cattle were but little affected by ticks and other parasites and pestiferous insects of that section of the country. In 1906 Mr. A. P. Borden, who was then one of the executors of the Pierce estate, brought to this country from India 51 head of Brahman cattle for the purpose of restoring the strain of blood on the Pierce ranch in Texas. Although the blood of all these zebus imported by Mr. Borden was microscopically examined twice in India and twice during the ocean voyage, the fact that some of the cattle were affected with surra was not discovered until the cattle reached New York and were there placed in quarantine and a further test of the blood of these cattle made by the inoculation of rabbits. These cattle were held in quarantine in New York from July until the 14th of November, 1906, and it was with the greatest difficulty that surra was eradicated from the herd. Eighteen of the animals imported were killed in quarantine.

Like surra, dourine is very difficult to diagnose in its early stages. An attempt to make a microscopical demonstration of trypanosoma equiperdum in affected horses is frequently unsuccessful. The method now employed with the best results for the diagnosis of this disease is what is known as the complement-fixation test. The antigen used for the tests of the suspected dourine sera is made from the blood and macerated spleen of rats killed at the height of surra infection.

I made some investigations a few months ago in the Bureau of Animal Industry here to determine the advisability of having laboratories established in the different States where dourine had been found to exist, so that the complement-fixation tests might be carried on in the several States. From my investigations I found that it would be very dangerous to establish such laboratories throughout the States, as the escape from any of the laboratories of any of the rats affected with surra might spread that disease over the country, and this would be a much greater calamity than the dangers from dourine.

The presence of this disease at this time in the States of Montana, Wyoming, and North and South Dakota has only been called to the attention of the Bureau of Animal Industry within the past few months. In my State little was known of the disease before last spring. Dr. W. F. Crewe, the State veterinarian of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, wrote me first regarding this disease last June. At that time Dr. Crewe stated that about 60 cases of the disease had been discovered in North Dakota. Since that time the disease has been found to be widespread in the western part of my State. Dr. Crewe, in December of last year, wrote me that out of 560 horses on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in North Dakota 113 mares were killed and 23 stallions were castrated on account of being affected with dourine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes more in my own time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman my other two minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Thank you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. NORTON. The following figures will show the importance of the industry of horse raising in this country and in some of the Western States. According to the United States census for the year 1910, the total number of horses, mules, and asses in the United States was 24,148,580, and their value was $2,622,180,170.

	Number.	Value.
North Dakota	658,427	$84,633,655
South Dakota	682,191	75,183,223
Montana	320,290	27,616,223
Wyoming	158,348	12,703,100
Minnesota	759,178	89,824,452
Iowa	1,549,364	185,831,154

Total number and value of horses in the United States is as follows: Number, 19,833,113; value, $2,083,588,195.

The total number and value of horses in the States in which during the past few months dourine has been found is:

	Number.	Value.
South Dakota	669,362	73,442,978
Montana	315,956	27,115,764
Wyoming	156,062	12,426,838
Minnesota	753,184	89,068,872
Iowa	1,492,226	177,999,124

The number of horses, according to the assessors' reports for the year 1913, in the counties in which dourine has been found to be prevalent in North Dakota, is as follows:

Williams	10,648
McKenzie	10,734
McLean	11,906
Dunn	7,605
Golden Valley	5,162
Billings	12,413
Morton	21,747
Emmons	12,552
Total	92,768

Prompt action should be taken to eradicate this disease in this country. The appropriation provided in this bill for this purpose is much needed now, so that the work of eradicating this disease may be begun early in the spring, before the breeding season begins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has one minute.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. And I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent also, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. And I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAGUIRE], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the time I have remaining I desire to say, for the information of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], that not one dollar of this money is to be used in the manufacture and general distribution of hog-cholera serum. It is true that the Federal Government now has at Ames, Iowa, an experimental serum plant. The Government will use some of this appropriation in continuing the operation of that plant, and will use the serum manufactured there only in its demonstrational work in the field, but there is to be absolutely no general distribution of hog-cholera serum.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then will the gentleman tell us what they are going to do with it?

Mr. LEVER. They are going, in the first place, to select 15 counties in different localities and sections of the country to demonstrate that we can eradicate hog cholera from the country. That is the first proposition. Three hundred thousand dollars is to be used for that.

Mr. SHERLEY. How many people are to be employed, and at what salaries?

Mr. LEVER. I can not say as to that. We are going to take $50,000 to pay inspectors at the various serum plants, and we are going to take $100,000 to do general educational work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to address the House on this bill for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] asks unanimous consent to address the House upon the pending bill for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we can not grant that unless the gentleman can get an extension of time.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will state that I could have got time. I want to discuss the question only for a few minutes. What I want to say is not for home consumption. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary here.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I can extend my remarks in the RECORD, but I think I could give the gentleman some ideas on this question, at least, that have not been brought out heretofore.

Mr. MANN. I shall have to object to the request unless there is an extension of time, so that other gentlemen can have time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would suggest that the opposition ought to have more time. If any time is to be granted, it should be given to those in opposition to the bill, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] be given 10 minutes if time is granted.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, if we open up the discussion fully, we shall want more than 15 minutes or 30 minutes, and, in fact, more than an hour. Therefore I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects. All time has expired. The question is on the motion that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves to suspend the rules and pass a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall be resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 12579, a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. GARDNER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 23.

Accordingly the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts use a part of his time?

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman use his time first?

Mr. CARTER. We may not desire any time on this side.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman reserve his time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve my time.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, among the reforms of the rules of the House was the establishment of a so-called Discharge Calendar. Those who drafted the rule for the Discharge Calendar told us that henceforward it would be impossible to stifle the Members of this House so that they could not get bills up for consideration. For a time it looked as if there might be some value in the new rule. In August, 1911, the Discharge Calendar was reached, and it is the last time it ever was reached, for gentlemen found that it was charged with dynamite. It was feared that there really had been discovered a way at last by which Members could get up bills against the will of the leaders of the majority. Then what happened? Why, they had to adopt a new rule to prevent it. By this new rule the motion to suspend the rules takes precedence of the Discharge Calendar whenever the days are reached when either kind of business is in order. The Republican side of the House, almost without exception, and, if I recollect rightly, a respectable number on the Democratic side of the House, realized perfectly well that forcing the Discharge Calendar to give way to motions to suspend the rules was the equivalent of abandoning the Discharge Calendar for good. Mr. Speaker, when the debate on that rule was going on we were told that that was not so. We were told that the channel was still open; that we would get to the Discharge Calendar; that no one intended to stifle us. For the first time in two years and a half we have reached the Discharge Calendar to-day. Lo and behold! here is the proposition ready to choke us off. By chance the Speaker of the House is not well. A Speaker pro tempore is in the chair and only one Member has sought to pass a bill under suspension of the rules. Hence we find ourselves face to face with the next order of business, the awkward Discharge Calendar. Something must be done, so it is proposed to suspend the rules and consider the Indian appropriation bill, which is in order five days out of the six. Who ever heard of haste so great that the managers must get a two-thirds vote for the consideration of an appropriation bill? Why do you suppose that such a step is necessary? It is taken for no other purpose than to shut off the Discharge Calendar, at which we have now arrived.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will occupy some of his time, I have several gentlemen on this side of the House who wish to be heard.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARDNER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the proposition to second the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] because in my judgment such a motion should not have been offered on this day, especially when it was known that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] proposed to make a motion to discharge the committee having in charge House bill 1709, to pension widows and minor children of officers or enlisted men who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, and thus to make sure that that bill would be brought before the House for action. The widows and minor children of the officers and soldiers who served in the Army of the United States in the War against Spain ought to have pensions, just as the widows and minor children of officers and soldiers who served in the Civil War are given pensions. No valid reason can be given for the failure to pension the widows and minor children of Spanish War veterans; and yet this House refuses to do it. I do not think that a motion so unusual as that made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], to suspend the rules and take up the Indian bill, should on this day have been interposed to prevent the consideration of the motion which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has announced that he desires to make. And therefore, as I have said, I voted against the proposition to second the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] in order that later I might vote so as to insure a consideration of the bill to pension the widows and minor children of Spanish War veterans.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] desires to delay adjournment and postpone the consideration of the appropriation bills, which it is necessary for us to pass in order that we may reach a reasonable adjournment, and I presume that he has done so in order that he might bring before the House a motion to discharge committees from the consideration of two bills of his own that are now pending before the House. Although the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] did not refer to his own bill, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], to whom he yielded, referred to the bill for him. This side of the House is certainly committing a very grave crime against the country in not allowing the committee to be discharged from this bill on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield; yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The question is not pending upon any motion to discharge. The question is to try to get through a motion to discharge a committee under the rules, and the gentleman makes his own construction as to what bill I intend to move to discharge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], to whom the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] yielded, indicated what the gentleman from Massachusetts desired to do. At least he said he indicated it. I will ask the gentleman if it was his purpose, if this motion was voted down, to move to discharge the Committee on Pensions from the consideration of H. R. 1709, to pension widows and minor children of officers or enlisted men who served in the War with Spain?

Mr. GARDNER. There are some half dozen bills that we have been having under consideration. For instance, there is the antilobbying bill, which we are considering.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand; but that is not the question I asked the gentleman. The gentleman has the first place on the Discharge Calendar.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; the first and second.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted to ask whether it was the gentleman's purpose to move to discharge the committee from the consideration of that pension bill.

Mr. GARDNER. That will develop after we get to the Discharge Calendar and after I have consulted with other members of the minority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then it is very evident that, although the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is anxious to have the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts considered, the gentleman from Massachusetts is not so earnest in the proposition that he is willing to confess before the country the paternity of his own bill; and very properly so, Mr. Speaker.

I only rose for the purpose of demonstrating to the House and letting the RECORD show that this motion and effort to delay this appropriation bill is merely to create a political record. As a matter of fact, the Committee on Pensions has already authorized the chairman of that committee to report a bill pensioning the widows and orphans of soldiers who fought or served in the Spanish War. That bill will go to the calendar in a few days. The only thing that could be accomplished by the gentleman from Massachusetts if he made a motion on the very first bill on the Discharge Calendar would be to put it on the calendar for consideration by the House.

Now, the committee having this matter in charge have agreed to do so, but the report has been delayed for a good reason, a reason that ought to address itself to the gentleman from Massachusetts. The bill as originally introduced read: "That from and after the passage of this act if any officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, either as a Regular or a Volunteer, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without means of support, that a pension shall be granted."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am informed that if the bill was reported to the House with that language these officers and enlisted men, although 90 days had expired from the date of their enlistment to the time of their discharge, if they were away from the Army on a furlough during that time they would not come within the terms of this bill and their widows would not be entitled to a pension. The result would be that if you passed the bill in that way, the next year, or possibly next month, the members of a number of regiments engaged in the Spanish war would be back here at the doors of Congress saying that Congress had discriminated against their regiments because they happened to be on a furlough subject to call and not actually in camp.

Now, I understand from the chairman of the committee that although he has been authorized to report the bill, he desires another meeting of his committee in order that they may make an amendment to the bill that will broaden it sufficiently to cover these cases and not require Congress to legislate in reference to the subject again. That is the immediate cause of the bill not being reported and on the calendar to-day. The House could accomplish nothing by moving to discharge the committee on this bill. It will go to the calendar in better shape for consideration and in better condition to be acted upon.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. Why, if I made the motion? I only ask that we get to the Discharge Calendar under the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that there is a very good reason. There is no sense in this House wasting its time and the legislative time of the country. If this bill is going to be reported, as the gentleman from Massachusetts knows it is——

Mr. GARDNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he was not present in the committee as a spectator when the report was authorized?

Mr. GARDNER. By no manner of means. The chairman refused to call the meeting to order, although there was a majority of the subcommittee present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman this question: Does he not know that a report on this bill has been authorized by the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. GARDNER. Some time ago I was told so, and I asked that something be done about it, as I have asked many times during the last three or four years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This bill was authorized to be reported by the committee, voted out of committee last Wednesday. It is nothing unusual to allow the chairman a few days in which to write up the report on an important bill of this kind, especially as we know that the bill could not be reached for consideration in the House before Friday week.

Mr. GARDNER. It could have been reached to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How?

Mr. GARDNER. By a motion to suspend the rules, as I suggest.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Massachusetts thinks it a great crime that we should suspend the rules and take up for consideration one of the great appropriation bills in this House that it is necessary to pass in order that the machinery of the Government may go on, and yet he says himself that if the bill had been reported to the House he would favor moving away from the Discharge Calendar and suspending the rules and passing the bill. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the gentleman's position in reference to this matter but an effort, and a very lame effort, to reflect on the committee that has already indicated to this House that it is prepared and willing to do its duty to the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY].

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I assumed the acting chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions one week ago Wednesday. In the short space of time of one week from the time I assumed chairmanship the Committee on Pensions voted to report out a bill designed to grant pensions to minor children and widows of Spanish War veterans. The gentleman has indicated that this side of the House is seeking delay. I want to deny that anything like that exists on this side of the House. It is true the committee did authorize the chairman to report this bill, and at that time I stated to the committee that I was of the impression that it would be an exceedingly difficult matter to report the bill without an accompanying report, and, in fact, I doubted if it could be done, and after consulting the parliamentarians of the House I learned that the matter could be accomplished only by unanimous consent. The matter referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is a matter which should be considered by the committee, and I propose to bring same to their attention at the earliest date practicable. The delay of a day or two in reporting this bill to the House will in no wise endanger its passage, and for the reason stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] I have deferred asking the House for unanimous consent. This bill will be reported to the House in the regular order in a few days.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to use some time now?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think, if this motion prevails, that any reflection whatever is cast on the Committee on Pensions. I would not knowingly cast a vote with that object or motive in view. I think, however, that we have waited long enough for an opportunity to vote upon a bill to pension the widows of Spanish-American War veterans. It seems to me this is rather a fitting time for us to pass such a law. It was just 16 years ago that the battleship Maine was sunk in Habana Harbor. Every Member of this House knows a large number of widows who are in a penniless and suffering condition in his district. They need assistance. They ought to have it. There is no argument in favor of granting a pension by a grateful country to its citizen soldiers that does not apply to this case. We have been informed, I think, for the past three or four years that the Committee on Pensions would not entertain a special bill to pension a widow of a Spanish-American War veteran; and why? Because they expected soon to report out a general law. We have been waiting for that—waiting with great patience. We now have an opportunity to consider and pass such a law. We should not, in my judgment, let this opportunity go by. If this motion prevails, the bill will be up in due time for consideration on the calendar. Such a small amendment as has been referred to by the gentleman from Alabama

[Mr. UNDERWOOD], of course, can be made then without any difficulty at all.

Mr. Speaker, I have little sympathy with the argument that we should not waste the time of the House. Waste the time of the House! Why, that is about what is done half of the time this body is in session, in one way or another. However that may be, we can at no time do a higher service to our country than by passing a law of this kind here and now. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS].

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the merits of this bill for the pensioning of widows and children of the Spanish-American soldiers, but rather to state in a few words the trouble that we have had in securing a report from the Committee on Pensions, which has had this bill under consideration. The first of the year I made a motion for the appointment of a subcommittee to hear all the Members who had introduced bills upon this subject, and while Mr. CRISP was acting chairman of the committee he appointed a subcommittee for this purpose, consisting of himself, Mr. KEATING, and myself, following which he resigned from the committee, and Mr. KEY of Ohio succeeded him. The time was finally fixed for this subcommittee to meet, and nothwithstanding that two members of the subcommittee were present, notwithstanding that a majority of the Members who had introduced bills on this subject were present and desired to be heard, the chairman of the committee took the arbitrary position that no meeting of this subcommittee could be held, owing to the absence of one of its members. The matter went over, and on last Wednesday, at the regular meeting of the committee, I called this bill up in committee, and the chairman of the committee was instructed by the committee to make a favorable report on the bill that day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has no right to refer to what happened in the committee room.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on that point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule is explicit. The gentleman can not discuss what happened in the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. But what about the subcommittee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is discussing what happened in the committee, and the Chair sustains the point of order and admonishes the gentleman he must proceed in order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the records of committees are not the records of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule of the House is that what transpires in committee can not be discussed in the House.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, but——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman. He has already ruled on the question.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the Chair permit the gentleman to put a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not take the gentleman from Tennessee off the floor with a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will submit his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not the rule of the House that at the end of each session all of the records of every committee must be turned in to the Clerk of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not submitted a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has ruled on the question of order that was raised, and the gentleman has not submitted any question that is now in order. The gentleman from Tennessee has one minute remaining.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, if I am not permitted to discuss what transpired in the committee, I am at least, I suppose, permitted to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY], who is the acting chairman of the committee, whether or not it is a fact that he was directed by this committee on a roll call of the committee, by a vote of 9 to 3, to report this bill to the House on last Wednesday?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I will state that it is true that the committee did authorize that bill to be reported to the House, and at the time, as I stated before to the gentleman from Massachusetts, there was some question in the minds of the committee as to whether that bill could be properly reported to this House without the same being accompanied by a report. The committee was not in possession of certain estimates and information that had been called for from the Commissioner of Pensions——

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts use some more of his time?

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman intend to conclude in one speech?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, on the 16th day of January, 1911, the moment had come, as it has come now, when the Discharge Calendar could be reached. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs at that time was Mr. Hull, of Iowa. He tried to get the House away from the awkward bills on the Discharge Calendar, under similar circumstances to those which now face us, by offering a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Army appropriation bill. He did not move to suspend the rules. He thought that a majority vote would do the business. His motion, he supposed, did not require a two-thirds vote, which the pending motion requires.

On that occasion the gentleman who is now in the Chair raised the point of order that the motion to take up the Army appropriation bill was not in order with the Discharge Calendar pending. It is in consequence of what happened that day that the gentleman from Texas has been obliged to move to suspend the rules. What did happen on that day? Mr. Speaker Cannon in the chair ruled that the appropriation bill was so important that it must be held to be in order. He explained how the appropriation bills with a yearly average of a thousand million dollars were a great portion of the work of the House, and he said that in spite of the new rule for a Discharge Calendar those appropriation bills were of such vast importance that he must hold the motion of Mr. Hull in order. Then what happened? An appeal was taken from Mr. Speaker Cannon's ruling, and the House overruled him. The House voted the Discharge Calendar in order, and one of the gentlemen who voted to overrule the decision of the Chair about these great important appropriation bills was the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD.] [Applause on the Republican side.]

So now, Mr. Speaker, the motion is not in order and it is against the rules to supersede the Discharge Calendar by an appropriation bill, hence this motion to suspend the rules by a two-thirds vote. It has been said that I am endeavoring to get up the Spanish War widows' pension bill. How does anyone know that for a fact? In a minute I shall tell you frankly just what bill I hope to see considered. So far as appears as yet, I merely seek to reach the Discharge Calendar. Why, this Discharge Calendar is full of good legislation that we ought to get at. There are excellent bills high up on the calendar, one introduced by Mr. ESCH and another by Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with regard to the safety of employees and travelers upon railways. Then there is Mr. ROGERS's antilobby bill. There are many bills now sleeping in committees well up on the Discharge Calendar if we can ever reach it. Now, Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Before the gentleman—will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did I understand the gentleman to state that the situation which arose at the time the Army bill was proposed to be brought before the House in 1911 was the same as the situation to-day?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I quite explained the difference. Members were trying to get at the Discharge Calendar then as they are now. A moment ago I explained that it was in consequence of the Chair's decision being overruled at that time that this suspension motion becomes necessary at the present time. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that if the pending motion of the gentleman from Texas fails of its two-thirds vote, the first matter on the Discharge Calendar automatically becomes the pending question. No one need make any motion at all. The first bill on the Discharge Calendar is the Spanish War widows' bill, placed there on my motion. If you defeat this motion to suspend the rules, you can get at that bill. It will be the regular business in order. You can not get away from it, providing anybody says let us have that bill up and put it on the calendar, and you can amend it. But, Mr. Speaker, I have not the slightest objection, if the gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the subcommittee on the widows' bill, chooses to call it up. What we want to see is action. We tried for unanimous consent——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman does not believe for a minute under the rules of this House that a motion to pass the bill will be considered to-day?

Mr. GARDNER. The bill will go to the Union Calendar. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. As I was saying when the gentleman rose, the situation is this: All through the last Congress, until too late for the Senate to act, we could not get the Spanish War widows' bill up except by unanimous consent. When we managed to get it up under unanimous consent, somebody on the Democratic side of the House objected. We tried our best. We have been trying to get at this bill all through this Congress. In response to a belated call, we appeared before a subcommittee of the Pensions Committee. There was a majority of that subcommittee present. Against my protest, the chairman refused to call that subcommittee to order. He would not do it. There were Members of the House present ready to be heard. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can not yield any more. Then, over my protest——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can yield to a point of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not state what occurred in a committee.

Mr. GARDNER. This was a subcommittee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point of order that that is subject to the same rule as the full committee.

Mr. GARDNER. I leave it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A portion of a committee is the same as the committee itself.

Mr. GARDNER. Very well. If that is the case, I might rise to a question of privilege. The privileges of the House were violated if a subcommittee is the same as the committee itself. To refuse to call a committee of the House to order when a quorum is present clearly presents a question of the privileges of the House. As a matter of fact, I am not stating what occurred in committee, as the subcommittee was never called to order.

Since this occurrence, I have requested and advised the chairman of that subcommittee to get the consent of the Speaker to recognition for suspension of the rules. Suspension days do not come along very often. Everyone in this Hall who knows the rules knows that fact. Here was our chance to-day, and no one was on hand. I telephoned to the gentleman's office twice. I could not get a reply. That is why I have taken this step in the hope that the House will take action to-day to the extent of putting this bill on the Union Calendar. If that could be done, the bill would, in all probability, be reached this year, and there would be time enough to pass it through the Senate and enact it into law before this Congress expires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as I predicted in the beginning, the gentleman from Massachusetts has demonstrated the purpose of his attack, which is to put this pension bill on the calendar. Now, if there can never be a greater criticism leveled against this side of the House than the attack of the gentleman from Massachusetts, we certainly can go unharmed throughout our political career. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman seeks to make a mountain out of a molehill. He says that we to-day stand in the same position as his party did four years ago, when it became necessary for the militant minority to establish a principle in this House that the majority of this House should govern, whether it was along party lines or not. We were fighting for the substance there; we were fighting for the right to consider substantial legislation. The gentleman from Massachusetts fights for the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. I desire to call his attention to the fact that for 14 years after the Spanish War his party was in power——

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it was not until last Congress——

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just a minute. It was not until the last Congress, when the Democratic Party was in power in this House, that a bill of this kind reached the calendar.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Spanish War Veterans did not formulate the demand until that time, is he not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know anything about the Spanish War veterans, but if this bill is just toward these widows and orphans, if the Spanish War veterans did not formulate their demand before, it is to their discredit, and if it is not just it does not make any difference who made the demand. But the gentleman can not avoid the responsibility of his own party for 14 years when there was an opportunity to enact legislation of this kind, and they refused and failed to do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But in the last Congress a bill of this kind went to the calendar, came here for the consideration of the House, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], well aware that a committee of this House had authorized its chairman to report the bill to the House so that it would go on the calendar, seeks to take advantage of this opportunity to decry and criticize the committee that has been honestly attending to its business and has authorized a report for the consideration of this measure. And the gentlemen on that side of the House——

Mr. GARDNER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman, under the ruling of the Chair, can not mention what happened in committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not aware of what happened in committee, and if I was referring to what happened in committee I am not aware of it. I was referring to the committee, and not to what happened in the committee.

The gentlemen on that side of the House, from their remarks, although I am satisfied the gentleman from Massachusetts knew better, if the others did not, seemed to assume that if this motion was taken up on the Discharge Calendar the bill would come up for action this afternoon in the House. Why, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who is a good parliamentarian, knows perfectly well—and he should have explained to his colleagues on that side of the House the parliamentary situation, so that they would not have been misled—that if his motion prevailed for the consideration of this bill what would have happened. It would not have come up for consideration. It would merely have gone to the calendar, and the House in regular order, on a pension Friday, could take it up for consideration.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman say that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Say what?

Mr. GARDNER. That a general pension bill for the Spanish War would be in order on Friday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said on a "pension Friday."

Mr. GARDNER. I think not.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman is mistaken about that. It would be in order on the call of the committees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it is not taken up, then it would be on the call of the committees, and the proposition I make is that you would not advance the position of this bill one iota by discharging this committee and putting it on the calendar to-day ahead of the position it will occupy if you can wait until another Wednesday comes around. Then the Pension Committee may have its regular meeting and report the bill back with this much-needed amendment and do justice to these people.

Now, that is all there is in the situation. There is no reason for it on earth. I might say that possibly gentlemen on that side of the House realize that for 14 years they neglected the rights of these people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, when they see the Democratic Party preparing to legislate, with a committee preparing to report this bill, they come out here at the last minute with a cry of "Stop thief," in order that they may try to make the country think they are enthusiastic about legislation that they have remained silent about until their political opponents indicated that they were prepared to put it on the statute books.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted?

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds had voted in favor thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for a division. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing the resolution will rise and stand in their places until they are counted. [After counting.] Seventy-five gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-seven gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this question the ayes are 75 and the noes are 37.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks for tellers. All in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number of gentlemen have arisen.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on account of the lateness of the hour it is evident that we can not make progress with the bill this afternoon, so much time having been consumed. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the House adjourn. As many as are in favor of the motion will so signify by answering "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 163, nays 91, answered "present" 3, not voting 175, as follows:

In conformity with custom and in token of our common faith, the Chaplain of the Senate will offer prayer to God the Father, God the Redeemer, and God the Comforter.

Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the midst of the darkening shadows of life's great mystery we turn our faces toward Thee. Between the dark mount of sorrow and the bright mountain of prayer, we would come where only the voice of God is heard. The heaven of heavens can not contain Thee, much less this earthly house of our ambitions and dreams. We may not compass Thee with our thought of life, but we know by the instinct of love and the far-reaching grasp of faith that Thou hast made us for an infinite purpose. It is not Thy will that we should perish utterly. Thou art the God of our fathers, and Thou art not the God of the dead, but of the living. Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting; our home is with Thee.

Do Thou, we beseech Thee, speak unto us this day, that we may live. We bless Thee that Thou hast not left Thyself without a witness among men. Thy hand has been laid upon mighty men in church and state, and Thou hast thrust them out to guide us into the fuller life.

We bless Thee for the life and work of this great man. We praise Thee that the hand of death was not laid upon him until he had spoken his message to the world and had sent forth the influence of a devoted life into the soul of our Nation.

Endowed with a physical form which was animated by a presence full of the repose of self-mastery, confident through a rich and varied scholarship, inflexible by reason of a consecrated will, dominant with a purpose of lofty aim, he has faced and fulfilled the great demands of a faithful Senator. Sustained by a faith in the goodness of thy plan and inspired by a zeal for peace for the world, he has measured up to the standard of Christian leadership.

But now, O God, what issues lie back of a life like this? Thy call to-day is to living men. With the light breaking about us at the dawn of a new day, we invoke Thy continued blessing. Still lay Thy hand upon mighty leaders among us. Bless those who have been called to places of authority and power among us. May their authority be justified by divine wisdom and their power sanctified by Thy grace.

Make us a Christian Nation, with no other message than that of peace and good will among men. Come to all hearts that sorrow. With the tender touch of infinite sympathy and pity do Thou heal the broken hearted. Let the vision of that one far-off divine event cheer and sustain the weary pilgrim of the night. Hasten the day of Thy coming. We wait upon Thee through the revelation of the Son of God, and even in this hour of sadness we may sound the pæan of Christian victory, "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." Unto Him be power, and glory, and dominion forever. Amen.

Right Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington, read portions of the burial service of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and also recited the Apostles' Creed and the hymn beginning:

Abide with me, fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens, Lord, with me abide.

Then followed appropriate collects from the Book of Common Prayer.

The benediction was pronounced by the Chaplain of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Into the loving hands of the committees of Congress and the officers of the Senate we consign the mortal body of our well-beloved Senator to be by them conveyed to his home in the State of Georgia, there to be deposited in its final resting place. May his labors in the cause of constitutional liberty long bless the Republic. The committee of arrangements, conducted by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, will escort the remains of the deceased Senator from the Chamber to the Union Station and from thence to the place of burial in the State of Georgia. The guests of the Senate will depart in the inverse order of their entrance.

The invited guests having retired from the Chamber,

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, February 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We can not always trace the way where Thou, Almighty God our heavenly Father, dost move. But we fervently pray for that unbounded faith which shall enable us to put our whole trust in Thee, assured that whatsoever Thou dost order for us is better than anything that we could desire for ourselves. With such a faith help us to take up the work before us, acting ever in consonance with the dictates of our conscience, leaving the results to Thee. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE SENATOR BACON.

The SPEAKER. The managers of the Senate have sent word to the Chair that they have room in the Senate for the Members and officers elect of the House, but they have no room for anyone else.

HYGIENE OF THE PAINTER'S TRADE.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution,

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 389.

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to have printed 16,000 copies of House Document No. 1477, Sixty-second Congress, third session, entitled "Hygiene of the Painter's Trade."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the form of the resolution is very unusual. It says that the Committee on Printing shall have printed. I do not know that it makes any difference, but would that authorize the cost to be paid out of the congressional appropriation for printing?

Mr. BARNHART. I think that is the usual form.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to put my recollection up against the chairman of the Committee on Printing, but I am very sure that this is an unusual form. The usual form is that "there shall be printed," and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. The phraseology adopted by the gentleman would indicate that they were to be for the use of the committee, whereas they are to be for the use of Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. I think similar resolutions are usually in that form; but, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the resolution for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the resolution.

INVESTIGATION OF SHIPPING COMBINATIONS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

House resolution 402 (H. Rept. 277).

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be, and is hereby, authorized to have printed 4,540 copies of volume 4 of the Proceedings of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the investigation of shipping combinations, under H. Res. 587 of the Sixty-second Congress, second session.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 3, strike out the words "four thousand and five" and insert instead thereof the words "twenty-nine."

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the amendment provides for bringing the number of copies within the number that can be printed for the usual amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PROBATE PROCEDURE—FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES, OF OKLAHOMA.

(H. DOC. NO. 758.)

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

House resolution 385 (H. Rept. 278).

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 55,000 copies of "Rules of procedure in probate matters, adopted by the county judges of the Five Civilized Tribes portion of Oklahoma," together with the resolutions and statements of approval thereto attached.

With the following committee amendment:

Add, at the end of line 5, the following: "40,000 copies for the use of the House folding room; 10,000 copies for the use of the House document room."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the amendment provides putting these copies in the folding room, which, of course, would divide them among all the Members of the House. Is it not quite certain that nine-tenths of the Members of the House have no occasion to use them?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that was talked over with the author of the resolution. It has been the policy of the committee to try to arrange it so that all these documents may be placed for the greatest convenience of those who want to use them. In this particular instance, however, we had no means of knowing how wide the distribution might necessitate. The author of the resolution was satisfied to have it done in this way, because he said he could get enough transfers to take care of his wants.

Mr. MANN. Of course this resolution relates wholly to the probate proceedings in Oklahoma.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; and its ramifications with the decisions of these courts bearing upon matters that interest guardians wherever they may live.

Mr. MANN. I should doubt whether anybody in the House, except a few Members, would make any use of them. The result would be that nearly all of them would be accumulated in the folding room until after awhile they would be sold for waste paper.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would this compilation be of any value to Members having Indian reservations in their districts except in the old Indian Territory?

Mr. BARNHART. I think not.

Mr. GOULDEN. Who is the author of the resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma.

Mr. MILLER. Why would it not be desirable to place a majority of them at the disposal of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. BARNHART. I think some such provision had been made, but they did not have enough, and this is to cover the deficiency. The representation to the committee by the author of the resolution is that there are many guardians of Indian wards and so many court officers in Oklahoma that it was desirable to have this additional number of copies printed. The cost was so insignificant in comparison with the seeming benefits to be derived that the committee reported out the resolution.

Mr. MILLER. I am in harmony with the gentleman's suggestion that the publication is extremely desirable, and the object should be to get the publication where it would do the most good. If the Department of the Interior has no available funds for its publication, then it seems to me that Congress could well afford to do it, and place the copies with the Secretary of the Interior almost entirely.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think it would be benficial to Oklahoma that these rules be published as a document, so that it can be available to the Members of Oklahoma and their constituents, who will probably besiege them for copies, and also available for the attorneys and the judges of the court? Will it not be of great advantage to have this material, prepared and promulgated by Mr. Sells, put into their hands?

Mr. MANN. Under this proposition the gentlemen from Oklahoma would receive very few of these copies.

Mr. MILLER. Of course, what will happen if this prevails is that the Members from Oklahoma will be forced to write 400 or 500 letters to other Members of Congress to request their quota. It seems to me that that could be easily obviated.

Mr. MANN. Would not these go to the folding room, even if the amendment were not agreed to?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; they would.

Mr. MANN. Why not send them to the folding room and let the Oklahoma Members have them?

Mr. BARNHART. For the simple reason that in a good many instances where documents go to the folding room one Member who is more energetic and alert than some other Members who are equally interested with him sometimes goes to the document room and gets such large quantities of them that he leaves none for the others. There is no way of preventing that. The document room has no authority to say who shall and who shall not have these documents, and so long as it was agreeable to the author of the bill we thought best to arrange it in this way, so that other Members who were interested might also get a liberal supply of them.

Mr. MANN. I should think 40,000 copies would furnish to the Oklahoma Members all that they would want.

Mr. BARNHART. I fully agree with the gentleman from Illinois as to that.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, the objective point is to get this document distributed among the people who need it. The Department of the Interior has an organization throughout the Five Civilized Tribes to look after the probate courts in all pending cases, and therefore it seems to me that the Secretary of the Interior ought to have available most of these to distribute through that organization.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that most of the departments have printing allowances.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of them have.

Mr. BARNHART. All of them have printing allowances, and I notice an inclination to unload as much more additional expense as possible upon the House; and inasmuch as it has been furnished by the department so Members can get what they need, the committee thought it best to proceed as we have done.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I hereby submit the following privileged resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 411 (H. Rept. 279).

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to have printed 9,200 copies of the report of the hearings before the Committee on Rules on a resolution establishing a committee on woman suffrage, said hearings having been held on December 3, 4, and 5, 1913, and that the same be distributed through the document room of the House of Representatives.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of line 8 add: "9,000 copies for the use of the House folding room and 200 copies for the use of the House document room."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as read provided that these should be distributed through the document room. Does the gentleman want to strike out that part?

Mr. BARNHART. It is amended. The committee has no right to strike out any part of a resolution without submitting an amendment, and that is what it is sought to do.

Mr. MANN. How will it read as amended?

Mr. BARNHART. Nine thousand copies for the use of the House folding room and 200 copies for the use of the House document room.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it will read the way the gentleman states it.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it will.

Mr. MANN. It says to distribute them. Let us have the resolution read as it would read if amended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it be amended by striking out all of the first and second lines down to the word "printed" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "that there shall be."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as it would read if amended, and then report the Fitzgerald amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to have printed 9,200 copies of the report of the hearings before the Committee on Rules on a resolution establishing a committee on woman suffrage, said hearings having been held on December 3, 4, and 5, 1913, and that the same be distributed through the document room of the House of Representatives, 9,000 copies for the use of the House folding room and 200 copies for the use of the House document room.

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD:

Lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized and directed to have" and insert the words "there shall be," so that it will read: "That there shall be printed 9,200 copies of the report," etc.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman would better amend by striking out all after the comma after the word "thirteen," in line 7, and provide that 9,000 copies shall go to the House folding room and 200 for the use of the House document room.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as it would read if the Fitzgerald amendment were adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be printed 9,200 copies of the report of the hearings before the Committee on Rules on a resolution establishing a committee on woman's suffrage, said hearings having been held on December 3, 4, and 5, 1913, and that the same be distributed through the document room of the House of Representatives, 9,000 copies for the use of the House folding room and 200 copies for the use of the House document room.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the amendment would be all right down to line 7, and there I suggest that the gentleman from New York would better further move to amend by striking out all of lines 7 and 8, after the comma in line 7, up to the proposed committee amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to authorize the Committee on Printing to have printed documents for the use of the House. When the House orders documents printed it orders them printed, not through the instrumentality of any committee if they are to be used by the House. It is only when documents are to be printed for the use of some particular committee that the committee is authorized to have the printing done. This resolution provides the documents shall be printed to be placed to the credit of Members in the folding room and distributed through the document room, and the House orders that without the intervention of the Committee on Printing. The Committee on Printing does its part when it reports the resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will accept the amendment. I do not think it amounts to anything.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will move to strike out that part which says, "distributed through the document room," because the document room can not distribute documents except——

Mr. BARNHART. That is what I suggested to the gentleman from New York to perfect his amendment, but he did not seem disposed to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not carry the language of the whole resolution in my head.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the comma, in line 7, after the word "thirteen," down to and including the word "Representatives," in line 8.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of lines 7 and 8, after the word "thirteen."

Mr. BARNHART. Including the word "Representatives," in line 8.

The CLERK. Down to and including the word "Representatives," in line 8.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask to have the resolution read as it would be amended if the proposed amendments are adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be printed 9,200 copies of the report of the hearing before the Committee on Rules on a resolution establishing a committee on woman suffrage, said hearings having been held on December 3, 4, and 5, 1913, 9,000 copies for the use of the House folding room and 200 copies for the use of the House document room.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 12579.

The SPEAKER. Before the motion is put the Chair will announce that the Senate requests that the House come over at 12.45.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, or loss of water rights, including expenses of necessary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects and power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of June 25, 1910, $335,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress; for pay of one chief inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $4,000; one assistant inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500; for traveling and incidental expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, including sleeping-car fare and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field and away from designated headquarters, $4,200; in all, $345,700: Provided also, That not to exceed seven superintendents of irrigation, six of whom shall be skilled irrigation engineers and one competent to pass upon water rights, and one field cost accountant, may be employed: Provided further, That the proceeds of sales of material utilized for temporary work and structures and money refunded in connection with any irrigation system or reclamation project within the jurisdiction of the Indian Service shall be covered into the appropriation made therefor and be available for the purpose of the appropriation; and for lands irrigable under any such system or project the Secretary of the Interior may fix maintenance charges which shall be paid as he may direct, such payments to be available for use in maintaining the project or system for which collected: Provided further, That all moneys expended heretofore, herein, or hereafter under this provision shall be reimbursable where the Indians have adequate funds to repay the Government, such reimbursements to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to apportion the cost of any irrigation project constructed for Indians and made reimbursable out of tribal funds of said Indians in accordance with the benefits received by each individual Indian so far as practicable from said irrigation project, said cost to be apportioned against such individual Indian under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph. I notice the proviso, the lower half of page 3, reads:

Provided further, That the proceeds of sales of material utilized for temporary work and structures, and money refunded in connection with that irrigation system or reclamation projects within the jurisdiction of the Indian Service shall be covered into the appropriation made therefor and be available for the purpose of the appropriation.

Now, may I ask the gentleman, Under these irrigation projects do settlers go on the land in many cases, not Indians, and pay to the Government a portion of the cost of the irrigation plant?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are required to do that under the rules and regulations of the Interior Department; they have both jurisdiction of the department of irrigation and the Indian Department.

Mr. MANN. These payments will continue after the irrigation improvements are complete.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Until the 10 years expire under the reclamation law.

Mr. MANN. Well, they are supposed to pay a portion in the course of time of the cost of the irrigation project.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. These payments continue until the project is completed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Now, what is the purpose of requiring that these sums shall be covered into the appropriation and be made available without any further appropriation of Congress?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, the hearings will disclose that the reason it goes into the appropriation is this, that in many States irrigation projects are about completed on Indian reservations and it is necessary to move them across country to some other State, sometimes a great distance, and it is better to sell the property there than to move it to some other place.

Mr. MANN. I am not referring to that portion in reference to the proceeds of sales of material utilized for temporary work in construction, but under this provision if a settler goes onto one of these projects and takes up the land and then pays into the Government his proportionate share of the cost of the irrigation project that is covered into that appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was not the intention. That was not the recommendation of the department.

Mr. HAYDEN. As to this proviso, I can quote the language of Mr. Meritt justifying it. He said:

That can be explained in this way: Under the comptroller's decision the proceeds from the sale of irrigation property which has been used on these projects are required to go back into the Treasury instead of being used for irrigation purposes again, and we are asking that this language be incorporated in the bill so that we can avoid that process.

Mr. MANN. I have already explained I was not asking about that.

Mr. HAYDEN. It was not the intention of the committee to permit construction charges paid by a settler upon a project to go back into the fund and be reappropriated.

Mr. MANN. What does this language mean?—

And money refunded in connection with any irrigation system or reclamation project within the jurisdiction of the Indian Service—

To what does that refer?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That referred merely to money received from the sale of material.

Mr. MANN. Besides that, there is the other item, to the effect that the proceeds from sales of material utilized for temporary work and structures shall be covered into the fund.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was not the intention of the committee, and my idea is that the language had best be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 3, lines 18, 19, and 20, as follows:

And money refunded in connection with any irrigation system or reclamation project within the jurisdiction of the Indian Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the language referred to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point of order is conceded by us.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice, on page 4, at the top of the page, the following:

Provided further, That all moneys expended heretofore, herein, or hereafter under this provision shall be reimbursable—

And so forth.

I would like to ask if there is any space of time between "heretofore" and "hereafter"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The reason for that was that it was suggested by the department it was necessary to make this permanent law. We have been carrying this language indefinitely, year after year.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the question I asked may be hypercritical. Of course, you do not spend any money "herein." It is an appropriation. Money appropriated here must be spent hereafter. If you spend money herein hereafter, what is the use of "herein"? I move to strike out the word "herein."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 2, strike out the word "herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, correction of sanitary defects in Indian homes, $260,000: Provided, That so much of the act of March 3, 1913 (36 Stat. L., p. 1075), as authorizes the sale and conveyance of the lands, buildings, and other appurtenances of the old Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and not to exceed $10,000 of the amount herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the equipment and maintenance of said buildings for hospital purposes for the use and benefit of such Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may designate: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection and equipment of hospitals for the use of Indians; and no hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $15,000, including equipment: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually a detailed report as to all moneys expended in the erection of hospitals as provided for herein: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, employ physicians regularly licensed to practice to aid in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph without requiring such employed physicians to pass any civil-service examination: Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find any Indian afflicted with tuberculosis, trachoma, or other contagious or infectious diseases, he may, if in his judgment the health of the afflicted Indian or that of other persons require it, isolate, remove, or quarantine such afflicted Indian in a hospital or other place for treatment. The Secretary of the Interior may employ such force as may be necessary in the isolation, removal, quarantine, or medical treatment of such Indian, and it shall be the duty of such Indian so afflicted to obey any order or regulation made by the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out this provision.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for, and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,440,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein or hereafter, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be paid any employee in any position in the Indian school service who does not hold a certificate showing that such employee has passed the necessary examination required by the Civil Service Commission for such position, except such employees as are exempt under civil-service rules, and no part of it shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made: Provided further, That $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman state any specific objection that he wishes to raise?

Mr. MANN. First, I would like to ask in reference to the detailed report as to money expended in the erection of hospitals. We require so many detailed reports now from the Indian Service that I am sure that no one ever reads them carefully, and, in fact, they do not make them very carefully. What does the gentleman mean in this case by "detailed report"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That means at what points the hospitals are now being erected, the number of patients in those hospitals, and the amount it costs per bed, and relates to the service we have in the hospitals—nurses, physicians, and so on. All that is included.

Mr. MILLER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Surely. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER. I have no doubt that the reason suggested by the chairman of the committee will be of the utmost interest, and I think it ought to be followed in another connection, but under this provision I call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior is required only to report the actual expenditures of money, which would contemplate, as I view it, the places where the hospitals are erected and the amounts paid in the building and equipping of the hospitals.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks, then, that the detailed report would not really be a detailed report, but simply a report of the places and the amounts expended at different places.

Mr. MILLER. Precisely. My reason is that we want to know where these are built, and it is provided in the bill that the Secretary shall inform us. In other words, as years go by we will continue this appropriation, and we want to know where the hospitals are being located.

Mr. MANN. Then, I want to ask the gentleman what is contemplated by the last sentence:

The Secretary of the Interior may employ such force as may be necessary in the isolation, removal, quarantine, or medical treatment of such Indians.

Mr. MILLER. Will the chairman of the committee yield to me to answer the gentleman?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Surely. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. I drew that phraseology myself in an effort to correct the phraseology which was drawn by the department to cover this point. I am willing to say at the outset that I have no pride of opinion, either in the purpose or in the phraseology. It is desired on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to reach a condition that seems necessary to reach. In administering the health and sanitary laws among the Indian tribes it has been found in some places that so-called medicine men have more influence with the Indians than do the physicians, and it is not infrequently found that the savage rites will be performed to cure disease when the physician is right there. Now, that may suffice, possibly, for situations that are not grave, but where the patients are afflicted with tuberculosis, with trachoma and smallpox, and perhaps with other skin diseases, or with diseases of a very virulent, infectious, or contagious character, some power seems necessary to be given to the Secretary of the Interior to enable him to act in spite of the medicine men. Now, I realize, as I told the committee when I was drafting this, that to give the Secretary this power we were giving him an opportunity to exercise the greatest police power, likely, that has ever been given by organized society to any individual.

Very likely it should be drafted with extreme care, having regard to the contingencies that might arise of a legal nature.

Mr. MANN. Are not many of these Indians American citizens?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; a good many of them are, I should say.

Mr. MANN. What would the gentleman say about the practicability or desirability or constitutionality of a provision to the effect that the gentleman himself should take any medicine that his doctor happened to prescribe, and if the gentleman did not do it voluntarily he could be held down and forced to take it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. There is no question but that that query could be answered in only one way—it would be unconstitutional.

Mr. MANN. Does not the same thing apply to Indians who are American citizens?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think it is as broad as that.

Mr. MANN. It says, "medical treatment, such as may be necessary." That is left probably with the doctor who has not the same professional attainments as those of the doctor who would be called in to prescribe for my distinguished friend, and yet if the Indian does not take the medicine that is prescribed for him he is to be forced to take it. I doubt very much the desirability of undertaking to enact legislation of that kind to that extent. I do not have a great deal of confidence in all the agents employed to enforce such legislation.

Mr. MILLER. Neither have I.

Mr. MANN. Most of them, probably, are perfectly competent, but once in a while such a man in a position of authority goes at it with a sledge hammer and raises a row and makes trouble everywhere.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this language is to give authority to remove him from the place where the afflicted Indian is to a place where he would not communicate the disease he suffers from whether it be consumption or tuberculosis or trachoma or whatever it might be. The difficulty that the department has had in treating these serious cases is in getting the Indian away from his place of residence, his home, or his tepee, or whatever it may be. Very little is said about the matter of medicine. The difficulty is in getting the Indians to appreciate the fact that they are liable to communicate the diseases with which they are afflicted to their relatives and the immediate members of their family.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly that is the case with white people, too.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; but there is not any question but that white people afflicted with communicable diseases and contagious diseases are taken to the hospitals or pest houses and there isolated no matter what degree of American citizenship they may possess.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that in this city we see the yellow flag up very often?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is for the purpose of notifying the public, so as not to interfere with the family. I have been, unfortunately, quarantined myself.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; it must be observed that this language is broader than that necessary to include simply communicable diseases or contagion and infection.

After thinking quite a great deal about this particular clause, I am of opinion that it ought to remain. However, if forced to, I will say that I do not think it is constitutional. I do not think it would stand, in some cases, a severe legal test; but I do think it would be of the utmost value to the Secretary of the Interior to have this law. As will be observed, the language of the paragraph permits him to use his discretion to a very large extent. I presume he would use his discretion in a doubtful or difficult case.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that a few years ago the American Medical Society made a proposition not quite like this, but somewhat along these lines, as to the powers to be conferred upon the Public Health Service, and there went up such a general condemnation of the proposition throughout the United States that I do not think you could find anybody now who would admit that he ever fathered the proposition or favored it.

Now, I do not believe that we ought to start in to say that an administrative officer shall have the power to compel anybody to take such medicine as some doctor or somebody else who may not be a doctor shall prescribe, to take it by force if he will not take it voluntarily. I do not know how the gentleman is, but occasionally I have a doctor called in, who prescribes medicine for me, and usually I do not take it, and I get well quicker without it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire if the gentleman's objection goes only to the medical treatment or does it go also to the isolation and quarantine.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, let me offer this amendment: On page 6, line 2, strike out "or medical treatment."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will be satisfied with that provision I will make a point of order only on that part of it. But, then, if we have to fight it over later on a Senate amendment I would move to strike out the whole proposition.

Mr. MILLER. I think the proposition of the gentleman is a better one—that it shall go out on a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agree that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Of course the whole thing is subject to a point of order. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the language on page 6, in lines 2 and 3, "or medical treatment." Then I move to insert between the words "removal" and "quarantine" the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 6, line 2, by inserting between the words "removal" and "quarantine" the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee a question, to ascertain whether or not this paragraph embraces a recommendation of the Interior Department for the equipment and maintenance of a hospital at Fort Lapwai in the sum of $55,000?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that several places, Fort Lapwai among them, were recommended as suitable places for building hospitals for the treatment of trachoma, tuberculosis, and so forth. After the committee investigating those matters came back and reported, the committee decided not to recommend any particular place, but to leave the matter to the department as to where these hospitals should be located. We were especially requested to investigate New Mexico, to find a place where patients could receive treatment in a hospital. We reported against that, and reported in favor of putting them where they would be most needed. We have recommended an appropriation of $60,000 for that purpose. The Secretary could put one at Fort Lapwai or any place he deems fit. We have turned down the proposition to have one general hospital.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not care necessarily to have the particular sanitarium designated by name, but I am anxious that there shall be a sufficient amount included in the bill to take care of the institution at that point.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is $60,000 included.

Mr. FRENCH. The fact is that at Fort Lapwai we are making use at the present time of the old post buildings there. I assume that that sanitarium can be administered at a minimum of expense. I would call the attention of the House to the fact that at Fort Lapwai a sanitarium has been maintained for several years. Fort Lapwai is situated in the heart of the old Nez Perce Reservation. There are some 1,200 members in that old Nez Perce Tribe scattered about that section of country, and it has appeared from reports that have recently been made that nearly all the members of that tribe are afflicted with tuberculosis.

A doctor who made an examination of the Indians on the Nez Percé Reservation within the last three years has reported that 75 per cent of the Indians in his judgment are so afflicted, and that of 400 families that he examined there, only 10 were found to be free from tuberculosis, and that 90 per cent of the deaths on that reservation are due to tuberculosis.

It also happens that scattered throughout the reservation are the people who acquired land at the time when those lands were opened to settlement, and a very deplorable and startling condition exists there that this Congress ought to take care of, either here or in some other place in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is taken care of in the general lump-sum appropriation of $260,000.

Mr. FRENCH. I am very glad to have the gentleman's assurance on that point; and I would say further, in connection with that, that when I visited the institution less than two years ago, more than 20 different tribes were represented among those who had been sent there for treatment.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit me, let me say that the estimate of the Treasury Department contained items for four different hospitals, the Gila River Hospital, in Arizona, $25,000; the Fort Lapwai Hospital, in Idaho, $25,000; the Blackfeet Hospital, in Montana, $25,000; and the Pine Ridge Hospital, in South Dakota, $25,000. All of those items for the separate States were eliminated; and this general item was put in to take care of these hospitals that had been recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and in the estimates.

In addition to that, we provided also for the repair of Fort Spokane, to be used as an additional hospital, perhaps for some of the very Indians my friend is speaking of, from the other side of the reservation, as he knows. So I think there will be ample hospital facilities for all these Indians. In fact, I think they will be the best provided for of any in the service when Fort Lapwai is improved, as it should be, and the other hospital at Fort Spokane is opened up for this purpose.

Mr. FRENCH. I am glad to have the assurance of members of the committee on that point, because it is an important thing for the Indians and for the white people who live among and around them.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Idaho be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Idaho what provision, if any, is made for the treatment of the white settlers who are residing in these sections, whose condition he says is most deplorable? What provision is made for their treatment for tuberculosis particularly?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, as a matter of fact, this Congress does not presume to assist in the medical care or treatment of white people who are living in such communities; but that which the Congress can do and ought to do is to safeguard the health of the Indians, to protect them, and to prevent, if it may be possible, the spread of the plague of tuberculosis among the Indians and among the white people. My judgment is that we can best reach that by the maintenance of just such sanitariums as are maintained at Fort Lapwai and these other places mentioned by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], and by the education of the Indians in the way of caring for themselves and submitting to the experience and advice of doctors in the treatment of the disease.

Mr. GOULDEN. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. FRENCH. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Of course the white settlers and Indians intermingle, and there must of necessity be more or less tuberculosis among the whites. Is there any remedy whatever for that?

Mr. FRENCH. That is the problem that I want to avoid; but I think we can not reach the situation in this Congress other than in the way of prevention, as I have suggested.

Mr. GOULDEN. I presume that the doctors in charge of these sanitariums are authorized to prescribe for the white settlers, are they?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no. The white settlers are not the wards of the Government, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. GOULDEN. I know they are not.

Mr. FRENCH. And they must depend upon their own resources for medical help in the treatment of disease.

Mr. GOULDEN. But living as they do, widely scattered, in a sparsely settled country, they necessarily must be some distance from medical treatment.

Mr. FRENCH. Not necessarily. There are many towns all through that country and good doctors. The point is this: The white settlers know better how to protect themselves against tuberculosis. They know better how to handle the problem of sanitation. They know better how to handle patients after they become afflicted, and how to protect themselves from those who may be afflicted. It is in order to remove the additional danger of having Indians afflicted with tuberculosis circulating among them as freely as they would if no attention was paid to the matter that I want to have the Congress exercise toward the Indians, who are the special wards of the Government, the utmost care looking to the eradication of the disease, for the benefit of the Indians, and also indirectly for the benefit of the whites.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the State maintain any public institution to which these white people may be sent?

Mr. FRENCH. The State maintains no institution of that character.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not a fact that the safety of the white settlers lies in the proper care of the tuberculous Indians?

Mr. FRENCH. I have no doubt that is true, and that is just what I have in mind.

Mr. LAZARO. In other words, early diagnosis, isolation, and proper treatment?

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman is absolutely right, and that the white settlers in order to be protected must necessarily ask that the Government protect the Indians to the best extent possible.

Mr. GOULDEN. Another question for information. Have the white settlers made any effort to establish a sanitarium there or elsewhere in the State for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis?

Mr. FRENCH. Does the gentleman mean separate from this institution?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. There is no sanitarium for the special treatment of tuberculosis among the white people. The white people who live in that country treat the disease just the same as it is treated by white people who live in the gentleman's district and in other parts of the country—some of them by treatment at home, others by going to some other place that they may think is more favorable, or something of that kind.

Mr. LAZARO. I asked the question for information, because I know that some States are building sanitariums for consumptives or tuberculous patients.

Mr. FRENCH. We have no institution of that character in our State.

Mr. LAZARO. Of course there are private institutions, but a good many States are making efforts to establish sanitariums for these patients.

Mr. FRENCH. We have no tuberculosis institutions under the care of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,440,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein or hereafter, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be paid any employee in any position in the Indian school service who does not hold a certificate showing that such employee has passed the necessary examination required by the Civil Service Commission for such position, except such employees as are exempt under civil-service rules, and no part of it shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made: Provided further, That $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

Mr. MANN and Mr. FOWLER reserved points of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the distinguished chairman of the committee the reason for the permanent legislation that is proposed in the paragraph, beginning with the proviso in line 8.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The reason is this: The provision "that no part of this appropriation provided for herein or hereafter, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be paid," and so forth, was inserted because it was desired to make this a permanent law.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not the present civil-service law sufficient to cover these cases?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is only one reason why this language was put in the bill—to make the matrons nurses, so that they should be skilled nurses. In addition to the duties of matron we desired to make them nurses, so that they might know how to take care of these students. There are a great many students in the incipient stage of tuberculosis, trachoma, and other diseases. The physicians in charge of the Indians in the United States, together with Mr. Sells and Mr. Meritt in charge of the Indian Bureau, were strongly in favor of this amendment, and that is the reason the language is in here. They wanted it so that the nurses might be competent to take care of cases of tuberculosis and trachoma in these students. The hearings are full of that question, and the gentleman will find it on pages 104 and 105. The language was drafted by the department.

Mr. FOWLER. My great anxiety about the matter is as to why the civil-service law is not broad enough to cover all the teachers in the Indian schools. I think it is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does do it; but this is only for the purpose of making the matrons and nurses the same, so that we will not duplicate the work, and it will save expense.

Mr. FOWLER. You require the extension of the civil service to these people who are employed as nurses.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As matrons and nurses.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you want to exchange them from the duties of nurses to that of teachers when an expediency might arise?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; we want to combine the two, matrons and nurses, so that the matrons in charge of the rooms would be skilled in nursing and know how to take care of the students in case of sickness. They can perform both functions, save money to the Government, and render more efficient service.

Mr. FOWLER. I see that you have appropriated $20,000 more this year than last year for the same purpose—I mean, including Indian supplies and for necessary things connected therewith.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that there was a great demand over the country for an additional amount to be expended on the hospitals and everything connected with and pertaining to the health of the Indians. The newspaper writers and the people who have visited the various reservations are uniform in their demand. It has reached Congress and the department, and we felt that we must appropriate more money for the health of the Indians in the schools and on the reservations, and that is the reason why the increased appropriation is called for here and also in a separate item.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not complaining of the increased appropriation, because I understand there is new work on account of the extension of the various diseases. I understand that these diseases are very prevalent, and that a strong effort is to be made on the part of the Government to stifle them out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what we do here. We want competent nurses, nurses who have been trained and know how to follow the directions of the physician. Heretofore the matrons have been doing it, but they are not qualified.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think we could get just as good nurses under the civil-service competitive examination as we could get by this new law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You might ask the same question as to the clerks in the various departments. I do not think we can; I think it necessary that they should have some qualifications in order to put them in charge of these schools.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman understands this provision puts the employees in a competitive classified service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Such as the department may require. They make out the examination papers, and they may require a strenuous examination or they may not. That depends upon the rules of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman knows that there is a large class of civil-service employees who are not under the competitive classified service, and I wonder whether it is the intention of the committee to place these under the competitive classified civil service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a matter of regulation for the department entirely.

Mr. FOWLER. The civil-service law to-day leaves it under the supervision of those who have charge of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. FOWLER. For instance, the President might issue an order placing a certain class of employees under the competitive civil-service laws.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, wants to make some inquiries, and I will withhold my point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, under this provision as it reads no employee can be paid out of this fund unless he holds a certificate from somebody that he has passed the civil-service examination. Suppose an engineer in charge of the heating plant of the school dies; are you going to close up the school until they can have a civil-service examination to ascertain who can be appointed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will see that in lines 15 and 16 it says:

Except such employees as are exempt under civil-service rules.

Mr. MANN. I will assume that they are not exempt under civil-service rules.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We presume that the department knew what it was about when it drafted this language.

Mr. MANN. I presume the department did not know, if it did draft this. There is a provision under which you could not make a temporary appointment, no matter how urgent the case might be. Who makes the certificate that an employee has passed the necessary examination required by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Civil Service Commissioners, I presume.

Mr. MANN. To whom do they give those certificates?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To the persons found most competent under the examination.

Mr. MANN. It is a new thing to me if they give certificates to anybody; but this does not require that the appointment shall be made to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But they must hold certificates before they are appointed.

Mr. MANN. That does not say that they shall issue the certificates. A man might write his own certificate under this—that he has passed the civil-service examination. He need not have been appointed to the Civil Service Commission. There may be but 40 applicants and but 1 person to be appointed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman scrutinized the language—

Who does not hold a certificate showing that such employee has passed the necessary examination—

And so forth?

Mr. MANN. That is the very trouble. I have scrutinized the language, and if I had not it might go.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What amendment would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. I suggest that it be stricken out of the bill. In its present form it is absolutely unworkable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] makes the point of order against the entire paragraph?

Mr. FOWLER. Not against the paragraph. I reserved the point of order against the paragraph, but my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], did the same thing.

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to leave it the way it is in the existing law without this change. Of course it is all subject to a point of order as it stands.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that so much of the paragraph under discussion as is contained after the word "provided," in lines 8 and 9, down to and including the word "rules," in line 16, is clearly subject to a point of order, but that so much of that paragraph thereafter down to the colon in line 21 is a restatement of existing law and is not subject to a point of order. It is very wholesome legislation, and I suggest that if the gentleman from Illinois desires to make the point of order to the paragraph, he confine it to so much thereof as is subject to the point of order. Of course the whole paragraph is subject to the point of order if any part of it is, but I suggest that he make that distinction and make the point of order only as to the first part.

Mr. MANN. If it is in order to separate the point of order—and I am not sure that it is—then I make the point of order to the words "or hereafter," in line 10, and to all after the word "be," in line 11, down to and including the word "be," in line 16. That would strike out the new matter and leave it as it is in existing law.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that will make it.

Mr. MILLER. If it can not be done through a point of order, it can be done by amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It seems to me that if the words "or hereafter" are stricken out, then it would not be subject to the point of order. Otherwise it would be limiting an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order on the paragraph, I make the point of order against the language, in line 10, "or hereafter," and to the language after the word "be," in line 11, down to and including the word "be," in line 16.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the first point of order is well taken, but I do not think the latter is, because it is a limitation on an appropriation and is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order with reference to the language referred to from lines 11 to 16.

Mr. MANN. I do not care to discuss the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I will simply make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CARTER. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. MILLER. I trust the gentleman from Texas will concede the point of order as to the first part, because we are bound to lose that anyway.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have already admitted the point of order is well taken, and offer as an amendment the exact language with the words "or hereafter" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the paragraph. The Chair is of opinion that it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I offer as an amendment the same language with the words "or hereafter," in line 10, stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the matter stricken out insert the following:

"For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,440,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be paid any employee in any position in the Indian school service who does not hold a certificate showing that such employee has passed the necessary examination required by the Civil Service Commission for such position, except such employees as are exempt under civil-service rules, and no part of it shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made: Provided further, That $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the language I have already referred to, as contained in the original paragraph, being the language after the word "be" in line 11 down to and including the word "be" in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "be" in line 11 down to and including the word "be" in line 16.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I do not believe in Congress directing how certain employees of the Government shall be appointed. Under the civil-service law that matter is left within the power and discretion of the President, as it is under the Constitution. I understand that the Attorney General recently rendered an opinion to President Wilson that the President had the appointing power unless Congress should confer it upon some other officer, as in some cases is provided by the Constitution.

But the Congress does not have the appointing power. We provide the offices under the civil-service law, and we authorize the President to provide the method of appointment through the Civil Service Commission. Now, here comes in a proposition requiring that certain employees of the Government shall be appointed in a particular manner, and wholly taking it from the power of the President, who has the appointing power. We would have the right to confer the appointing power upon the Secretary of the Interior, the head of the department, but we have no constitutional authority for direction how appointments shall be made. And that is not all. Under the terms of this language which I have moved to strike out there is no authority for making a temporary appointment in the Indian school service. If a teacher dies, if a janitor dies, if an engineer dies, you can not put in anybody to do the work temporarily if these places are covered into the classified service of the Government. Now, what is the object in doing this? Why does the gentleman insist upon trying to take way from the President the power to make these appointments? I am willing to trust the President. Is not the gentleman from Texas willing to trust the present President in regard to these matters?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that the present President could not pass upon the qualifications of a nurse for a school in Idaho, for instance?

Mr. MANN. I am aware of the fact the present President has the power to say that all of these appointments shall be made through the Civil Service Commission, given also power to make temporary appointments under the civil-service law. Now the gentleman seeks to take that power away from the President.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman frankly the reason for it. The department states—and we had them before us—it is very desirable that matrons in these various schools and reservations should be trained as nurses.

Mr. MANN. Then let the department go to the President and cover these places into the classified service. If the President believes it to be proper to do it, he will issue the necessary orders. What do we know about it? If the department can not give the President any more information on the subject than it has given the House, maybe the President would not issue the order, but the President has the power to issue the order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The department itself is desirous of this legislation so they can blend——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the department desires the legislation. Of course, I take his word for it, but we have no information from the department on the subject. If the department wants the legislation, why did not they do the proper thing—ask the President to make an order covering these people into the classified service? The President has the power. We are willing to trust the President. I am opposed to interfering with the right of the President by requiring places to be taken out of the classified service. I am opposed to interfering with the right of the President by requiring places to be placed in the classified service. On your side of the House one day you passed a bill providing that certain places shall not be appointed through the Civil Service Commission. Now you propose to pass a bill requiring that they shall be appointed through the Civil Service Commission. The whole theory of our Government leaves that power to the President, where it ought to be left.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman, as I have stated heretofore, that the reason is this, that in the hearings it was developed that they had a peculiar condition. Heretofore we have had matrons in the various reservations and in the various schools who knew nothing at all about the art of nursing and how to take care of sick pupils under the direction of physicians, and this came from the Indian Service, and they ask for this legislation so that they can take care of those cases of tuberculosis and trachoma, and they state the matrons were incompetent because they were not selected for that purpose and they should be selected for that purpose, and we want to combine the two objects. For that purpose we ask that this language remain in the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. It strikes me, on more mature consideration of this part of the paragraph, that after all we are not doing anything here if we pass it that the President or the Secretary of the Interior can not do now. In other words, if there is any employee at the present time in the Indian school service who is not on the classified list, not under civil service, such person can be removed at any time by the Secretary of the Interior. Therefore, if it is desired on the part of the department to discontinue the services of any employee now in the service, all that is necessary is for an order to be made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the gentleman would not deter them from undergoing an examination?

Mr. MILLER. No; I would not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are many matrons in the service at the present time, and if they are competent nurses, all they would have to do would be to apply for such examination and continue to act as they are now acting.

Mr. MILLER. Of course they would have to do that anyhow. If we desire to put those under the classified service, all those who are not now in the classified service who wanted to get in the classified service could get in by taking the examination. And it seems to me, and I say this with due deliberation, that rather than enact some very questionable phraseology here it might be far wiser to let this part be stricken out. I suggest that to the chairman in all seriousness. There are some features about this, it seems to me, which might be very unfortunate, and we are not really accomplishing anything, because the Secretary of the Interior can do absolutely everything that we provide for in this paragraph. He can to-morrow morning dispense with the services of every person in the employ of the Indian Service who is not on the classified list; and if it is so desired, the President can make an order putting all these positions under the classified service. Then it will be necessary for them to take an examination and pass in order to get back in. If perchance some of them are over the age limit, of course they can not avail themselves of the civil-service examination, and they would be eliminated; but that would not work upon them a hardship greater than would this if it be enacted into law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think that this new provision is an undue interference with the administration by the executive officers of the Indian Service. I can not understand the logic of the chairman of the committee in insisting that every person in the Indian Service should now be subjected to a civil-service examination when the Secretary of the Interior has full and ample power to discharge any incompetent employee. I hope that the gentleman is not using this as a means to get rid of some deserving employees of the Government of long service under the guise that they are inefficient by subjecting them to an artificial test—the civil-service examination—when their experience has qualified them amply for this character of service. The gentleman does not deny that the Secretary of the Interior to-day has full authority not only to discharge incompetent employees, but he has the authority, through the President, to include them in the classified service. Now, why do you make this exception at this time, which may in many instances work an injustice to many faithful employees, including teachers in the Indian schools, who have been connected with the service for 10, maybe 20, years and more and subject them to this artificial literacy test which is so popular on your side of the Chamber in more instances than one and cause them to be superseded by younger applicants who stand higher on the eligible register?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will answer the gentleman in this way: Suppose a gentleman was part Indian, as he knows some of our Members are, and he had children in some of these schools; would he want an incompetent nurse placed over those children if they should become sick? And that is the very object of this.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not the object. It is only the supposed object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, will the gentleman point out the object?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman assumes that the Secretary of the Interior is continuing in employment to-day incompetent employees. He has no right to place that obloquy upon any member of this administration.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. He does not deny that the Secretary of the Interior has full authority to remove incompetents. Does the chairman of the committee mean to say that there is to-day being employed under the Secretary of the Interior any incompetent nurses? I would not make that charge against the Secretary. Does the gentleman make that charge?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not. We have no nurses now. We have matrons.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to matrons, does the gentleman charge that there are any incompetents employed under the Secretary of the Interior? I would not make that serious charge, and that is the implication of the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman makes a charge and then does not give me a chance to answer.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will give the gentleman an opportunity.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Some of the doctors in charge of the Indian Service stated to us repeatedly, and it was so represented by the commission that has been investigating Indian matters, that it would be desirable to have skilled nurses as matrons, and in order to have those skilled nurses they must undergo examination, for the reason that they have charge of the children in the boarding and reservation schools.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing to prevent the Secretary of the Interior providing for competent nurses. It appears to be a veiled attack on our teachers and other faithful employees of the Indian Service under the guise of the much-availed-of ruse of civil-service examinations. The provision should be stricken out.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Before we proceed, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized.

Mr. NORTON. If the Chairman will reply to a question, I desire to ask what effect this amendment will have, if any, upon the status of teachers in the Indian Service at the present time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If there are any teachers in the service at the present time, they are amply provided for here in this bill. It is not the intention to change the law with reference to anything except these matrons. We desire skilled nurses, and we desire that these nurses shall undergo some kind of a civil-service examination. That is the object of the language, which has been pointed out clearly.

Mr. NORTON. The language in the proposed amendment, as I read it, applies to any employee in the Indian Service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That applies to various bands of Indians in various States of the Union and includes all the nurses in the United States wherever wanted. If you read the hearings, you will find the purpose of it.

Mr. NORTON. Are there any matrons now employed who have not taken the examination?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am unable to give the gentleman all information on that subject. We have only had before us the health matter, as stated.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman is pretty thoroughly acquainted with Indian affairs, I am sure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I know something of them.

Mr. NORTON. But at this time you can not say whether this provision would or would not affect the teachers in the service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I know of no teachers at all, personally, that would be affected; but I will state that if there are any in the service that are incompetent the Civil Service Commissioners, after having passed upon the papers and finding them incompetent, would show that they should not remain in the service.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean that the teachers in the Indian Service have come into that service under the civil service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are either there by the civil service or have been covered in, just exactly as the President a year or two ago covered in 100,000 or 200,000 employees before he went out of office.

Mr. STAFFORD. And you protested against that provision. Now, be consistent. Do not extend it to this branch of the service so as to disqualify teachers who have had long and faithful service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This has no effect of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes, it has. It extends to all employees in the Indian Service. How can the gentleman make that bald statement?

Mr. CAMPBELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I thought, Mr. Chairman, that all debate closed in five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is all the time I care for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Kansas can proceed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, on a careful consideration of this language, it does not seem necessary to accomplish the purpose. If the Commissioner of Indian Affairs thinks he wants such a regulation as is provided for here, all he needs to do is to submit the matter to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior may submit it to the President, and an Executive order can be issued covering all such as are contemplated here into the civil service and accomplish this purpose.

I submit that at this time, in the consideration of appropriation bills, that is the wiser thing to do. And I make this statement with a view to expediting the business of this session: We are only beginning the large appropriation bills, and if we begin legislating on the civil service in all the appropriation bills we shall be here when snow flies next year before we get through. I submit that in the interest of expediting the business of the House it is better to leave these executive matters to the Executive rather than legislate on them here.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 63.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MILLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to return to the paragraph just read, for the purpose of making a correction.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think the time has arrived when we must recess for the purpose of fulfilling the request of the Senate. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11283. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay.

RECESS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that in pursuance of the request of the Senate the House do now proceed to the Senate. I move that the House stand in recess until we return.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House stand in recess until we return from the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess.

At 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. the Members of the House returned from the Senate Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The House will resume its session.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement relative to rural credits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement about rural credits. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 12579).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the preceding paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For what purpose?

Mr. MILLER. To offer an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the amendment? I should like to hear it.

Mr. MILLER. I will state the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman has a right to offer an amendment to the pending paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understood the gentleman to desire to return to the preceding paragraph, not the pending paragraph.

Mr. MILLER. To the paragraph we have been discussing. I thought the Clerk had begun to read the next paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I made a motion, which was carried, that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed, but the paragraph is open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that if he refers to the paragraph beginning with line 6, the Clerk has not proceeded to read the next paragraph and it is in order to offer an amendment. Debate, however, has been closed.

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw my request then, Mr. Chairman. I move to amend the proviso, beginning in line 24, page 6, by striking out the word "shall," in line 1, page 7, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the gentleman's amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 1, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. MILLER. As the proviso now stands it reads as follows:

That $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

I move to strike out "shall" and insert "may."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, in line 24, on page 6, after the word "that," to insert the words "not more than."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 24, after the word "that," insert the words "not more than."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amendment, but I do not think it is necessary at all to say that not more than $20,000 shall be appropriated. As I understand, it is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER. The last amendment is not absolutely necessary, but it certainly perfects the language of the bill and makes it perfectly clear and specific.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of schools and agency buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, $400,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service, who are furnished quarters, necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: Provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amounts for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of this amount shall be used for providing necessary drainage and equipment for fruit raising and for the construction of a new barn and for repairs at the Oneida boarding school at Oneida, Wis.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragragph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Through the courtesy of the Committee on Indian Affairs I have in my hand a copy of the very extensive hearings held before that committee, consisting of more than 700 pages, a monument to the industry of the members of that committee; but it seems to be serviceable only to those Members who have attended the hearings. Unlike the hearings compiled by some other committees it has no index, and even in a night I could not scan through these 700 and more pages and find the testimony relating to the items in the bill in which I am interested, so I must necessarily ask the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of this limitation of $10,000 for the drainage and equipment for fruit raising and for the construction of a new barn at the Oneida boarding school at Oneida, Wis.?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will find that on pages 144 to 152 of the hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the gentleman discover those pages since I began to question him, or has he an index for his private use?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an annotation on the bill which I have before me.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it would be very serviceable to the Members of the House in considering this bill if the Committee on Indian Affairs had done as other committees have done and compiled an index to the hearings and had that index printed with these voluminous hearings? I await an answer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, it is most parliamentary. The gentleman has served here long enough to know that the Members are entitled to have copies of the hearings and to have an index by which they may refer to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think the gentleman is addressing himself to the matter which is pending before the committee.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MANN. Has not the gentleman from Wisconsin been long enough in the House, and upon an appropriating committee long enough, to know that every appropriating committee of the House endeavors in every way possible to keep the House from having any information concerning its bills?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think that reflection applies to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which I am a member, because the hearings this year and in other years have contained an index, by means of which the Members can refer to the matters contained therein.

Mr. MANN. Why, you can only get a copy of the hearings as a personal favor.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are 500 copies resting in the committee room now.

Mr. MANN. That is it. They are resting in the committee room.

Mr. STAFFORD. Any Member can obtain them upon application.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I want some explanation of the reason for this limitation. If the gentleman from Oklahoma can give me the information, I shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. CARTER. That is why I want the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. Chairman, shortly after these hearings were ready for printing the bill was reported by the committee, and the clerks of the committee inform me that they did not think they had the time to index the hearings before the bill might be brought up on the floor of the House. It has transpired that quite a time did elapse before we got the bill up; but if we had gotten it up at the time we expected to, there would not have been sufficient time to index these hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. It develops that the clerk has had time to prepare a private index for gentlemen.

Mr. CARTER. No; I will state to the gentleman that I have an index, but the clerk of the committee had nothing to do with it; I made it myself.

Mr. STAFFORD. I protest against the valuable time of the gentleman from Oklahoma being taken up in preparing an index, when we have valuable clerks to do that work.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps the valuable clerk had some other valuable work to do at the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yielded to the gentleman to explain this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order, and now I make the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know what the point of order is.

Mr. CARTER. What is the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. When I rose to speak I reserved the point of order to the paragraph, and now I make the point of order to the paragraph, first, because it contains legislation not within the purview of the rules of the House on an appropriation bill, and, next, the last proviso is a limit on the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and, lastly, it contains legislation in violation of existing law.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman make the point of order against the proviso?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make it against the paragraph. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] was inconsiderate enough to allow an explanation of the proviso, and I was forced to make the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. I would have been glad to explain the item.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yielded to the gentleman for that purpose, but he rambled off into something else.

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman wanted to know about the index to the hearings, and I gave him the information on that point.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am indebted to the gentleman for that.

Mr. CARTER. And I am willing to explain the other provision. I am not responsible for the objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. This proviso—

That not to exceed $10,000 of this amount shall be used for providing necessary drainage and equipment for fruit raising and for the construction of a new barn and for repairs at the Oneida boarding school at Oneida, Wis.—

is a limitation. Now, it is well established under the decisions of this House that a limitation on the discretion of an administrative official is new legislation and is obnoxious to the rule that no such legislation shall be carried on an appropriation bill. I do not care to make the point of order, and I will withdraw it and reserve it for the time being, if I can get the information I am asking for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that his colleague, Mr. KONOP, desired this legislation, and that it is legislation that affects his own State? Does the gentleman insist on striking out lines 16 to 20, inclusive, the last proviso in that section?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rose to obtain information as to this limitation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was thought that that amount would be sufficient. We did not want to make an unlimited appropriation. I think if the gentleman will examine the bill throughout he will find that language in many places.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state whether $10,000 is ample to provide for the stated purpose?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what the gentleman's colleague, Mr. KONOP, asked for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to do anything contrary to the wishes of my colleague, Mr. KONOP, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 17, page 7, by striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 17, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; and to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $400,000: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin: Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits. Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer two amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the ground of the point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire as to the limitation carried in the first proviso, that no part of this appropriation shall extend to timber on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin. I know that that clause was carried in the same phraseology in the last appropriation act.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the raeson; it was a separate act governing the reservation, and we did not want to interfere with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This has nothing to do with the appropriation for the Government mill at Neopit, Wis.?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; that matter is being investigated, and it is in such condition that we did not desire to make any appropriation for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the status of the investigation? It has been running for years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A joint commission of the House and Senate were charged with the duty of investigating Indian matters. It was appointed in June last year, and they have had numerous letters and requests inviting them to visit that locality and investigate it. We have not had the time, but we propose to take the time as soon as Congress adjourns.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is an investigation as to whether the Neopit lumber mill, operated by the Government at the expense of the Menominee Indians, is a paying investment, so far as the Indians are concerned, and it is to be investigated by a joint committee of Congress, of which the gentleman from Texas is a member, and they propose to give it immediate attention as soon as Congress adjourns. Do I understand the gentleman to say that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We expect to do so.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Some years ago the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department went over this very thoroughly, and if gentlemen will refer to evidence taken by that committee they will get such information as the committee were able to obtain at that time. I think the information is valuable, because the committee examined all the witnesses that were to be obtained and all who knew anything about that expenditure. While the committee made no definite finding, it occurs to me that the expenditure was a very unfortunate one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he had as a witness before the committee the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. MANN. Then the committee did not get all of the information, for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and I traveled all over this reservation, which I daresay the committee did not. We went through the lumber mill and out where they were cutting the timber, and where they were not.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I am satisfied the committee was very unfortunate in not being able to obtain the testimony of the two gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly they were.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Though they probably had not traveled over it and made their investigation at the time the committee made its investigation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; we had. I remember when the investigation was made.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Then I am satisfied that we missed something, though there was a great deal of valuable testimony offered before the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, we could have furnished the committee first-hand knowledge as to the condition of this plant.

Mr. MANN. We were there by direction of the Government.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentlemen now whether they found the expenditure in the location of that mill enormous, unnecessary, and unusual?

Mr. MANN. No doubt it was enormous and unusual. Whether it was unnecessary has not yet been determined.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 16, after the word "allotments," insert the words "and for the conservation of fish and game."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. I would like to know the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced the amendment for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that while there is the sum of $400,000 appropriated in this bill for the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, etc., on Indian farm schools, there is in the latter portion of the bill appropriated but $1,000 for the care of the Quinaielts, who are dependent on their fish, which is rapidly disappearing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware that that is already provided for by the forest rangers—that that is a part of their duty?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That might be so, but nevertheless I desire to call attention to the fact that on the Quinaielt Reservation the figures show that the catch at Quinaielt has run down from 160,000 in 1910, to 140,000 the next year, down to 45,000 in 1912 and to 16,000 in 1913. I also call attention to the fact that the Indians there are in a desperate condition. The county commissioners write me that they are starving.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman made any complaint to the Bureau of Fisheries or to the commissioner?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and I shall insert his letter in the RECORD. I am not making a charge against either this committee or the commissioner or any official of the Indian Service, but the point of this amendment is that at very small expenditure out of this fund of $400,000 we can make sure of fish in great plenty in the Quinaielt Reservation. Otherwise a bill will have to be worked through Congress providing for a fish hatchery at great expense, which would be in a forest reservation and not in the Indian reservation, and this will involve such a lot of red tape that it does not seem possible to untangle it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against it. This is legislation to which the attention of the committee has not been called by the department or by anyone.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order for a moment while I make some inquiry.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Very well, I will withhold the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington a question. I understand the waters designed to be restocked with fish by the amendment the gentleman proposes lie wholly within the Indian reservation within the State of Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The headwaters are just beyond the reservation in the forest reservation.

Mr. MILLER. But the part the gentleman wants restocked is inside the Indian reservation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want the Indians shown how to protect their fish, not necessarily to have the stream restocked.

Mr. MILLER. There is no reason why the Bureau of Fisheries can not send fish fry there to stock that stream.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Quinaielt salmon is the only fish of its kind in all the world. It is the king of the salmon tribe. The fish return to this river to spawn. The lack of control over the Indians is such that they have in the past put nets entirely across the stream and have stopped the supply of fish.

Mr. MILLER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the game and fish laws of each State govern forest reserves and Indian reservations lying within the State, and if this condition exists the game and fish authorities of the gentleman's State are open to a suggestion of reprimand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Nevertheless, I will say in reply that the Indians in the State of Washington have been arrested this year under Federal laws for shooting game birds. The Federal laws did not reach far enough to tell any Indian that they went into effect 15 days earlier than the State law, and the result is that there are several cases where Indians are under arrest for violating the migratory game-bird law. This is a Federal law, but under the treaty it is apparently also unconstitutional, as in the former no restrictions are placed on the Indians' hunting rights. It is possible that the case will be brought up to the United States Supreme Court before the matter is decided.

Mr. DYER. What excuse does the gentleman make for the State authorities neglecting their duties?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think they have neglected their duties at all. In fact, they have gone out of their way to protect these Indians. As a matter of fact, the Chehalis County commissioners will have to build a bridge into the Quinaielt Reservation at the county's expense. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says he has no funds. I want to tell you that these Indians are in desperate condition, and I do hope their fishing interests will be taken care of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order, and I will state to the gentleman that we will take the matter up if he will introduce a bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will be very glad to press a bill which I have introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington wish to offer a second amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No, Mr. Chairman; I will withdraw the second amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

[By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. JOHNSON of Washington to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in reference to the first proviso on page 9, which provides a $25,000 appropriation to carry on experiments on Indian school or agency farms. I wondered if the gentleman was able to find out just what they did with that money; that is, the $25,000?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On page 202 of the hearings the gentleman will find a statement from the department relative to how these funds are expended.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not have it before me. Will the chairman state tersely what it is?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These Indian schools and agencies are scattered widely over the United States, and what would grow in one part of the country is what can not be produced either by the Indians or whites in another part of the country, and it is necessary to test the possibilities of the soil in the different sections in reference to the production of vegetables, and so forth. For that purpose the $25,000 is being expended, and it is expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior through the Indian Bureau.

Mr. FERRIS. I wondered how long this appropriation has been carried. Does the chairman have that in mind?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has been several years.

Mr. FERRIS. It has been running in the current bills each year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has been running for several years.

Mr. FERRIS. The only thought I had about it was it seems to me the time will come when they ought to be forced to some kind of a showing as to what they were doing and what they were accomplishing with that fund. In other words, we have at each one of these schools a superintendent and a farmer and laborers, whose duty it is to show the Indian children just what to do. For instance, the gentleman knows at Fort Sill, very near my home town, we have a school of full-blood children. We have a superintendent and several employees, and have a farm which has done nicely, and I suppose they make some investigation, and I wondered just where that money was expended.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am very glad to inform the gentleman of the manner in which that fund is expended, or has been expended very beneficially, and that is that in Arizona at Sacaton, where they develop the raising of sea-island cotton, and I know something of cotton, having been raised in a cotton country. This is the Egyptian or long staple cotton, and is worth possibly double the amount of the ordinary short staple southern cotton; and this Indian school has set an example to all the farms all over the country as to what can be done, and the $25,000 could have been well spent there for that purpose in educating the people of that Southwestern country to the fact that the cotton-growing industry is only in its infancy, even by an allotment of a part of this appropriation to that school. That has come under my own personal observation, and I have been told there are many other experimental stations the same way.

Mr. FERRIS. In the judgment of the chairman it is being well expended and doing the Indian Service some good?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It surely is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000: Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of warehouses in the Indian Service.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the distinguished chairman of the committee as to what the word "transportation" here is intended to include?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the word "transportation" here is intended to include railroad transportation, because under the last Indian appropriation act which was passed we find this language:

Provided also, That all wagon transportation from the point where delivery is made by the last common carrier to the agency, school, or elsewhere, and between points on the reservation or elsewhere, shall hereafter be paid from the funds appropriated or otherwise available for the support of the school, agency, or other project for which the supplies to be transported are purchased.

That means that the school agency shall pay for the wagon transportation to the place where the supplies are taken, and now this provides for the transportation of those goods on common carriers or railways.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, that was the reason I reserved the point of order and also the reason for making the inquiry. The same amount of money appropriated during the last Congress is appropriated here, and the appropriation in the last bill apparently included the wagon transportation.

Mr. CARTER. No; it extended it. I just read the provision in the last bill which excluded it.

Mr. FOWLER. That is true. It may have been intended to exclude it from subsequent legislation, but I am not so sure that the provision of the last bill excluded wagon transportation from the $300,000 that was appropriated in the last session of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. CARTER. That would depend entirely, Mr. Chairman, on what the word "hereafter" means. The money was to be spent in the fiscal year succeeding the year in which the Indian appropriation bill was passed, as is always the case, so that the "hereafter" applied not only to that time but applied to this time, and for that reason it is unnecessary to place anything in this bill with reference to wagon transportation.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the word "transportation" is unlimited, and transportation means transportation.

Mr. CARTER. It is unlimited; but this language must be construed in connection with existing law, and the existing law is that no wagon transportation shall be paid from this fund hereafter, which was after the date of the passage of the last Indian appropriation act.

Mr. FOWLER. My contention is, Mr. Chairman, that no part of this appropriation ought to be used for the payment of wagon transportation from the point where the common carrier left it to its destination at the agency, because of the permanent law which was passed during the last session of the Sixty-second Congress. In my opinion there ought to be an exception, so that the word "transportation" might not be considered in its broadest sense. In other words, there ought to be an exception to this effect, namely, "except wagon transportation."

Mr. CARTER. Well, if the gentleman should say "except wagon transportation," that would not make the law any stronger than it is, and if he should say "except wagon transportation," he ought to say "except wagon transportation as provided by existing law," so that would mean exactly what it means now, I should think. I have not any objection to the amendment at all, except it is putting language in the act which I do not think means anything.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that the term "transportation" is broad enough as used in this paragraph to take in all transportation, whereas it is true that there is a limitation placed by the last bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I will ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the chairman of the committee will not do this. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER. What is now pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] has raised a point of order on the proviso to the paragraph, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] raised a point of order on the entire paragraph.

Mr. MILLER. Would it not be more advantageous to discuss a proposed amendment to the paragraph before the point of order is disposed of?

Mr. FOWLER. I am trying to decide whether I will make a point of order. If there is a limitation placed on this transportation, then I have no disposition to make a point of order, if the committee is willing to make the exception that I suggested.

Mr. MILLER. As one member of the committee, I would not. I would like to argue the question whether or not it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] make the point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have not made the point of order, and I do not desire to make it unless the Committee on Indian Affairs think, and the members of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union believe, that the language used here in this paragraph does not contravene the language used in the last appropriation bill, which made a limitation upon the word "transportation."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I think the language in the last Indian appropriation bill defines exactly what this law means, because it made the language of the last appropriation act permanent law.

Mr. MANN. That of last year was permanent law.

Mr. FOWLER. It is permanent law. That is true.

Mr. CARTER. Here is what is said in the department's report about it:

It is believed, since the wagon transportation is to be paid out of support funds, that the appropriation requested, viz, $325,000, will be adequate to cover the needs of the Indian Service in this direction.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not know there was a limitation as to time when discussing a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman did not make a point of order, but reserved it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not care about five minutes more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I renew my motion that debate on this section be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Debate has not commenced.

Mr. DYER. I wish to make a point of order after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] finishes.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not desire to make a point of order at the present time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a couple of minutes.

Mr. CARTER. The regular order is the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. DYER. I wish to speak on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DYER. As a parliamentary inquiry, I will ask the Chair if it is not within the discretion of the Chair as to whether or not he desires to hear from the Member who makes a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. After the gentleman makes a point of order.

Mr. DYER. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. But, when the regular order is asked for, the gentleman can not reserve a point of order.

Mr. DYER. I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman has reserved a point of order. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. DYER. Very well. I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. DYER. Yes; for one minute.

The point of order I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, is on the proviso, beginning with line 15:

Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of warehouses in the Indian Service.

I have looked through the hearings of the committee, through the voluminous copy of hearings that the committee has had, and I do not find one single word in the entire hearings from anyone upon this subject. I find no testimony there to show or to indicate that there will be a saving to the Government of a penny by the abolishment of these warehouses. I claim, Mr. Chairman, that you will not save the Government a penny by abolishing these warehouses, but it will cost the Government more money to take away these warehouses. It means that inspectors have got to travel all over the country to inspect these goods. They will not have officials in the towns and places where these goods are bought.

For instance, the warehouse in St. Louis is one that does an enormous business for the Government. They handle millions of dollars' worth of goods, and the freight rates and all save to the Government thousands of dollars. If these warehouses are done away with, then all of this inspection and the expense of freight and all will amount to a great deal of money.

I am satisfied that there is no testimony here in the hearings concerning this proposition. I know there is none, because I have looked through them carefully. I am satisfied that neither the chairman of the committee nor any member of the committee is able to say to this committee that the department asks for this to be done. Neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has asked, nor will they ask, that these warehouses be done away with. I think it is a voluntary proposition on the part of the committee, and the report comes in here in this way without any hearing had at all. I would be glad, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], as chairman of the committee, can point out where the Government can in any way save a dollar by this. I claim that it will cost the Government much more money if these warehouses are abolished. Therefore I contend that my point of order is proper at this time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this section is subject to a point of order. Of course the gentleman can amend the bill if he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order, unless the Chair is prepared to rule. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it is not in any view subject to a point of order. It is simply a limitation on the appropriation made in this bill. The appropriations made herein will take effect after July 1, 1914.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell us where these warehouses are located?

Mr. MILLER. One of them is located in New York, and one at Chicago, and one at St. Louis, and one at Omaha, and one at San Francisco.

Mr. MOORE. The limit of the value of the goods that go to these various warehouses is $300,000 a year?

Mr. MILLER. No. That $300,000 is for their maintenance and for the transportation of the goods. By far the major part is for the transportation of goods.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman where this $300,000 for the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indians is expended?

Mr. MILLER. It is expended throughout the United States.

Mr. MOORE. In various cities?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; in various cities.

Mr. MOORE. The term "advertising" is provided in this language. Does that mean advertisements for supplies amounting to $300,000 per annum?

Mr. MILLER. The supplies amount to very much more than $300,000 per annum, I will inform the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] said millions of dollars' worth of goods passed through the warehouse at St. Louis.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman should not understand that only the $300,000 mentioned in this paragraph is used for the purchase of goods for the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. I was explaining that to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This sum of $300,000 is for transportation and the purchasing of the goods.

Mr. MOORE. In discussing his point of order, I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] to say that millions of dollars' worth of goods pass through this warehouse, and the appropriation is only $300,000 per annum.

Mr. DYER. I am not objecting to the provision of $300,000, but I am objecting to the effort to eliminate these warehouses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] makes the point of order against the proviso on line 15, page 9:

Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of warehouses in the Indian Service.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the provision is nothing more than a limitation upon the appropriation and does not constitute a change of existing law, and the point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, lines 15 to 18, page 19, by striking out the following language: "Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of warehouses in the Indian Service."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if we can not come to an agreement as to how long this amendment shall be discussed? I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes.

Mr. DYER. I ask that the gentleman make his request apply to this amendment only.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, would it not be a good idea to get the debate finished on all the amendments? Let all the amendments be offered now, and close debate at a certain time thereafter.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I may want to offer another amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] modifies his request and asks that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in half an hour. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will divide the 30 minutes among gentlemen.

Mr. MILLER. I want 10 minutes.

Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman an amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present our side of the case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that all these gentlemen who are anxious to speak are on one side.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas might yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. The gentleman from Texas had better make his request for 40 minutes, and provide that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] shall have 10 minutes of that time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will make it 40 minutes, then, Mr. Chairman, and give the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman from Minnesota have 10 minutes of that time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 40 minutes, and that 10 minutes of that time be given to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending section and amendments thereto be closed in 40 minutes, and that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] shall have 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, because no allowance of time is given to those who are not, apparently, for this amendment. I want to get some information. If I can get it now, I do not care to object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We will yield five minutes to the gentleman for the purpose of allowing him to ask questions. It is understood that five minutes of the time shall be given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, looking over the hearings before this Committee on Indian Affairs I find that there was some discussion of this provision. At the present time there are five of these warehouses, and under the law, as I gather from the testimony in these hearings, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has the right to abolish every one of these warehouses if he so desires. But the startling statement is made in these hearings that because of pressure brought to bear somebody in the Indian Commissioner's office, having the authority, refused to exercise it.

Furthermore, it is shown in the hearings by the testimony of those who appeared from the Indian Commissioner's office that these warehouses are necessary, at least two of them, as permanent warehouses; and the testimony shows that, even if the other three are abolished, the Indian Department must have permission to maintain temporary warehouses.

Now, the proviso that is offered here in this bill by the Committee on Indian Affairs prevents the use of any of this money for the maintenance of warehouses, whether temporary or permanent; and, as I have said, the testimony given in the hearings shows that temporary warehouses will be necessary.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IGOE. I will.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How far is it from any Indian reservation, where these goods are to be used, to St. Louis, where the warehouse which the gentleman is interested in is located?

Mr. IGOE. As I understand it, these goods may be in any of the warehouses, either at New York or St. Louis. In many cases the goods do not go into the warehouses at all. The bids are opened in different cities, and I do not know where the goods go from any particular warehouse. Perhaps the gentleman, being a member of the committee, does know. I am only giving what is in the testimony.

When this question was brought up, Mr. Meritt gave it as his opinion that if the bill was amended so as to leave two permanent warehouses it would not cripple the department; but all through the testimony it is shown that it is beneficial to the service to have warehouses. I do not undertake to say where they shall be, but if the Indian Commissioner has the authority now to abolish these warehouses, and if men in that service say that they must have some warehouses, why should we say in this bill that none of the money appropriated here shall be used for that purpose? I undertake to say to the Members of this House that when the Indian Commissioner has the right to say that there shall be no warehouses or that there shall be five, the mere fact that at some time in the past somebody has brought pressure enough to bear to keep the warehouses as they are at present established, is no reason why we should put in a provision of this kind prohibiting the use of any of this money for these purposes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can the gentleman tell us what is the cost of maintenance of these five warehouses which have been provided for in the past?

Mr. IGOE. Yes; the hearings before the committee show very fully the expense for light, rent, fuel, salaries, and so forth. The total for rent of the five is $11,000, and for the employees $35,000.

Mr. MILLER. If the chairman of the committee will permit, I want to get the total of the cost.

Mr. IGOE. The entire amount is $59,349.

Mr. MILLER. It is a little more than that. It is $62,475.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will turn to page 210 of the hearings, he will find the exact amount. It takes $62,475 to expend $300,000. Does the gentleman think that is fair?

Mr. IGOE. Was it not stated in the hearings by the representatives of the department that it was advisable to have warehouses?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They did not use the term "warehouses." They use used the term "storage and transportation." The storage would include warehouses.

Mr. IGOE. On page 219 of the hearings the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asked these questions:

Mr. BURKE. Would you say that it would be entirely safe if we should put a provision in this bill in substance providing that not to exceed two warehouses shall be maintained?

Mr. MERITT. Shall be permanently maintained.

Mr. BURKE. Do you think that would be sufficient so that the service would not suffer?

Mr. MERITT. I think that the service would not suffer with that provision in. On the contrary, I think the administration would be better and at a less cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amount of money carried in this bill for the purpose of purchasing goods. It reads in this way:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000.

That is the amount carried in the bill. Then comes the provision—

Now, we find on page 210 of the hearings that the total amount for the maintenance of these warehouses was $62,475.03. That is an enormous amount for the expenditure of $300,000 for goods purchased; and not all that amount represents purchases, because this $300,000 includes the transportation of those goods. We therefore believe that by leaving the bill as it now is, with the word "storage" in it, we can save quite a sum of money, and that is the reason why the bill is drawn as it is.

Let me call your attention to one other item here. In the hearings on pages 215 and 216 we find the following:

Mr. CARTER. Just as briefly as you can, explain the advantage of the warehouses over the ordinary system that might prevail if we did not have the warehouses.
Mr. FRY—

Mr. Fry seems to be the expert who has this matter in charge for the department.

Mr. FRY. If we did not have the warehouses, all the purchases would be made upon the separate needs of the individual superintendent, and that is what we do as to a certain part of these supplies now. You will recall that I referred to purchases under contract and in the open market. I have been talking about the contract end. The other class is that which we purchase in the open market to supply superintendents who find they need later something else of a general nature or something else that is specifically needed for their particular agency and probably would not be needed by more than two or three other agencies. A superintendent will send in a request for something of that kind and then we go out and advertise for bids, or he should advertise and then send the bids in with his request; we then authorize the purchase, and he or one of the warehouses makes the purchase. Now, under the system of buying singly, we would probably pay a higher price for the article. For instance, if it were a plow we would go out and pay a price for a single plow, whereas on the annual estimate and contract basis we could advertise for plows of that kind collectively and buy them in a lot, and in that way get them cheaper. It is the concentrated purchasing as against the making of individual purchases.

I think it clearly appears from this evidence that the expenditure of $52,000 for warehousing and warehouse employees for the storage of $300,000 worth of goods is enormous, and I think we should abolish these warehouses.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman says it is for $300,000; but the value of the shipments from these warehouses was $1,388,651.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was speaking of the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. LOBECK. But we handle $1,358,000 worth of goods, and that is less than 5 per cent for doing the business.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Texas is referring to the cost of transportation.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman from Texas read the next question by Mr. CARTER and the answer, on page 216, after the answer that the gentleman from Texas just read?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will:

Mr. CARTER. Do you get any benefit from inspection at the warehouses?
Mr. FRY. Yes, sir; the inspection end is practically the key to all our purchasing plan.
Mr. CARTER. In what way do you get a benefit by inspection?
Mr. FRY. By being sure we get the goods we buy. For instance, in the contract stuff practically all of it is bought on samples or strict specifications.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the Government own the warehouses or lease them?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are leased.

Mr. McKENZIE. What is the value of the property stored in the warehouses each year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can give the gentleman an estimate of that.

Mr. FERRIS. We pay $11,000 rent every year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there was no understanding as to the division of time.

Mr. CARTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of the proviso the following:
"Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of more than two permanent warehouses in the Indian Service."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the reading of the hearings, on pages 203 to 221, will disclose that it was the contention of the Indian Bureau officials that two warehouses are needed, and that not more than two are needed. This amendment leaves the matter of the selection of these places in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior—whoever has jurisdiction in the premises. It will leave all the safeguards that are necessary to the purchase of goods and dispose of three-fifths of the cost of the maintenance of the warehouses. The service will be just as efficient as it is at present.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the saving this year over that of last, provided this becomes a law? The gentleman talks about the warehouses being an expensive item. I want to know if it will save any money. Is the appropriation any less in this bill?

Mr. CARTER. It is $300,000 now, and the department asked for $325,000. I will state to the gentleman that after we had appropriated $300,000 last year they came to the Committee on Appropriations and got an item in the deficiency bill of some $40,000 for this same purpose, so that it has cost $340,000 to maintain the warehouses last year. If my amendment is agreed to, I am sure they can bring the cost within this appropriation.

Mr. GOULDEN. While I represent, in part, one of the sections that will be affected by this legislation, if there is economy in it I am for it, notwithstanding that one of the warehouses is located in New York City.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that this $300,000 was being appropriated for the maintenance of the warehouses, and yet the statement which the committee adduced at the hearings and which is printed in the hearings shows that the cost of the maintenance was only $61,000. As a matter of fact, this $300,000 is not intended for the maintenance of the warehouses but for a transportation of goods, storage in the warehouses, and so forth.

Mr. MOORE. And for the purchase of goods.

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not take $300,000 to maintain the warehouses?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. It only cost $61,000?

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MADDEN. It covers salaries, light, heat, and everything that goes toward the maintenance.

Mr. MOORE. The paragraph begins with the language "For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection," and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. If I said it did not comprehend purchase of goods, I did not intend to. I certainly had something else in my mind when I answered the gentleman; I think it does include purchase.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there anybody on the committee that knows what it does include?

Mr. BUTLER. It has been stated here that the goods in one warehouse were worth over $600,000.

Mr. CARTER. I will say that there are other funds from which the goods are purchased.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman from Oklahoma, if he does not know, furnish some one who would tell us what this $300,000 is for.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will give me four hours, I will undertake to do it. The gentleman can find it all in the hearings on page 203 and what follows.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the chief difficulty here and the confusion that has arisen seems to be due to the fact that we have not adopted the suggestion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or whoever it was that proposed to select but one city for the storing of the various supplies of the Indian Service. I have no doubt the whole problem would be solved at once if the city of Philadelphia, which is a dark horse in this matter, and has been so for a long time, had been selected by the committee. I think the entire House would agree to that, especially the gentleman from New York, the gentlemen from Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, and San Francisco, who seem to have more or less interest in the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. What earthly use would an Indian warehouse be in the city of Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE. The city of Philadelphia produces nearly all the supplies that the Indian Service requires, and it has reflected very much on preceding Congresses and the older Members thereof, who did not at the proper time rise in their places, as did the gentlemen from New York and Chicago and Omaha and St. Louis and San Francisco, to demand that these supplies should be stored in Philadelphia. I suggest that this is a fine opportunity for some young Democrat in this House to do something for Philadelphia, which has been fed on promises for the last two years.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. This is the first time that I ever heard it charged that Philadelphia was a dark horse, for since the gentleman's arrival in Congress no opportunity has ever passed without the gentleman being heard from in the interests of his city.

Mr. MOORE. Philadelphia has usually been overshadowed by New York, represented so ably by the gentleman who, in stopping off at Philadelphia, of course, has observed that a great output of her industries go to New York, where the raw materials are worked over and distributed.

Mr. GOULDEN. Oh, they had to be sent over to New York to be sold and distributed, as that is the principal distributing center in the country.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object to this fulsome flattery going on between New York and Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE. Chicago has always been envious, Mr. Chairman, and has imagined itself a rival, although it is hard to come up to the standard.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Baltimore. I wanted to argue Baltimore's case. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will anybody speak for the Indian?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the Indian would be well taken care of in the City of Brotherly Love, and, then, if the gentleman from Baltimore should succeed in having a warehouse in Baltimore——

Mr. LINTHICUM. But why would it not be better to have the warehouse in Baltimore than in Philadelphia, because the rates to the West are cheaper from Baltimore than they are from Philadelphia and New York?

Mr. MOORE. Baltimore is so intensely patriotic and enthusiastic over Fort McHenry that it ought to be satisfied to let Philadelphia have a modicum of appropriations from Congress. I feel sure it would not want to rob us of a warehouse for the Indian Service. I commend this to my Democratic colleagues from Pennsylvania. Here is their opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I asked for time was to inquire of the chairman of the committee what this advertising is for and what kind of advertising it is?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is for the various warehouses.

Mr. MOORE. For supplies?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Bids for supplies in the Indian Service entirely.

Mr. MOORE. In what cities do these advertisements appear for supplies for the Indian Service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are sent out from Chicago, St. Louis, and other places.

Mr. MOORE. Is the advertisement general throughout the country or is it confined to only one or two cities?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is stated that it is put in the leading papers of the United States.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman know whether any goods purchased as a result of these advertisements are made in the city of Baltimore, for which my colleague from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] spoke a moment ago?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The city of Baltimore can send its samples to these points and have them examined, and they will stand the same show as those from the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE. But if the advertisement appears only in the Chicago papers, how will the people of Baltimore know of it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, the Chicago papers are read all over the United States.

Mr. MOORE. I asked the chairman whether the advertisement was placed generally throughout the country?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what the department states. It is stated that the advertisement is general.

Mr. MOORE. If it appears only in the Chicago papers, it is evident that only a few people will read it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, he inquired what these advertisements were for, and as no member of the committee seemed able to tell him, I desire to inform him that the advertisements are intended to discover where the Indians are in the United States.

Mr. MOORE. Maybe they are in Chicago.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the legislation in the paragraph on page 9 is left in the bill, these warehouses will be dispensed with entirely. If the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is adopted, there will be left but two warehouses. So far as I am personally concerned, I will be glad to see them all abolished. I have lived in an Indian country all of my life. I was born within 16 miles of the Indian Territory, and I never could in the past, nor do I now, conceive of any reason why one of these warehouses should be retained. The proposition of buying supplies and shipping them across the country, back and forth, is needless and an unnecessary expense. The Indian Service as it is costs enough in my State and in every other State, and it is a heavy enough burden for the United States Government to bear, and when we can find a straight economy which might be practiced without doing any violence to the service it seems to me that we ought to practice that economy.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Just one moment. The Indian Commissioner and the Interior Department two years ago, when I was on the committee, then thought that if we could fix the law so that they would have power to get rid of these warehouses they would do it, but now they come back and say that even though they have the power they have not the courage and the backbone to stand up and get rid of them, and they ask Congress to get rid of them. First, Mr. Chairman, they ought to do their duty, but as they have left it undone then Congress ought to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman this: Suppose there were no warehouses, as this provision would arrange, and the Government were shipping goods to the Indians, to some tribe in Oklahoma, what would they do with the goods?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, that is the very point.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose they are also shipping them to Wisconsin and California?

Mr. FERRIS. That is the point. This is an antiquated practice that was put in vogue when the Indians were wild men and there was no civilization among them. To-day the Indians are the men who run the communities in half the towns. They are the men who are the governors of States. They are the men who are in the legislatures; they are the men who are the officers and presidents of chambers of commerce; and this theory of men wearing paint and feathers and there being no transportation and no local regulation and no local ability to care for the wants of the Indians is all farcical and mythical, and there is nothing to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that the goods that are bought by the Government for the use of the Indians can be distributed to the Indians without their being stored somewhere?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; and there would be traveling salesmen calling on every branch of the Indian Service from the agency up to the commissioner and who would hunt and dog them to death to buy the things they did not need.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a statement for just one moment?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Wherever there is an Indian superintendency in the United States there is always a commissary department at which they can receive and retain these goods and distribute them when they are needed.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; and I thank my colleague from Oklahoma. Every one of these agencies has great plants, with a dozen or fifteen brick buildings. This proposition to go out on the prairie in a covered wagon and distribute meat and flour and potatoes and beans has nothing to it; it is a joke, and this thing ought to be abolished. The Indian Office has asked to have it abolished; it ought to do it themselves, but they do not seem to have the courage to do it.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman suggests the Indian Office is asking to have these warehouses abolished. I ask the gentleman to call to the attention of the committee, if he can, anything in the hearings making that statement.

Mr. FERRIS. I can show that to the gentleman, beginning on page 203, clear on down. It is rather in halting answers to questions, but I have talked to them myself, and I know they would be glad to have it done.

Mr. DYER. There is no line in the testimony to that effect.

Mr. FERRIS. There are 20 or 30 pages.

Mr. DYER. The Indian Commissioner did not ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I promised the gentleman from Missouri that he should talk before me.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there left on our side?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-four minutes have been consumed and there are 16 minutes remaining, of which time the gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to 10 minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I mean those who are on the side of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no understanding or no order of the committee with reference to the time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I had given notice that I wanted five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was expecting to recognize the gentleman from Missouri after the gentleman from Minnesota had concluded.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, there are in existence to-day five of these warehouses, located in the cities of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, and San Francisco. Now, how do we come to have these; why are they there? This system grew almost exactly as grew up the system of pension agencies, which Congress for so many years labored to overthrow. There was originally established at one place an Indian warehouse, and then another city saw that was a good thing and asked for one and received one, until finally five of these cities, by their active Representatives in Congress, were designated as these Indian warehouse cities. There never was a time when they were needed as a whole. There might have been a time when one was needed, but that time has long gone by.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I will.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] made a very severe indictment against the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a great Democrat from the State of Texas. The Hon. Cato Sells formerly came from my district, and I never knew of his being a coward or being afraid to perform his duty. I would like to ask the gentleman if, under the law, the commissioner can abolish these warehouses; and if so, why they have not been abolished?

Mr. MILLER. In answer to the gentleman I will say that as the law now stands the Indian Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior, in which his department is located, has ample and full power to discontinue each and every one of them. When I became a Member of this body, nearly six years ago, the first thing I attempted to do was to eliminate these warehouses, and then, as now, we found the representatives of these various cities right on the job. I do not blame them at all. Their zeal is a credit to them and should highly recommend them to their constituencies. But I have before and to-day I again appeal to the other Members of the House to look out for the welfare of the Indians and to look out for the Treasury of the United States.

We were defeated the first time. The second year it was a drawn battle. In the third year we were successful. We were successful because the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and all his subordinates asked us and begged us in the interests of economy, in the interests of the Indian Service, that we abolish these leeches that had fastened themselves upon the system of purchasing Indian supplies. We thought we had accomplished results for all time, but somehow or other the Indian Office seems not to have abolished these warehouses completely. To our very great surprise I found the appropriation had been secured through the deficiency appropriation bill taking care of these Indian warehouses.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman knows that Mr. Fry in the hearings before the committee testified that if you abolish three of these you would have to maintain temporary warehouses during a part of the time?

Mr. MILLER. I will be pleased to answer the gentleman in my time.

But further referring to the question asked by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], I will quote from the hearings. Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is speaking:

> Those five warehouses have been continued, and unless this committee puts in a proviso clause directing that only two warehouses be maintained, I am not sure but that it will be necessary to continue them for the next fiscal year.
> Mr. BURKE. Then, am I to understand the influences that these cities are able to bring upon the department are so strong that the office has been unable to discontinue these warehouses?

Note the reply:

> It is my personal opinion that some of these warehouses should have been discontinued prior to this time.

Mr. DYER. From whom is the gentleman quoting?

Mr. MILLER. I am quoting from Mr. Meritt, the First Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Further, Mr. Chairman, the hearings disclose that these Indian warehouses are absolutely of no value to the Indian Service, but that they are a very great expense. As suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma, the procedure is something like this: It frequently is necessary to purchase supplies out in the field. It may be that they are purchased in Minnesota, where there are 11,000 Indians. They are then shipped back to Chicago and put in a warehouse and then shipped from the warehouse back to Minnesota to give to the Indians. Can any man for a moment commend a system like that?

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. There is nothing in the hearings, and I read them very thoroughly, to show that anything like that is done.

Mr. MILLER. But I will tell the gentleman it is done.

Mr. LOBECK. The hearings show that the department purchases such supplies as clothing in New York, where it is inspected, and they buy certain merchandise in Chicago and certain lines of hardware in St. Louis, and they buy farming implements and groceries at Omaha, because it is a wholesale distributing point for groceries and agricultural implements. A man can ship an agricultural implement cheaper from Omaha than he can from a factory, because it is nearer the point of destination. But there is no evidence in the hearing to show that purchases are made and shipped from the prairies of Minnesota to the warehouses. Merchandise which is bought is upon advertisement, and it is put in these Indian warehouses for distribution, and if the gentleman understood anything about purchasing and shipping merchandise he would not have said what he did say.

Mr. MILLER. I have not only read what is there, but many hundred times as much on that subject.

Mr. LOBECK. Do you understand how bids are asked?

Mr. MILLER. If the Chairman please, I can not yield further. I do not want to be ungracious, but the gentleman can have time himself.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman is talking about purchasing merchandise for these Indians, and he should make his remarks in a merchandise manner or according to rules of trade.

Mr. MILLER. There seems to be a fallacy that some cities are favored by these warehouses, or otherwise they would not be fighting so hard to retain them, and the reason the gentleman has been importuned by citizens of Omaha——

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman says that I have been importuned. That is not true. I have not received a word on the subject.

Mr. MILLER. Well, he is most fortunate if he has not been importuned, because I venture that every other gentleman representing a district in which one of these warehouses is located has been importuned time out of mind. Does the gentleman think that the city of Kansas City, which is 200 miles nearer the great bulk of the Indians of the Southwest, should not be permitted to participate in the sale of these Indian supplies?

Mr. LOBECK. If the Government can buy for less in Kansas City than in cities farther East, they ought to have that privilege.

Mr. MILLER. But they are purchasing groceries in the city the gentleman represents and not agricultural implements alone.

Mr. LOBECK. And also in Kansas City. Both cities bid for supplies, and the lowest bidder gets the business.

Mr. MILLER. Well, I do not wish to get into an altercation with the gentleman, no matter how pleasant that might be. Every Commissioner of Indian Affairs for years has asked to be relieved of this incubus. Every man who is familiar with the question of purchasing Indian supplies has recommended that the warehouses be abolished. We thought we abolished them two years ago, and we find now that we have not gone far enough, and the reasons existing then are still potent to-day. And I think the House ought by all means to perfect the matter by putting in that proviso.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. He says the Indian Affairs Commissioners for years have asked to be relieved of this responsibility?

Mr. MILLER. They have.

Mr. DYER. Has the present commissioner done so?

Mr. MILLER. He has not been in office very long, but, judging from the evidence put before us by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I would say yes, and say it strong.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that he has not.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. For a very brief question.

Mr. HELM. There are in the country a number of quartermaster storehouses?

Mr. MILLER. For the handling of military supplies?

Mr. HELM. Yes, sir. If there was an indication of the extensive storage of such goods, wares, and merchandise as are now stored in these warehouses that are under discussion, could it not be so arranged that the quartermaster's depot could be used instead of these warehouses?

Mr. MILLER. I am not advised with respect to that, but I presume if an emergency existed it might be done.

Mr. HELM. It would be a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. DYER. Do I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is to be recognized for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; for five minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated by a gentleman who is supposed to know that if the present system of purchasing Indian supplies were changed and the warehouses abolished, the cities that now have warehouse and the merchants of those cities would do as much business with the Indian Office as under the present system. If that be true, Mr. Chairman, I can at least not be accused of speaking pro domo when I oppose the change contemplated by the committee.

The question before the House is not one of appropriation. Whether we maintain the warehouses or whether we abolish them, the same amount of money, namely, $300,000, is asked for and will be needed. Consequently the change which the committee recommends is certainly not in the interest of economy.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; as I have only five minutes, I can not yield.

Mr. MILLER. I had only 10 minutes, and I gave it all away to the other side.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have profited by the gentleman's experience. [Laughter.] It is a change of system which is contemplated here, and I earnestly warn the committee against such a change. I do not know how many Members now on this floor who have read and remember the evidence on the system in vogue before the warehouses were established. The department used to go into the open market, sent purchasing agents out to the places where the favorite manufacturers and merchants were living, and made purchases for the Indians, and thereby opened the door to such an amount of graft and scandal that the Senate, when the matter was up for consideration, said, "We can not abolish that system fast enough." So they established these warehouses. They have proved economical. I venture to say you will not save $10 a year by your new plan, as compared with the warehouse system that is now in vogue.

These warehouses are not only warehouses, but they are storehouses. The goods are now being purchased by contract and the samples are inspected by experts, and the same is true of the goods furnished. The lowest bidder gets the contract, and he deposits the goods in the warehouses, and from there they are sent out to the Indian reservations as they may be needed by the Indians. If you abolish these warehouses, I venture to say that the department will come to Congress in a very short time and ask us to establish storehouses, at least in two cities that are nearest to the Indian reservations. I do not care which cities they are. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], himself a member of the committee, proposes that two of these storehouses shall be continued. I hope that amendment will prevail, and I shall be entirely content to leave it to the judgment of the Interior Department to select the cities in which the two supply depots should be located. As to the goods which we can furnish cheapest—such as drugs, hardware, boots and shoes, and so forth—the department would come to the St. Louis market anyway, no matter under what plan the purchases are made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman should understand that the committee does not authorize that amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand; but he is nevertheless a member of your committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are in favor of abolishing the warehouses.

Mr. CALDER. They are going to establish one in New York.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think the department would naturally establish them near the Indian reservations. I do not say that this one or that one is unnecessary. Some of them are, as stated by the Indian Department, unnecessary. But I want to call your attention to the fact that there is not one line of recommendation from the department, either in the annual report or anywhere, in favor of abolishing the warehouses this year, and I suggest that until the department comes to Congress and lays before us a feasible, well-thought-out plan of making purchases in the future we should not change a system which has proved economical, and, by giving the Government a dollar's worth of goods for every dollar expended, has given general satisfaction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, these warehouses cost about $62,000. Every Indian agent can go to a near-by market and buy everything that is needed, and buy it as cheaply as it is purchased now at these warehouses. He can more economically buy just what is needed fresh from the market; agricultural implements, boots, clothing, and everything they need.

These warehouses, every one of them, are a useless expenditure of the Indian's money, and I hope that neither the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] nor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] will be agreed to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. CALDER:

"Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of more than two warehouses, one of which shall be located in New York City."

[Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Where would you put the other one?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. In Brooklyn. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of the proviso the following:

"Provided, That after July 1, 1914, no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of more than two permanent warehouses in the Indian Service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 35.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. What was the total vote upon this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The total vote was 45—the ayes were 10 and the noes were 35.

Mr. DYER. A quorum is how many, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is 100.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. It would be in order now to offer an amendment to the amendment, would it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. MOORE. Then I offer the following, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 18, after the word "service," insert the following:

"Provided also, That advertising for the purchase of goods and supplies shall be made in newspapers in at least 10 cities of 500,000 population each, apart from the cities in which such warehouses are located."

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the amendment now pending is a motion to strike out the proviso.

Mr. MOORE. Then I withdraw my amendment for the present, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. An amendment to perfect the proviso is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] to strike out the proviso.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 18, after the word "service," insert the following: "Provided also, That advertising for the purchase of goods and supplies shall be made in newspapers in at least 10 cities of 500,000 population each, apart from the cities in which such warehouses are located."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order against the amendment. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that inasmuch as the paragraph contemplates advertising, and actually provides for it, this amendment is germane.

Mr. CARTER. It may be germane, but it changes existing law.

Mr. MOORE. It might change it for the better, if the gentleman will permit me to make that observation.

Mr. CARTER. Even then it would not be in order.

Mr. MOORE. You ought not to confine the advertising to the one or two cities in which the warehouses are located.

Mr. CARTER. That is not done. There is nothing in the law or regulations that provides that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania clearly provides for new legislation. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the proviso in the paragraph which we have just been discussing the word "appropriated" ought to be spelled correctly. I suppose the Clerk will make that correction. It is in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, the spelling of the word "appropriated," in line 17, will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $4,000, including not to exceed $300 for office rent.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. In every Indian appropriation bill that I have seen put through the House this same item has been carried. I believe it is based upon section 2039 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

There shall be a board of Indian commissioners, composed of not more than 10 persons, appointed by the President solely, from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

Section 2040 provides:

The board of commissioners mentioned in the preceding section shall have power to appoint one of their own number as secretary—

And so forth.

The board of commissioners mentioned in section 2039 shall supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States; and shall inspect all goods purchased for Indians, in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose duty it shall be to consult the commission in making purchases of such goods.

I would like to inquire of some one who is conversant with the duties set out in sections 2039 to 2041 as to whether or not there is ever any attempt made by this commission appointed by the President to comply with the statute, especially to comply with the provisions of section 2041, which require them to supervise and inspect all goods that are purchased for the Indians? What do they do? What good do they do, anyhow?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman, in the first place, that the Revised Statutes have been changed by the act of May 17, 1882 (22 Stat. L., p. 70). This is the law now relative to the authority that they have:

And hereafter the commission shall only have power to visit and inspect agencies and other branches of the Indian Service, and to inspect goods purchased for the service, and the commission shall consult with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the purchase of supplies. The commission shall report their doings to the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, it is apparent from this act, which changes the Revised Statutes——

Mr. COX. Not very materially.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will see that under the Revised Statutes they had the right to go to an Indian agency and inspect the books, and the right to inspect supplies purchased. Here they have no such authority, as the language is exclusive.

Mr. COX. It says:

And to consult the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with regard to the purchase of Indian supplies.

The question I should like to ask is whether or not this commission still consults the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to the purchase of Indian supplies? Does the commission advise with them in any way?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have been present at one of these lettings at Chicago, which occurred last fall, and there were none of them there, and I have never seen a member of that commission before the Committee on Indian Affairs in my 17 years of service except when they wanted their appropriation increased.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman tell what beneficial purpose they serve as far as the Indians are concerned?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman has asked me a question I can not answer. I do not think they serve any beneficial purpose.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I want information.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman happened to see the last report of the Board of Indian Commissioners, issued a few days ago?

Mr. COX. No; I have not.

Mr. MANN. In the last report it was stated, and I know it to be true, that a member of the board, by direction of the board, was in Chicago at the time of the letting, at St. Louis at the time of the letting, and one of the members went to San Francisco. They have watched quite carefully the letting of the contracts for the Indian Service.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman explain in what way and in what manner they have watched the letting? As I understand, these contracts are always let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. MANN. It is quite a complicated job to determine who is the lowest responsible bidder on many of these contracts that are let.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the gentleman from Indiana is to have five minutes and the gentleman from Texas the other five, both on the same side of the proposition?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not ask for any time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would be entitled to the time.

Mr. MILLER. I want five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate be closed in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if there are going to be any amendments offered to this paragraph?

Mr. COX. I have no amendment to offer. I moved to strike out the last word in order to get some information.

Mr. WALSH. Because if there should be an amendment to strike out, I think 15 minutes would be an inadequate time to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois started to give some information, and it is solely information that I want on this subject.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, the board has had some one at Chicago and at St. Louis in reference to the letting of these contracts and the inspection of the supplies. One of their members went to San Francisco in reference, I think, to the same matter, although of that I am not sure. The board, as the gentleman from Indiana understands, consists of citizens without pay. It appears from the last report that a number of citizens at their own expense have done considerable work in reference to the Indian supplies at Indian agencies. How extensive that is I do not know. Probably not very extensive, but they have done very good work.

Mr. COX. In looking at the late act of 1882 it says that the commissioners shall report their doings to the Secretary of the Interior. Does the gentleman know whether they have complied with that part of the law?

Mr. MANN. They have, and I read the annual report only a few days ago; it came to my desk within 10 days or 2 weeks.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman undertake to say that in the supervision of supplies they accomplish any material benefit for the Indians, and, if so, in what manner?

Mr. MANN. In the way of supplies their material benefit is to the Government. The mere fact that an outside agency can go in and be present at the lettings and inspect the goods and supplies undoubtedly has a very good influence on the question of contracts.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think that good influence results in a reduced cost of supplies to the Government?

Mr. MANN. Probably, and in better supplies and in the way of reduced cost of supplies. I took an interest in this matter two years ago, because of the gentleman who used to be chairman of the commission—the superintendent of public instruction in New York State and president of the university which I attended—and I watched what he was doing. That was Dr. Draper, who has since died.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words simply to call attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the part of the hearings wherein there are set forth many answers to the questions which he propounded. Page 234 and a large number of pages following in the hearings contain a detailed account of the work performed recently by the Indian commissioners. If the gentleman will direct his attention to those pages he will find that the commissioners have been present at the letting of the contracts and the inspection of goods; that these are high-class men who pay their own expenses. They visited many reservations, and have put into concrete form recently certain recommendations of an important and valuable character.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], always diligent in trying to ascertain where some saving can be effected on behalf of the Government, has evidently overlooked a very important matter. This committee has just struck from the bill a provision which saved to the Government $62,000 a year, and yet we appropriate $300,000 for the same item, and allow the commissioners to expend it in the matter of expenses in the purchase of goods for warehouses.

Mr. COX. I voted with the committee on that.

Mr. MANN. We did not strike out anything.

Mr. GOOD. The provision was adopted which, in effect, strikes out that provision which makes it no longer necessary to pay rent for these warehouses. We save by that proviso $62,000, but in reality you do not save a cent, for you give the same amount you gave last year to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be wasted in useless expenses of traveling about, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and other persons having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted allotment, or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That hereafter any officer or employee appointed or designated by the Secretary of the Interior as special examiner in heirship cases shall have authority to administer oaths in investigations committed to him: Provided further, That hereafter upon the determination of the heirs of a deceased Indian by the Secretary of the Interior there shall be paid by such heirs or from the estate of such deceased Indian or deducted from the proceeds from the sale of the land of the deceased allottee, or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $15, to cover the cost of determining the heirs to the estate of the said deceased allottee, which amount shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States and a report made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on or before the first Monday in December of all moneys collected and deposited as herein directed: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Osage Indians, nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, in Oklahoma.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, and particularly to the language contained in the second proviso, beginning on line 10, down to and including the word "directed," in line 22. I find that the same language was used in the last appropriation bill, which made it permanent law. I want to know why the statute as it now exists should be copied in this paragraph?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not permanent law.

Mr. FOWLER. It is the same thing.

Mr. MANN. It is permanent law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I would be very glad to have it stricken out.

Mr. CARTER. This is the same language exactly.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that language in the bill, the second paragraph, beginning after the word "him," in line 10, and ending with the word "directed," in line 22, be stricken out of the bill; and I offer that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order and offer an amendment?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 10, after the word "him," strike out the proviso down to and including the word "directed" in line 22, on page 11.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that going out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of all moneys appropriated for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians: And provided also, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order, and I will make the point of order to the language, commencing in line 10, after the word "twenty-five," down to and including the word "law," in line 20, which reads as follows:

And all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

I have no doubt that wisdom will not die when this House expires.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is that on page 12?

Mr. MANN. Yes. That is the item that would make a continuing appropriation, round and round.

Mr. CARTER. A revolving appropriation?

Mr. MANN. Until the year 1924.

Mr. CARTER. It is what might be called a revolving reimbursable appropriation?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois what his views are as to having this continuing appropriation for the next 11 years embodied in the first clause of the proviso. This sum is to remain available until 1925.

Mr. MANN. The first proviso authorizes the department to permit the repayment of money, which practically it has loaned to the Indians, during a period of years. I can see no objection to that. It is to help the Indians purchase stock or machinery or something of that kind. It is practically an advance to them, and they pay it during a series of years; but if we make this appropriation every year, as we have been making it for a number of years, and then all of the repayments go back into the appropriation, giving Congress no control over the subject whatever, it would become a very tidy sum in the course of 10 years, and we would have no control over it. Of course, the department would like to have it that way, or some person in the department would. I do not say that the Secretary himself would favor such a proposition, and I suppose he would not; but it is absolutely contrary to every principle of appropriations which has been adopted in this House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that Congress ought to keep the closest possible supervision of these funds. This language means the same thing as the language in which the appropriation was carried last year. Had it not been for that it was carried in the bill last year, I think neither our subcommittee nor, perhaps, the full committee would have agreed to have it go into the bill in this way.

Mr. MANN. This is not the language in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. This is not the language in the act, but it is practically the same thing. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the proviso, which reads as follows:

Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

That language, which is in the present law, is of substantially the same import, and had it not been in a former appropriation act I would have objected to it myself.

Mr. MANN. The amount here is increased. Last year it was $100,000, and this year it is $400,000, to be carried back into the same fund when it is paid in. Next year it is $400,000. At the end of 10 years, if it is repaid in, it would be several million dollars without any control by Congress.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman's contention is correct. I would like to explain how this amount comes to be increased.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not taking any exception to that, I will say.

Mr. CARTER. It will be noticed that only $100,000 was estimated for at this particular place, but in other items of the bill there were estimated for all told $825,000, making a total of $925,000. We reduced that $925,000 to $400,000, because this was more or less an experimental proposition. It is, as the gentleman from Illinois has explained, a proposition to furnish the Indians implements and stock with which to work their allotments and farms, and as it is somewhat in an experimental stage we thought it better to cut the amount to less than one-half, and that has been done, and all these other items of $825,000 in the estimates have been eliminated from the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the language against which the point of order is directed constitutes a change in existing law, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso beginning in line 20 and ending in line 24 with the word "Indians" for the reason that the same——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 20, strike out the proviso, as follows:
"Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of all moneys appropriated for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think it is necessary to have a detailed statement?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to give my reasons for my motion. The law now provides as follows, and this was the act of the last session of the Sixty-second Congress:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of the use of this fund.

The word "annually," Mr. Chairman, makes this permanent law just as much as if the word "hereafter" had been used. Any word in the law showing a continuation of authority to act makes it permanent law, and the word "annually" in this instance is already in the law carried by the act to which I have referred, and you can not make the authority of the department any stronger by using the word "hereafter." I presume that the committee intended to make permanent law out of the matter, but I apprehend there was an oversight in the examination of the proviso that was carried in the last bill.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I do.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman think that the provision in last year's law providing for an annual report relates alone to the appropriation therein made?

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MILLER. That is my opinion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the view the committee had of it.

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not think so at all, because the language is entirely distinct from the appropriation and has no connection with it, because it reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of the use of this fund.

Mr. MILLER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in this same paragraph which the gentleman has pointed out there is a provision for the reletting of that fund during a series of years.

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MILLER. Therefore an annual report would be necessary for that particular appropriation.

Mr. FOWLER. No; I do not think so. I think the discussion which just preceded my motion settled this question of funds that have been appropriated and not used. They revert to the Treasury of the United States, and require an additional act in order to become available, so there can not be any annual report of the fund that was appropriated in the last session, because the language here refers not to the fund that was appropriated in the act of 1913, but refers to the fund that is usually appropriated for the purpose which is carried in this paragraph. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOWLER. For a question only.

Mr. CARTER. I just wanted to make a statement which I thought might put the gentleman straight on the proposition.

Mr. FOWLER. I think I am already straight.

Mr. CARTER. Well, I thought the gentleman wanted information about it, and I thought some discussion might settle the difference between us.

Mr. FOWLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. The language in the bill of last year evidently referred to the fund then in existence. What are we doing now? We are creating a new fund, and, by the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, this is an entirely different kind of fund. The old fund, with which we dealt last year, is what we were speaking of awhile ago as a revolving reimbursable appropriation. That fund is eliminated from the present paragraph by the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. FOWLER. Why, that could be made available by a special act after the expiration of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made.

Mr. CARTER. Well, I call the gentleman's attention to this language, which I read a while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call the gentleman's attention to this language:

All repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924.

No reappropriation of these funds is necessary, but it is necessary for the use of the money we are appropriating to-day. So that makes it two separate and distinct funds. This language in the act last year applied to the revolving fund and the language in the bill as it is to-day applies to the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, care, and protection of machinery and irrigation wells already completed, in connection with the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Reservation, $10,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of securing some information from members of the committee with regard to this and other items. On page 2 of the bill, second paragraph, the paragraph running down onto page 3 and over onto page 4, there is an appropriation of $345,700 for construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, pumps, and so forth. Provision is made that "no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act."

I find in the hearings, on page 33, a statement made by the Indian Commissioner, or the irrigation division of the office, as to the irrigation enterprises on which they expect to expend the $345,700 carried in the item that I have just referred to. I find that among other items therein contained, which they propose to pay for out of the general appropriation, "Gila River Reservation, district No. 4, surveys to protect water rights of the Pima Indians and repairs to the existing canals," and so forth. It is possible the $10,000 contained in the item just read is expected to cover the same expenditure which is contemplated in the item on page 33 of the hearings which I have just read. But if the two items are or are not the same, why should there be a separate item at this place in the bill? Why was not this $10,000 provided for in the general lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This does not apply to the Gila River Reservation at all, but applies to wells that were bored several years ago, and those wells, eight of them, are situated on a mesa on much higher land than the river, and the lands to be irrigated under these wells do not touch the river. It is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, if the Chairman will allow me, it is proposed to spend $61,000 of the $345,700 contained in the lump-sum appropriation in Arizona, and under the conditions of the lump-sum appropriation those sums may be reimbursed; but, in addition to that, you have here an item of $10,000 to be used in approximately the same locality in which a part of the lump-sum appropriation is to be used.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will explain to the gentleman that I think this appropriation of $10,000 is necessary for the purpose of taking care of wells that have heretofore been constructed, with considerable land under those wells that can be irrigated, but the Indians did not desire to go up into this mesa, and refused to do it, and it is doubtful whether or not these wells should be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I presume the wells referred to are those drilled by the Reclamation Service at Socaton?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Those are the wells.

Mr. MONDELL. But I do not understand how, in addition to providing $61,000 for Indian work in Arizona under the lump-sum appropriation, it was found necessary to carry this item of $10,000, not reimbursable, at this place in the bill. If more than $345,000 is necessary for these general purposes, why was not the lump-sum appropriation increased?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is to take care of all irrigation wells put in by the Reclamation Service, and it is not for the Indian Service.

Mr. MONDELL. These wells could be taken care of, as the gentleman well knows, under the lump-sum appropriation, if it is proper to take care of them. Personally it seems to me rather extraordinary that, having spent $350,000 for wells and pumps and machinery for the Indians, we must spend $10,000 a year to take care of them. But, assuming that it is necessary, why is it necessary, in addition to the contemplated expenditures under the lump-sum appropriation, that we should make this appropriation of $10,000 not reimbursable? Why can not this be made from the lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is shown here where all of this lump-sum appropriation, as the gentleman has stated, is to be expended, and none of it is to be expended in the vicinity, even, of where these wells are located. It is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. There may be some difference between this item and the item I have just read, namely, the Gila River district, No. 4, and so forth. But it is practically the same country. But what I want to know is this——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to reply to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. What I want to know is this: How much of the appropriations for those purposes do the Indians of Arizona need? Why should it be split up and divided, and a part of it carried in a lump-sum appropriation, which under certain contingencies would be reimbursable—part of it carried in this item and in other items which are to follow, under no circumstances reimbursable—all for the benefit of Indians who have many acres of land?

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit, this item was carried in the bill last year and the year before, and antedating the time of the $300,000 appropriation of which you speak. It follows the general form of the bill passed last year. It is reimbursable, for every item for irrigation is specifically declared in this bill to be reimbursable.

Mr. MONDELL. Where?

Mr. HAYDEN. On page 4 of the bill, at the beginning of the page, where it says:

Provided further, That all moneys expended heretofore, herein, or hereafter under this provision shall be reimbursable where the Indians have adequate funds to repay the Government, such reimbursements to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. MONDELL. Where is that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At the top of the page.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course I referred to that some time ago. That makes all of the lump sum reimbursable. It is a very excellent provision. I am glad that the committee put it in at the suggestion of the Board of Indian Commissioners. That renders all of these projects under the lump sum reimbursable where the conditions make them reimbursable, but that does not make this item reimbursable.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the gentleman want to amend this item so that it will be reimbursable?

Mr. MONDELL. I want a little light on that subject. I think we are entitled to know just how much the Indians of Arizona need for irrigation.

Mr. HAYDEN. They need a great deal more than is contained in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I think if we are going to provide for them generally—and I think we should—it should be done under a single head. It should not be split up and part carried under a lump sum, reimbursable, and part of it scattered in several items in the bill not reimbursable.

Mr. HAYDEN. I explained to the gentleman that this simply followed the language in the appropriation of last year and of the year before.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is trying to get appropriations for his Indians, and I am very glad that he has been successful if they need it; but it seems to me that the committee should have put these items together and made them all reimbursable, particularly where they are for the benefit of Indians who have a large amount of property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Why is it necessary to make a special appropriation to take care of these wells? Are the wells not in operation?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that the wells are in operation, and the water is used in irrigating the land.

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about that. Do I understand that the Government has to maintain those wells, and that the people who get the benefit of the water can not even operate the plant?

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman will remember that, regarding these wells at Sacaton, there was a great prejudice existing among the Indians against the water on account of its alkaline character. The Indian Service has succeeded in overcoming the prejudice, and my opinion is that the Indians ought to pay for the water as soon as they are in a condition to pay.

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me that they are using the water, because during the current year it cost only $5,000 to take care of the wells, and this year it is $10,000. That does not look as if anybody was contributing toward the maintenance of the plant. Is there any chance for this plant itself ever to become self-maintaining as to current operating expenses?

Mr. HAYDEN. I think so. The Indians are successfully planting cotton and other crops there. They are poor now and they need some help. As soon as they are on their feet and able to pay I am in favor of their paying for the operation of the plant.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that we ought to maintain an irrigating plant at the expense of the Government after the people get the benefit of the water?

Mr. HAYDEN. Temporarily in the case of these particular Indians.

Mr. MANN. Why will it cost next year twice as much to maintain these wells as it cost this year?

Mr. HAYDEN. Because there are twice as many Indians now using the water as there were last year.

Mr. MANN. If twice the number of Indians use the water, why can they not contribute something toward the maintenance of the wells? On the gentleman's theory the more people who get the benefit of the wells the more expensive it is to the Government to operate the wells.

Mr. HAYDEN. This is a temporary expedient. After these people are able to pay this expense, I do not think the Government should appropriate money to pump the water.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has just stated that we have made this appropriation for a number of years. Now we double the amount and are going backward.

Mr. HAYDEN. Heretofore they did not use much of the water. They are using it more and more.

Mr. MANN. It is a novel idea to me. Some years ago we were told that if we would establish this irrigating plant the people down there would use the water and turn the desert into a garden and pay back a part of the expense. Now we are told by my handsome and distinguished friend from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] that the moment they begin to use the plant nothing comes back, and the more use there is of it the more we pay out of the Federal Treasury to operate it. Is there not a chance for these people to pay back something for the current use of water? Is it not worth anything at all?

Mr. HAYDEN. I believe so, and as quickly as they can get an opportunity to get on their feet they will pay. These Pima Indians are now miserably poor, the gentleman should understand.

Mr. MANN. Meanwhile we pay money out of the Treasury, not reimbursable, to maintain an irrigating plant which furnishes water to the Indians, which makes them worse off than they were before.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think it should be made reimbursable. Indeed, I think all of these items should be made reimbursable. I agree with the gentleman on all these items.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to amend the end of the paragraph by adding "reimbursable from any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 24, after the figures "$10,000," insert the following: "reimbursable from any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee further than to explain my object in offering this and other amendments of this character that I may offer.

I think it is time that we should get on a more businesslike basis in dealing with the Indians, and I think that where Indians have property and it is deemed advisable to make appropriations for their benefit those appropriations should be made reimbursable. I think they should be made reimbursable even in cases where it may be possible that conditions will arise under which funds may not be reimbursed or paid back. In the main we have been pretty liberal with most of these Indian tribes, and I think it will be a good thing, when the record is made up, to have it shown clearly what the appropriations have been and the purposes for which they have been made. We shall have a record of them if we make a charge of them against the Indians. I think it will be better for the Indian when he understands, when we build him irrigation works and when we take care of his irrigation works and keep them running, as we did in this case, after we have built them, that he eventually must pay the cost of that construction and care.

Therefore it is my purpose, wherever Indians have any property from which a sum proposed to be appropriated may be reimbursed, to offer a similar amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The item which has just been read is a monument to the activity of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. Not only does the Indian Department propose to expend $61,000 of the lump-sum appropriation in his State and the additional $10,000 that we have just passed, but here is an item of $5,000 for the irrigation of the lands of nomadic Indians. It is a little difficult for me to understand just how you can catch a nomadic Indian long enough to tie him down to a piece of irrigated land, but if that can be done, it ought to be done, and I think our friend [Mr. HAYDEN] is entitled to a great deal of credit for having secured an appropriation for that purpose. But it seems to me that items of this sort ought to be taken care of in the lump-sum appropriation. This item could be paid for out of the lump-sum appropriation, as the gentleman knows, and if items of this sort appeal to the Indian Service, they ought to be in the lump-sum appropriation. Of course, if they were items relating to a large project being carried out on a reservation, they would properly be separate items; but this is an item providing for just the sort of irrigation that the lump-sum appropriation was provided for. I shall not offer an amendment making this sum reimbursable, because I assume that a nomadic Indian has no land on which he could realize. I do not quite understand how he has any land that he can irrigate; but if a nomadic, wandering Indian has any land that you can irrigate, you ought to irrigate it, and here is an appropriation of $5,000 for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. It does not say anything about irrigation of lands. This is for the irrigation of Indians in a very arid territory. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I accept the amendment. The gentleman from Illinois says it is for the irrigation of arid Indians. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is for domestic and stock purposes, and the language is entirely different from the language of the bill appropriating for farming purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not yet very clear to me just how you could irrigate land for domestic and stock purposes. I do not understand how you irrigate land for stock-watering purposes anyway, and I do not quite understand how you even do that for nomadic Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman lives in a stock-raising country, as I do. Do you not have to find plenty of water there for your stock?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but we do not irrigate our land in order to water our stock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But suppose you have a garden plat around your house. Do you not need a little water for that purpose?

Mr. MONDELL. I should not call that stock-watering purposes. I should call that irrigating a garden.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a domestic purpose, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a bridge across the Moencopi Wash on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz., $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think this ought to be reimbursable?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do. I shall be glad to accept an amendment making it reimbursable.

Mr. MANN. I have not an amendment prepared. I have the language in the law of last year. I will ask the gentleman to let this be passed over for a moment.

Mr. HAYDEN. All right. I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be considered as passed over. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Fort Mohave Indian Reservation, in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the Colorado River, near said reservation, and to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost for the construction of a suitable bridge across said river, and also to ascertain from a council of the members of said tribe whether the Indians of said reservation are willing that the proportion of the cost of said bridge, which the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be properly chargeable to them, shall be reimbursable from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed to the credit of said tribe in the Treasury, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman from Arizona why should not the entire cost of the bridge be paid by the Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. The State of Arizona, by its last legislature, appropriated $25,000 to assist in the construction of this bridge. The Legislature of the State of California appropriated a similar amount, but the bill failed to obtain the signature of the governor; but I understand that the people of San Bernardino County are willing to pay their share of the cost of the bridge. This investigation is for the purpose of ascertaining whether the interests of the Indians are such that they ought to contribute toward the construction of the bridge, and if so, how much; and, further, whether they are willing to pay their share by making the cost reimbursable.

Mr. MANN. Is it intended that all the amounts that the Government itself shall appropriate for this purpose shall be reimbursed, or not?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; shall be reimbursed out of any funds that the Indians may have to their credit in the future.

Mr. MANN. That is, the State of Arizona pays a portion of the expense, and California, by some form of government, either State or county, may pay a portion. Now, is all the balance expected to be reimbursable?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; that part which we appropriate would be reimbursed.

Mr. MANN. This says—

Which the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be properly chargeable to them.

I want to know whether the Secretary of the Interior is likely to say that the Indians shall pay $1 or all of the amount that they ought to pay?

Mr. HAYDEN. No money will be appropriated except the amount which it is ascertained that the Indians should ultimately pay. That is the only money to come out of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. MOORE. Does Congress make any appropriation under the river and harbor act for the Colorado River?

Mr. HAYDEN. The last river and harbor act contained a small appropriation.

Mr. MOORE. How large a river is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is a navigable stream.

Mr. MOORE. Then, would not the construction of a bridge necessarily come under the provisions of the general bridge act?

Mr. HAYDEN. Whenever we ask for the appropriation, it will come under the general bridge act. This is merely to ascertain whether a bridge should be built and the amount that the Indians should pay.

Mr. MOORE. You are asking virtually for a survey by the Secretary of the Interior rather than the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAYDEN. We have done that in other cases.

Mr. MOORE. That is what you are doing here.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. You could not build a bridge without the consent of the Secretary of War, could you?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Secretary of War would have to approve the plans, to see that they did not interfere with navigation.

Mr. MANN. Last year we provided for a bridge across the Colorado River, to be built under the general bridge law.

Mr. MOORE. I assume that the question of a draw in the bridge would arise here, as in other cases. If this is a navigable stream, I presume we ought to take the ordinary precaution of seeing that navigation is not impeded.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintaining, strengthening, and raising the dike constructed to protect the irrigable lands on the Fort Mohave Reservation, Ariz., from damage by floods, $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman from Arizona whether the Indians on the Fort Mohave Reservation have any considerable land of their own?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are about 844 Indians that have been allotted in that reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. Should not this item for strengthening and raising the dike for the protection of their lands be charged to them?

Mr. HAYDEN. I think it should be reimbursable. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman's theory in such matters.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to make this provision reimbursable at the end of the paragraph just read.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Arizona what is the correct pronunciation of M-o-h-a-v-e?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is pronounced as if spelled M-o-h-a-v-e-y, with the accent on the second syllable.

Mr. MOORE. Which is the correct spelling, M-o-h-a-v-e or M-o-j-a-v-e?

Mr. HAYDEN. The word is spelled both ways.

Mr. MOORE. It is spelled both ways in the bill. On line 13, page 15, it is spelled M-o-j-a-v-e, and on line 21, page 14, it is spelled M-o-h-a-v-e.

Mr. HAYDEN. The old style of spelling it was M-o-j-a-v-e; that is Spanish. The proper and modern way of spelling it is M-o-h-a-v-e.

Mr. MOORE. At the proper time I should like to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there is an amendment now pending, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 14, after the figures "$5,000," insert the following: "reimbursable out of the funds of said Indians now or hereafter available."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona a question. He willingly and cheerfully concedes the propriety of making these sums reimbursable. Why did not the committee make them reimbursable?

Mr. HAYDEN. Well, they followed the bill of last year.

Mr. BUTLER. Then we have been making the appropriations heretofore without having made them reimbursable?

Mr. HAYDEN. My own idea is that we should make a general law making such items reimbursable.

Mr. BUTLER. I asked the question because I wanted to express my appreciation of the efforts of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Last year I offered amendments similar to this to many items, but some of these amendments went out in another body and were lost in the shuffle.

Mr. BUTLER. This seems to be so easy that it surprised me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 13, strike out the word "Mojave" and insert the word "Mohave."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $20,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask whether these Indians have any considerable amount of property.

Mr. HAYDEN. They have not; they are absolutely the poorest Indians in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Then I have no disposition to make their condition any worse.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navaho Indians on the Navaho Reservation, $15,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona what is the condition of the Navahos referred to on the Navaho Reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. They have plenty of money; that is, they are not as bad off as some other Indians.

Mr. MONDELL. They have a large reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. The largest in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend at the end of line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, at the end of line 7, insert the following: "Reimbursable out of the funds of said Indians now or hereafter available."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to recur to the paragraph that was passed over a short time ago at the top of page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to recur to the paragraph passed over at the top of page 14. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, at the end of line 7, after the word "expended," insert the following: "Reimbursable to the United States by the Indians having tribal rights on said reservation, and to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds belonging to said Indians until paid."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the period be stricken out and a comma inserted, and we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to take up another portion of this bill. This bill in all probability will not be passed to-night, and probably it will be taken up again on Thursday. There is a provision on page 34 with respect to the distribution of a per capita payment to the Choctaws now on the rolls, and I am very much interested in that provision. Because of circumstances I can not be here on Thursday. I am very anxious to get permission to take up this provision out of order at this time.

I do not think it could affect anybody to have it taken up out of order. I want to make a point of order and have it considered at this time; and, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the provision on the bottom of page 33 and at the beginning of page 34 with respect to the per capita payment be taken up for consideration at this time.

Mr. MANN. Be now read.

Mr. HARRISON. Be now read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that that portion of the bill beginning at line 20 on page 33 and ending with line 8 on page 34 be now read. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman how long he thinks it will take to dispose of this proposition?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I really hope that the point of order I expect to make will be sustained.

Mr. CARTER. I did not ask the gentleman about hope. The gentleman is asking unanimous consent, and if possible I would like to comply with this request, but I want to know how long he expects it is going to take.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think it will take long, and I am hopeful that it will not.

Mr. CARTER. When the gentleman makes his point of order, if it is not sustained, is that all the action he expects to take with reference to the matter?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I really expect, if the point of order be overruled, to offer an amendment to the paragraph, but it ought not to take long to dispose of that.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, upon that, if we expect to go fully into the Mississippi Choctaw question and their rights, on this amendment I shall want at least an hour; but in that case we could not get through here this afternoon, for doubtless the gentleman from Mississippi would also want an hour.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman would not get it at any time.

Mr. CARTER. If we expect to discuss an amendment like that, I will say that we ought to have an hour, because the side with relation to the Mississippi Choctaws has been discussed and rediscussed, and the other side of the case has not been presented to the House. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois ought to say that, because I think we ought to have sufficient time to present our side of the case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Oklahoma knows that if he took the floor for an hour upon this bill, however eloquent he might be, most of the Members of the House would instantly leave. The same thing can be said of every other Member of the House. You will get more information into the heads of Members of the House in 15 minutes than you will in an hour, because they will listen to a 15-minute proposition and will not listen for an hour. We never will pass these appropriation bills if we do not get along with them.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am as anxious to get along with the appropriation bills as anyone, but when I speak of an hour I mean that we would want an hour upon this side. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] desires to discuss the matter, as does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WEAVER] and also the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. Perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] may want some time. That would not give each of these gentlemen even the 15 minutes about which the gentleman from Illinois has spoken.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that I would agree, even assuming that the point of order should be overruled, to take only five minutes in the discussion of the amendment, if that would likewise be agreeable to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman has already had, under favorable auspices, something over an hour in which to discuss this question. The other side of the question has never been discussed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is not taking any chances. Give every man a show for his white alley.

Mr. CARTER. I shall not object, except that I do not want to be diverted from the bill, from something we might finish to something that we might not get through with this afternoon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he intends to make the point of order or intends to reserve it?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I intend to make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As soon as it is read?

Mr. HARRISON. As soon as it is read.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That will bring the discussion on the point of order rather than upon the merits of any question that the gentleman from Mississippi may have in mind.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Then if it is overruled he is going to offer an amendment, and there is where the discussion will come.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do I understand that the gentleman desires to bring this matter up this evening because he has to leave the city?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is apparent from the statements made on the floor that we could not get through with this discussion this evening. Hence, if he expects to be present during the entire discussion we would have to put the matter over in any event.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Would it not be satisfactory to put the consideration of that item off, under unanimous consent, until the other portions of the bill have been gone over?

Mr. HARRISON. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. MANN. Of course there might be a chance to finish the bill on Thursday, but I take it that even though that were so, we would wait until the gentleman got back?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course I will not ask the committee to hold up the bill for me.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item when it is reached be passed until the last item in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman understand the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, that if it is possible to conclude this bill on Thursday, nevertheless it will be postponed to accommodate the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not ask that.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. What time does the gentleman expect to be back?

Mr. HARRISON. I think I will be back on Friday.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It would be fair to wait until the gentleman got back.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the item referred to when reached be postponed and made the last item of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $10,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. What is the reason for the change in the paragraph from the way it was carried heretofore?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is an amendment put in the bill by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], and the language suggested is agreeable to himself and to the department.

Mr. MANN. Now, heretofore we have authorized the purchase of small tracts of land adjacent to lands heretofore purchased, and so forth. Now, do I understand it has become the policy of the United States to purchase land for all homeless Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This item has been carried in the bill for several years, and they stated that the lands available for this purpose——

Mr. MANN. This item has never been carried in the bill heretofore. I will say that to the gentleman for his information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is an item for the purchase of land for some wandering Indians, the chairman will recall, offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], and it is for the purpose of getting homes for a few Indians who are simply wandering tramps, living on their neighbors, and some of them squatting on the public domain, and who are subject to removal at any time if anybody with authority came along.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that something near $100,000 has been already expended for this purpose in California? That is my recollection.

Mr. MILLER. I would say in excess of that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the old law of last year.

Mr. MILLER. And there are 1,400 Indians——

Mr. MANN. I have it right before me. The gentleman need not take the trouble; I am looking at it now.

Mr. MILLER. All the Indians are taken care of except about 1,400, and those have been located; and it is desired to have this appropriation made in order to take care of them and finish the matter up.

Mr. MANN. For the first time, as far as I recall, we use the expression, "Purchase of land for homeless Indians." There has been a lot of homeless Indians, and there will be always as long as there are Indians. There are more homeless whites. Are we going to support them? Is the Government going to purchase land for everybody who has not got a home? Is it the policy now to divide up the Indian reservations, give the Indians allotments, let them be defrauded of their allotments or get drunk and dispose of them, or perhaps sell them, and in the course of time many of them will waste their subsistence, and then as soon as they get without a home have Congress step in and buy a new home and let them go through the same operation? I am not in favor of it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not carry the proposition out fully, it seems to me. In this case we have been buying for these Indians in California unirrigated lands at a low price and then later making large appropriations for their irrigation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know we have for years been authorizing the purchase of small tracts of land adjacent to land heretofore purchased, but here you are starting in and advertising that you are going to purchase homes for homeless Indians, and I ask, Where will we stop?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me state what was stated before the committee.

Mr. MANN. Who stated it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is a question put by myself to Mr. Meritt:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know any other band of Indians situated like these that would require us at the next Congress to make an appropriation for? Is there any other band in California?
Mr. MERITT. No, sir; there is none.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman who stated that, whoever he may be, I did not catch who it was——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was the Assistant Indian Commissioner, Mr. Meritt.

Mr. MANN. How long has he been in his office?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He has been in office a good many years.

Mr. MANN. He has not been there long enough to know there are homeless Indians in many of the States of the Union, notwithstanding his statement there.

Mr. CARTER. He said in California alone, I think.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me read you again; and this is our justification for it:

As the committee knows, the office has been purchasing land for the homeless Indians in California for a number of years, and we have practically all the Indians located except these 1,400.
The CHAIRMAN. Are these part of the Mission Indians of California?
Mr. MERITT. The Mission Indians now have lands. This appropriation will care for homeless Indians of any tribe.

Mr. MANN. I should not object to carrying the item the way it was before, but if I can prevent it, even for a short time, I shall prevent the Government undertaking the scope of work of buying homes for all homeless Indians, especially in view of the fact that there are now 350,000 homeless white people in New York City looking for a job and can not find it.

Mr. CARTER. Let me say just this to the gentleman: You will note that this section 3 provides:

For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, and for the purchase of small tracts of land situated adjacent to lands heretofore purchased, and for improvements on lands for the use and occupancy of Indians in California, $57,000.

That is the old law. Now, then, I call the gentleman's attention to page 349 of the hearings, which will show one reason for the change in the language. It was Mr. BURKE who asked this question:

The statement shows $500 worth of land purchased, and if there was any more we would like to know it.

Now, as I remember, the reason that language was changed was because most of the money had been used for administration purposes, because under the old language they had spent only $500 when they had an appropriation of $5,000 or $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Not for administration purposes. The item before was for "support and civilization of the Indians in California." Now, it was used for the maintenance of the Indians. That policy we have entered upon unfortunately. Now comes in a proposition to buy them homes. Before they spent only a small sum, and the committee attempted to justify it in the House because it was so small. Even that small item of appropriation started in last year with $500, and now it is $10,000 to buy homes for homeless Indians. Ten million dollars would not begin to supply the homeless Indians of the United States with homes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is correct about that; but it was represented, as I recall, to the committee last year that most all of the sum appropriated then would be used for the purchase of homes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I have raised this question several times on that, and it was always stated that while the appropriation was a considerable sum, as a matter of fact a very minor amount of it was used for the purchase of homes. Most of it was used for the maintenance and support of the Indians.

Mr. CARTER. A very small amount seems to have been used, but the contemplation was that most of it would be used for permanent homes, and the time would eventually come when we would not have to appropriate for support and civilization.

Mr. MANN. I am sure it was stated differently on the floor of the House.

Mr. CARTER. And we thought it was a much better plan to provide homes for them rather than to supply the support and civilization items for them.

Mr. MANN. I think it is subject to a point of order as it is drawn. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will withdraw the point of order, because this has been well considered by the committee, and also by the department.

Mr. MANN. It has not been at all defended by the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman did all the talking.

Mr. CARTER. Does it not appeal to the gentleman from Illinois that we might by the purchase of land some time be able to place these Indians, who are said to be industrious, upon a self-supporting basis and that we might in the end dispense with their support and civilization?

Mr. MANN. My observation is that the more charity you give to a man who is not inclined to work, the less he will work.

Mr. CARTER. But the hearings and all the evidence shows, Mr. Chairman, that these particular Indians do work.

Mr. MANN. Why, the gentleman from Oklahoma knows perfectly well that any of these Indians who work out there during a series of years will not have to get charity.

Mr. CARTER. That depends on the degree of civilization.

Mr. MANN. The more savage they are the more they are in demand for show purposes.

Mr. MILLER. These Indians, for the most part, I will say to the gentleman, are Indians that are very wild. I do not mean savage, but I mean they do not like to associate with the white man. They shrink from him. They go back into the mountain regions and into the interior, and they are more or less wandering and homeless Indians, who have sought these inaccessible places by reason of the encroachment of the civilization of the whites.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest that the members of the committee hold a conference, so they can agree as to the condition of these Indians. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] says that they are sober and industrious, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] says that they are wild and savage.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Minnesota simply said they would not associate with white men. That does not indicate that they are wild, necessarily. They are just particular with whom they associate. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. I think the feature that impressed me the most—and I do not know how the other members of the committee were impressed—is that you are never going to make an Indian self-supporting if you are going to hand him out from day to day and from year to year enough on which to live. The thing to do with the Indians is to get them to take care of themselves, and you can not do it until you give them some incentive or some tools to work with or a place upon which to work. These Indians are agricultural Indians. They are not mechanics, they are not sailors, they are not fruit growers, so far as I know. They are just plain agriculturists; and if you can give them a piece of land on which they can build a home, probably you would not have to appropriate very much for them.

Mr. MANN. We have been appropriating for the support and civilization and giving land to these Indians ever since I have been a Member of the House. If they were any good, they would have had the money invested for land and have gone on and bettered the land. If they were any good, they would have money invested for land and would go on and irrigate the land.

Mr. MILLER. They never had any.

Mr. MANN. Not on your life; but they did not. They took the money in the way of food and clothing. They would not have it put into land.

Mr. MILLER. I am frank to say to the gentleman that unfortunately a portion of the appropriation heretofore made went for salaries and for some other features that probably could not be very well defended.

Mr. MANN. Well, if most of the appropriation of $50,000 for the current year goes for salaries——

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no; not the current year——

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman say what proportion of the $10,000 appropriated last year or the year before went for salaries?

Mr. MILLER. That accounts for the fact that 1,400 of them are still to be taken care of. Every dollar of this money will go to the purpose indicated. If these Indians had ever had a reservation, or ever had a distinct area of land recognized by the United States as falling to them, there would be no justification for an appropriation of this kind. While my information is not exact and detailed, yet I think it is fairly exact on the whole, and that information convinces me that these Indians are the residuaries of the movements of the Indians moving westward and wandering west in the mountain regions, and they have been collected in that area; and while it is not necessary to call particular attention to the white man's burden, yet it seems to me it does exist in this particular case.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman from Minnesota, if I may, very briefly, what in his opinion is the policy that should be pursued by the Government where Indians have taken their tribal lands and squandered the proceeds of that land or of that property and become charitable objects? Shall the Government undertake their support or let them hustle for a livelihood?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think that the case the gentleman puts will ever comprehend the Indians in the United States. But if the Government should let them hustle for a livelihood, I think that would be the only way to make men of them. But there is no use in giving an allotment, with no roads and no teams and no instrumentalities to work with, to an Indian whose whole habits of life have fitted him for the life of a mechanic or of a sailor or something of that kind. It is not by giving an Indian a piece of land that you are going to make him self-supporting, unless he is accustomed to that sort of life.

Mr. MANN. I have a boy down in Arizona who tells me that he buys firewood from the Indians. They get it out of the forests, I presume. He says they are the best traders in firewood he ever saw, and get the best prices. If they have a forest given to them, I apprehend they are not so slow if they are adapted to taking care of themselves.

Well, I do not like to put my judgment up against the judgment of the committee in a special case.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that I resisted this for a long time myself.

Mr. MANN. Now it is a committee report.

Mr. MILLER. No. It had my hearty approval when it went in. I became convinced of its wisdom, and I am heartily for it at this minute, because I think it is a wise provision to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know whether it is right and proper to provide homes for the Indians of California. If we go back far enough, we may discover that the State of California is under more obligations to these people than the country is generally. Those Indians have lived in that State since time immemorial. They have been deprived of their lands. It is the richest region in the world, and it has not been made very clear to me that the people of the United States as a whole should be charged with furnishing homes to those Indians who have in some way or another been deprived of their ancestral home.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. I want to call attention to the fact that this is not a cheap proposition. If we really want to do something for these Indians, it would be a good thing to go into the Mississippi Valley and buy $100 land, where they could be sure to grow something. Under the items for irrigation expenditure, under the lump sum, on page 41 of the hearings, I find one in relation to the Tuolumne Indians. It seems that we purchased a tract of land for these Indians—I do not know what we paid for it—and that this land, to quote from the hearings—> is practically worthless for agricultural purposes without the installation of the project estimated for above.

There are 60 acres of land, and it is proposed to expend $5,000 for the irrigation of 60 acres. It is rather an expensive irrigation proposition for 60 acres, in addition to the sum that we paid for the land, whatever it may have been.

There is another one of these homeless-Indian propositions in California, the Pala. It is proposed to expend $9,000 for the irrigation of 100 acres for these Indians. I suppose those also are Indians for whom we have purchased lands. And so it goes all through quite a list of Indians in California. We have been buying lands for them and paying considerable prices for the lands, and then we have been appropriating large sums for the irrigation of their lands, and now it is proposed in several of the items under this lump-sum appropriation that we shall pay for the repair and the maintenance of these irrigation plants. We bought the lands for the Indians. We have irrigated them. In some cases we have installed pumping plants, and now we are proceeding to pay for the engineers and for the oil to operate the pumping plants, and we are proceeding to repair these plants, to throw the silt out when the ditches have become silted, and to repair the pipes, and all that sort of thing.

Perhaps it is necessary to do this, but it is an unfortunate thing. If it be necessary that we must go on forever, apparently, providing for these Indians, there ought to be some way to put them on a self-sustaining basis. If we buy lands and furnish them homes, they ought to be lands that they can utilize. If we find it necessary, after we have bought the lands, to irrigate them, at least the Indians ought to be able to keep up the projects that we build for them.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, has the last word been stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to learn something about these Indians from somebody who knows about them. It would be very interesting to me to learn how these Indians became homeless.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman refers to the Mission Indians of California?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. Did they not at some time have land of their own?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; and the white men got it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were squatters.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] says the white men got it. I live in the only place in the United States where the white men did not take it from them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where is that?

Mr. BUTLER. In Chester, Pa. That is where William Penn bought it and paid for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much did he pay for it?

Mr. BUTLER. He paid all the Indians asked. He paid quite as much as the gentleman from Texas would have paid. He got it as cheaply as he could, and so would the gentleman from Texas have done. Now, did not these California Indians once have homes; and if so, how did they lose their homes? I do not want to take up time, but I would be glad to know in a sentence or two, did not these homeless Indians at some time have homes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These were agricultural Indians, and they were gathered in groups along the rivers and along the seacoast of California. They were there when the whites first discovered this country, and that whole country belonged to them, of course, at that time. They were semicivilized Indians, something like the Five Tribes that we have in Oklahoma.

Mr. BUTLER. They did belong to tribes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They did belong to tribes.

Mr. BUTLER. And they did have homes by reason of belonging to tribes. How did they get rid of their land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were driven off, because the white men took the land from them, as has been the history of the whole country.

Mr. BUTLER. Some tribes did have lands, because we are asked to allot lands to them. As I understand, here is a collection of Indians in California who have no land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me explain to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There were no public lands in the State of California which were available to be laid off as reservations either by the President or through treaties. The Indians of Wyoming and other States have had bodies of land given them, possibly as much as 1,000 or 2,000 acres to each

Indian in some instances. California had no lands of that kind. Therefore these Indians are called the homeless Indians of California. If they are to have any land at all, it must be purchased for them by the United States Government.

Mr. BUTLER. Then they never have had lands as the Indians of Wyoming had? They did not belong to a group of Indians possessing land in tribal ownership?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were more like the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, who lived in towns.

Mr. BUTLER. Then they have the same relation to the Indians as poor white men would have to the other white men of the country?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In New Mexico they had grants given them by the Spanish Government. Unfortunately, in California there were no Spanish grants to these Indians. If there had been, they would have had their lands, as some of the Pueblo Indians who live in towns in New Mexico have. There was no Spanish title vested in these Indians, and when California was acquired by the United States by purchase it acquired the Indians and all of the public domain of that country. Hence the Indians had no land holdings from the Spanish Government, and the United States Government has given them none, and they are homeless Indians to-day. These are the Indians whom we are now trying to provide for.

Let me explain further. The Indians of Wyoming had reservations given them from the public domain of the United States, but the only way for these California Indians to get land is by the Government buying it for them. In Wyoming the public land was given to them—laid off in reservations and given them by the United States Government—but there is no land in California for the Government to give them. Hence we must buy it, if they are to have any land at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I am obliged to the gentleman for the information. It seems that, without any fault on the part of these Indians, they never had any land to squander, and that the white man has not neglected their care.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield——

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to him that evidently these Indians in the early days owned all of southern California, but they were timid Indians. They did not desire association with the white man, and retreated as he appeared on the scene. The reason other Indians have reservations left is because they were more virile and vigorous in the defense of their homes than these Indians were. These Indians were driven off at the first approach of the white men, and since then they have had no lands.

Mr. BUTLER. These Indians were more easily robbed, were they?

Mr. CARTER. It seems so.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. COOPER. I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma are these agricultural Indians accustomed to live by agriculture?

Mr. CARTER. It was so reported by the officials of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. COOPER. How many acres of land in California that are worth anything for purposes of agriculture can be bought for $10,000?

Mr. CARTER. There can not be a great deal bought.

Mr. COOPER. I should think not.

Mr. CARTER. There are some cut-over lands that can be bought, as was stated in the hearings, and there are perhaps some small tracts, remotely situated, which can be irrigated. In the districts remote from the towns, up around the Santa Rosa Reservation, I think there are some small tracts that could be irrigated.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says "perhaps." We are proposing to appropriate a specific sum of $10,000 to buy agricultural lands for agricultural Indians. Has the gentleman any data to show how much land can be purchased for $10,000? He says perhaps they can buy some land remote from towns, and perhaps they can buy some land that can be irrigated.

Mr. CARTER. I will say very frankly to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the officials of the Indian Office were unable to give us all the information we desired. We questioned them very closely about it.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman think it is a rather strange proposition to appropriate this specific sum of $10,000 to buy agricultural lands, when the gentleman says he does not know whether they can buy any at all, but that they may be able to buy some, in remote places?

Mr. CARTER. No; if I said they could not buy any at all I said what I did not mean.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said he did not know what could be bought or where.

Mr. CARTER. I said perhaps they could buy some small tracts which could be irrigated. The gentleman who came before the Indian Committee on behalf of the Indian Bureau stated that they could buy some cut-over lands, and perhaps they might be able to buy some lands that could be irrigated cheaply. Let me read from the hearings:

Mr. CARTER. How much land do you propose to buy?

Mr. MERITT. Probably Mr. Davis could tell you more definitely just the amount of land we expect to buy for each Indian. Mr. Davis has been out in that country and on the ground.

Mr. DAVIS. It is something that is practically impossible to determine beforehand. We have to select lands where these Indians will go and in places where they will be able to secure a labor market around them.

Mr. CARTER. Have you examined those lands?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; but in those places it is virtually impossible to hold lands. Lands that might be looked up this year would probably be transferred before we could do anything with them.

Mr. CARTER. What do you expect to have to pay for those lands?

Mr. DAVIS. It would depend upon whether the lands were irrigated or whether they were just cut-over timber lands. These latter would probably cost not more than $10 or $15 per acre, while other lands, irrigated lands, might cost $100 per acre.

Mr. CARTER. What kind of land do you propose to buy?

Mr. DAVIS. For these particular bands, probably cut-over lands in California, where we can get small tracts for these little bands that have been going around engaging themselves largely as laborers in lumber camps and on ranches.

Mr. COOPER. Let me ask another question. Can anyone gain a livelihood by agriculture in southern California with anything like a certainty unless he has water with which to irrigate?

Mr. CARTER. They have quite a good rainfall in some of the cut-over lands, but in any section of the country where there is no timber there is not much rainfall, of course.

Mr. COOPER. Agricultural land in my country is worth $100 an acre, and I suppose agricultural land in that rich country of California would be worth at least $100 an acre; and at that price $10,000 would buy 100 acres, upon which you propose to put 1,400 people.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no. The gentleman who appeared before the committee said that it would cost $10 or $15 an acre to purchase these lands. To purchase irrigable lands would cost more. These are cut-over lands, very much cheaper than the fertile lands in the gentleman's State of Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLORIDA.

SEC. 4. That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000 "for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization," made in the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, is hereby reappropriated and made available: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, a definite plan for the relief of the said Seminole Indians in Florida.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the proviso.

Mr. MILLER. I wish the gentleman would withhold it.

Mr. MANN. It is rather too late in the day.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation of the Fort Hall irrigation system, $20,000: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary for domestic, stock watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso that it is new legislation and a change of existing law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order, because it will be very beneficial legislation and is much desired by the department.

Mr. MONDELL. I will withhold it, if the gentleman desires, but eventually I shall insist upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Coeur d'Alenes, in Idaho: For pay of blacksmith, carpenter, and physician, and purchase of medicines (art. 11, agreement ratified Mar. 3, 1891), $3,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, after line 17, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions of the Nez Perce Indian Reservation, in Idaho, with respect to the necessity of cooperation in building a system of highways in said reservation, and to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost for the construction of such highways, and also to ascertain from a council of the members of said tribe whether the Indians of said reservation are willing that the proportion of the cost of said system of roads, which the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be properly chargeable to them, shall be reimbursable from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed to the credit of said tribe in the Treasury, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a few moments?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. FRENCH. Not over five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to say that I am sure the department will take this matter up with the appropriations that we now have for the support and civilization of the Indians and investigate the matter just as the gentleman requests, without any legislation. I will withhold the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, this reservation was opened for settlement some years ago, and, of course, the title to the land has not passed to the Indians for the most part. Many white settlers are scattered throughout the reservation, and a system of highways has been built at a cost of $300,000 to the people of that section of the country. The roadway, of course, is as serviceable to the Indians as it is to the white settlers, while the responsibility rests upon the white settlers to pay for the same. Now, it happens that there is to be instituted a system of road building that will embrace the issuance of bonds in an aggregate amount of $1,500,000. It seems that some way should be provided by which the Indians on the reservation may pay or bear their part of the expense of constructing this system of highways, and all I seek to do is to have some arrangement made under which the department shall inquire into it by which the Indians shall bear their proportion of the expenses necessary in the development of this highway system. Of course, the part that lies outside and within the county will be borne by the white settlers in the road district.

But within the reservation itself it would seem that the Indian lands and the Indians ought to bear their part of this improvement, especially in view of the fact that something like $300,000 have already been expended in that reservation by the white settlers themselves in road building, and that is of benefit to the Indians as well as to the white settlers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I must insist upon the point of order, but I will state to the gentleman in that connection that I am sure the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will be glad to take this matter up and give it the fullest and earliest consideration; and if he does not, I would suggest that the gentleman introduce a bill along the lines he has stated, and that when it comes before our committee we will give it our earnest and best consideration. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment. The Chair thinks it provides for new legislation on an appropriation bill and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MICHIGAN.

SEC. 7. For support and education of 325 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., including pay of superintendent, $56,275; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $61,275.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 8, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I contend that that is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas to make the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is a mere increase over the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. MAPES. Yes. Mr. Chairman, the section provides for the support and education of 325 Indian pupils, and my amendment would strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty," so that it would read for the support and education of 350 pupils. I have another amendment which I desire to submit also. In the hearings it appears from the statistical statement for the year ending June 30, 1913, that in this school there were enrolled 350 pupils, and the further statement appears in the hearings, on page 404:

This is the only Indian boarding school in the State of Michigan, and there are about 1,400 available children of school age. Without going outside of the State it is filled to its full capacity and is unable to accommodate the number of needy Indian children that seek admission.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MAPES. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I want to ask the gentleman what the average attendance at that school was last year?

Mr. MAPES. There were enrolled 350 pupils, and more were seeking admission.

Mr. CARTER. But there were only 311 average attendance last year, and we provide in this bill for an attendance of 325, which is 14 more than the average attendance.

Mr. MAPES. But if they have not the room and can not accommodate those who seek accommodation, the appropriation ought to be increased.

Mr. CARTER. Have they not the room now for 325?

Mr. MAPES. They have 350 there. I take my figures from the statement of the superintendent and from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They have not room to accommodate those who apply for admission. This is the only school in the State.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will notice, on page 404 of the hearings, that the average attendance is given as only 311.

Mr. MAPES. I notice that is the statement; but the committee decreases the appropriation from last year also by about $10,000.

Mr. CARTER. Not the appropriation for support and education. We decrease the appropriation $10,000 on account of building, as I remember it.

Mr. MAPES. But the committee only gives the school $5,000 for repairs, so that it all could not be for that purpose. They ask for an additional appropriation of $25,000 for a gymnasium.

Mr. CARTER. The support and education appropriation is the same amount as last year, $56,275. Last year there were two lavatories constructed, and some other things, which, of course, we do not need again to be constructed this year.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman will notice the additional statement that I have not read, that the school has an efficient corps of instructors and is filled to its capacity.

Mr. CARTER. But we also have the statement there from the superintendent of the school—these figures are taken from this report—that there were only 311 average attendance, and that was why the committee did not increase the amount.

Mr. MAPES. The committee ignored all of his other statements and the figures he gave, but accepted the figures in this respect.

Mr. CARTER. When he made the statement he had an average attendance of only 311, we did not think that we could justify an increase when he was already getting an appropriation for 325.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. What is the total registration of the pupils in the school?

Mr. CARTER. I think 350.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Do you not provide for the total registration?

Mr. CARTER. No; we provide for the support and education of so many pupils, and that is based on average attendance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman might have a minute or two more if he desires it.

Mr. MAPES. One minute is all I desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this school is not in my district, but it is the only school that there is in the State, and it seems to me that we ought to provide for as many children as want to be admitted. The total enrollment is 350, and the statement of the superintendent is that more desire admission.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is a nonreservation school, I understand?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman understands that the policy of the Government is not to build up nonreservation schools, but to build boarding schools and day schools on the reservation, and for that reason we have refused to grant any of these requests coming from the various States.

Mr. MAPES. There is no boarding or day school——

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no reservation in the State of Michigan.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman has Indians in his State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Up in the old section, the upper part of the lower peninsula.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are there not day schools scattered over the State where the Indian children are being educated among the whites in the schools?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not sufficiently informed about that, but I remember visiting there several years ago, and I saw separate schools, but how maintained——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the best education the Indian can get on the reservation among the white children, where they have these facilities, rather than to carry them off to expensive boarding schools, as the gentleman from Michigan is proposing to do?

Mr. MAPES. There is what is called a mission school, but only one of these in the whole State, as I understand it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that there is only one school, a nonreservation school, in the entire State. Let me inform him that in the State of Oklahoma, where they have 117,000 Indians, we have only one nonreservation school.

Mr. MAPES. How much is appropriated for that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I think it is $70,000 or $80,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 10, strike out the figures "56,275" and insert "60,450."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, after line 11, insert the following: "For pay of expenses of the Mackinac Agency, including pay of employees not otherwise provided for, $2,400."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. I desire to say except for the increase made this is the same item that has been carried in the appropriation bill heretofore, but the amount has been $2,000 instead of $2,400.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, the Mackinac Agency was estimated for by the Treasury Department, but it was taken out of the specific items and is provided for in the general item at the bottom of page 10. It is not specifically mentioned, but is taken care of as a number of other items are.

Mr. MAPES. Will that remove the agency at Mackinac?

Mr. CARTER. Not necessarily. The following agencies were estimated for specifically but were put in the general item when the bill was made up: The Nez Perce, Idaho; the Sac and Fox, Iowa; the Mackinac, Mich.; the Omaha and Winnebago, Nebr.; New York, N. Y.; the Sac and Fox, Okla.; the Seneca, Okla.; the Shivwitz, Utah; and the Shawnee Agency. Those are all stricken out of the specific items and are provided for in the item to which I have referred.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee in regard to how much longer he plans to run this afternoon? It is now nearly half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I had thought we could run until we got through with Minnesota.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is several pages.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think that many questions will be raised before we reach that point.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. MAPES. I wish to put into the RECORD a part of a statement appearing in the hearings, on page 408, where it says it is necessary to have a doctor in charge of the Mackinac Agency, as follows:

It is necessary to have a doctor in charge at the Mackinac Agency so that the same official may look after the administration of the affairs and the health of the Indians living under that jurisdiction.

* * * * * * * *

The Mackinac Agency is maintained to supervise the fiscal affairs of the Indians in Michigan, principally members of the L'Anse, Vieux Desert, Isabella, Chippewa, Swan Creek, Black River, and other tribes, particularly with reference to their timber and land matters. Ninety-eight thousand three hundred and ninety-five acres have been allotted to 1,943 Indians on the former Isabella Reservation; 52,041 acres allotted to 666 Indians of the L'Anse Tribe; 2,561 acres have been allotted to 35 Indians of the Ontonagon Band; and 120,470 acres allotted to 1,800 members of the Ottawa and Chippewa Bands. These allotments were all made many years ago and there is no tribal land other than a few acres reserved for school and administrative purposes.

Now, there are in the northern part of Michigan a great many Indians, but you are taking away all of the appropriation that has been given for the support and maintenance and protection of those Indians, and this——

Mr. CARTER. It is fully provided for in the item to which I have referred.

Mr. MAPES. But you can not take care of them down in New Mexico. As a matter of economy, the place to take care of them is in Michigan, and there could be no other doctor or no other agent in any place located anywhere except in Michigan to take care of those Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman misunderstands the proposition. There was no attempt whatever by the committee to try to remove this agency, dispense with it, or do anything else except change the place in which the amount for it was carried in the bill from a specific item to a general item, and we do that almost every year with such items. We take those specific items and put them in the general items every time we can. It is claimed by a great many that that is better administration, and the department likes it much better, for if they do not use all the money appropriated for a particular item the balance can be used at other places, but when it is appropriated specifically they can only use the amount at that specific agency.

Mr. MAPES. What was the gentleman's inference in reply to my question when asked if they would abolish this agency, and the gentleman replied, "Not necessarily"? What was his inference?

Mr. CARTER. I had never heard of the question of abolishing it before.

Mr. MAPES. Then will it be maintained?

Mr. CARTER. I think so. I never heard that it would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $215,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this amount may be used in the purchase of lands for homeless nonremoval Mille Lacs Indians, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said lands to be held in trust and may be allotted to said Indians, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388, as amended).

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. This is the same character of provision that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referred to, as providing homes for homeless Indians.

Mr. STEENERSON. This goes out of the Indians' fund.

Mr. CARTER. This is their own fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has that difference. Only, it comes out of the Treasury.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is at their request, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the occasion for spending $50,000 for purchasing land for "homeless nonremoval Mille Lacs Indians"?

Mr. MILLER. That would take a long time to explain, but it is taken out of the fund belonging to the Mille Lacs Nation in Minnesota. They were to be removed to the White River Reservation, but some of them have not been removed, and so they call them "nonremovable." There is no Indian land in the White Earth Reservation to support them.

Mr. STAFFORD. That, of course, is a good answer.

Mr. MILLER. The ancient home of the Chippewas was about where these Indians are now, on Mille Lacs Lake. By the treaty made it was presumed most of these Indians would be removed to White Earth.

Mr. STEENERSON. They were required to remove?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. All but about 500 were removed. They refused to go. They took them over and they walked back.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where did they walk to when they walked back?

Mr. STEENERSON. They walked back to the same place they were when they left.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the Indian reservation?

Mr. MILLER. There is not an Indian reservation there. They are squatters and trespassers now on the lands of the whites, with the exception of one plat of land held by the chief of the tribe of about 80 acres, and on this many of them live. Now, the problem that has been before the Indian Office for a long time is what to do with these Indians. They need a school and they need medical advice, which they have never had, and they need this seriously. As preliminary and prerequisite to giving them what they deserve something must be done toward building them a home. It was at this place, as I have indicated, where the Indians originally lived. Under the act of Congress the band to which they belonged was permitted to bring a suit against the United States and recover for some timber which the Government had erroneously disposed of and which belonged to the Indians. They recovered a verdict of about $1,000,000.

The case is now pending in the Supreme Court, and the only question remaining unsettled is the exact amount—probably over a million. It arose on the very spot where these Indians now are, but it will not go to the Indians. It will go into the general fund of the Chippewa Tribe of Minnesota. Now, we propose to take from this fund only $50,000 with which to purchase these lands. Doubtless the gentleman has noticed that the department estimated only $20,000. A year ago I think the department estimated $15,000. I have personally visited this region, had many conversations with people familiar with conditions there, and, of course, it is preposterous to suggest that you can buy homes for 401 Indians in that region for $50,000. It can not be done. There is no use of doing it by piecemeal and making a botch of it. There will come into the Treasury of this great band of Indians over a million dollars very soon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it planned to build homes for them after you purchased the land?

Mr. MILLER. No; just to buy the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. You will allow them, out of this fund, to cultivate the lands that have been purchased?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Have the Mille Lacs any money of their own, apart from the Chippewas?

Mr. MILLER. Not as a separate band, distinguished from other bands in Minnesota. All the moneys belonging to the Indians of Minnesota in the hands of the Government are in one fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the fund belonging to the Chippewas?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the Mille Lac Indians——

Mr. MILLER. They are Chippewas. We have no other Indians in Minnesota, except in the southwestern part.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood there were some Indians that were not attached to the Chippewas.

Mr. MILLER. I am not aware of any other Indians except the two Sioux tribes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was done with the $165,000 to promote the civilization of these Indians last year?

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will notice, all through this bill provision is made for the relief and civilization of the Indians of every State, so much money for each. There is no such item for the Indians of Minnesota. The expenditures made for the Indians in many of the States come out of Treasury funds, but all appropriations made for the Indians of Minnesota come out of the money belonging to those Indians.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we keep on spending the special fund of the Chippewas, in a few years they will be paupers and a charge on the Public Treasury.

Mr. MILLER. If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, I will say that we are not paying to those Indians as much as the interest amounts to and as much as the treaty stipulations require.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not pay it out of the interest?

Mr. MILLER. The treaty provides that a portion of the interest shall be applied to educational purposes in the State.

But returning for a moment to the other question, I want to say that the expense of administration of Indian affairs in the State and the administration of the schools and the cost of the buildings comes out of their own money, and I am pleased to say that the State of Minnesota does not go to the Treasury for a dollar for the support of those Indians, and has not done so for a number of years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My notion is that it should not be, and my opinion is based upon some information that I acquired some years ago. The timber on the lands of the Chippewa Indians was worth in the neighborhood of $20,000,000, and there would be very little excuse for the Federal Government paying out of the Federal Treasury funds to support and educate Indians who had possessions of such great value. Their own money should be used to civilize and educate them.

Mr. MILLER. Generally that is what they are doing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if we go along expending the principal of these funds, without any thought of the future, we will have these same uncivilized Indians upon our hands, and the principal will have gone, and then we shall have to take money out of the Federal Treasury. I recollect something about the Chippewa Indians. I think I had something to do with the act known as the Morris Act, named after a Member who has since become a judge in Minnesota, as the Minnesota Members will recollect—an act under which the timber of the Chippewas is being cut and sold.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that his apprehensions lest the Indians of Minnesota should become a public charge need not worry him or keep him awake o' nights. If the 350,000 homeless people in the city of New York can get food and shelter as quickly and permanently as the Indians of Minnesota can get it out of their own funds, all humanity will be satisfied.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be true, but I recollect certain proceedings 10 years ago, when, if the people from Minnesota in this House had had their own way, the Chippewa Indians would have had very little money of their own in the Treasury.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that the property rights of those Indians have been well safeguarded.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that there is in the Treasury now over $7,000,000, derived from timber and logging operations, and the land is still retained, while the operations are still going on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is done with this money? Do they buy farming utensils and implements?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do they buy farming implements and furnish them to the Indians?

Mr. MILLER. They do not buy nearly as many as they ought to, but they do buy some. I have encouraged the purchase of modern implements of an agricultural character for the Indian Service, but not extravagantly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Most of the Chippewa Indians are engaged in the lumber business, are they not?

Mr. MILLER. No; they are not permitted to engage in that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean they work in the lumber camps?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, yes; they work in the lumber camps during the winter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to advance to the executive committee of the White Earth Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1914, out of the funds belonging to said band.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 22, page 20, add: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of the funds of the White Earth Band of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, for the extension of the water system in the village of White Earth, Minn."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Texas will withhold his point of order until I can explain my amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will reserve the point of order for that purpose.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the United States Government, acting for the Indians, built water mains in the village of White Earth, Minn. The village of White Earth was platted by the United States Government some few years ago, and a number of residences were erected by members of the reservation in this village and they installed waterworks to supply the Government school and the Government agency, and extended it into the village, so that one hydrant was placed there. That was a year ago last October. At that time they did not extend it any farther, for the reason that they had some doubt whether the artesian well, which is the source of this water supply, would be sufficient for the general use of the village; but now it is demonstrated that there is sufficient water to supply not only the agency and the school but the people in the village. The expense of it will be out of their own common fund, and when the pipe is extended they will themselves pay for the connecting of it.

Mr. MILLER. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Will this be for the benefit of the whites or the Indians?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Indians. Members of the reservation.

Mr. MILLER. The Indians exclusively?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Indians exclusively.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For water?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Having appropriated $1,000 for fire protection, they need more water.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am familiar with the situation there, and some weeks ago I requested the department to send in an estimate to take this out of the Indians' money, and the department replied that it was too late, that the bill was already reported; but in conversation with them I heard of no objection, and I do not see how anybody could object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman a letter from the department recommending this?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have a letter stating that it is too late to put it in the appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But that does not state that the department recommends it.

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. MANN. There ought to be no objection to an appropriation to get the people of Minnesota to drink more water. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly not. One of the leading Indians has written me the following letter:

WHITE EARTH, MINN., January 22, 1914.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEENERSON: You will call to mind the controversy which prevailed here about a year ago concerning the matter of "water supply" for the village of White Earth, etc., and at that time it was contended by the superintendent of the agency, Mr. John R. Howard, that he, the superintendent, was afraid that the well, or the "water supply from the well, would not be adequate to the demand of the village needs," etc. The piping was finally carried to a short distance within the village limits and where a hydrant was installed for the use and purposes of the public. This has been in active operation for over a year, or near a year, and it has now become a well-established fact that thus far the demand on the well by the village residents has not diminished the flow or supply in the least degree, but that the average level of water in the well, 75 to 80 feet, continues unimpaired. In a talk with Mr. Howard this morning, he expressed himself as apparently willing to continue an extension of the main piping within the village limits and to permit residents (members of the reservation) within the village limits to tap and attach individual piping to their homes, the people defraying the expenses of piping from the main line to their homes, etc. But the superintendent informs me that funds are lacking to defray the expenses of "extending the water supply within the village limits." In an approximate estimate to further extend the water supply facilities for the people of the village of White Earth, I assume to say that "an extension of, say, 2,000 or 3,000 feet of main piping and with the addition of three more hydrants would, in all probability, meet the present demand. I am of the opinion that the expenditure of $1,000 in this direction would be money judiciously expended and, from a sanitary standpoint, a proper and commendable move on the part of Government officials.

May I not hope that you will interest yourself in the above subject with tender of liberal consideration and solicit the attention and consideration of the Indian Office to essential need of pure, wholesome water, not only as a preventive against disease and destruction by fire, but if the Indian is supplied with plenty of good, pure water the less inclined will he be to quench his thirst with "fire water."

Thanking you for courtesy in the premises, I beg to remain,

Respectfully, yours,

THEO. H. BEAULIEU.

You will note that he says "if the Indian is supplied with plenty of good, pure water the less inclined will he be to quench his thirst with 'fire water'"; and, manifestly, that is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to insist on the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope the gentleman will not do that. I have been at White Earth, and I know about this situation. The only reason they did not extend it before was that they doubted the capacity of the well, which has now been demonstrated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I withdraw the point of order, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of constructing, equipping, and maintaining two hospitals, one to be located either on the Red Lake or Leech Lake Reservation and one to be located on the Fond du Lac Reservation, the sites to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, for the use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of constructing and furnishing a council hall at such point as he may select, for the use of the Indians living in the vicinity of Sawyer, Minn.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-night it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the committee that will have the Alaska bill in charge to-morrow if it is his intention to try to complete the bill and have a vote to-morrow? I will state my reason for asking the question. Many gentlemen interested in this bill both ways, especially many of those interested against the bill, are absent, some of them attending the funeral of the late Senator BACON, and will not be back to-morrow. I have no desire to object to the gentleman's request, but I would like to have an agreement for that reason, that we might finish the bill up to the point of taking the vote, and that the vote shall not be taken until a future day.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I can see no reason why we should not have a vote on this bill to-morrow. The committee have had the bill under consideration for several Wednesdays, and we have had ample time for discussion of it, and we ought to get through with it to-morrow, so as to get it out of the way of some other committee that may want to occupy the next Wednesday. As for the gentlemen who have gone to Georgia for the purpose mentioned, I take it that they have made pairs. I know a number of them have, and I suppose they all have. I do not suppose their absence will have any effect at all upon the question of the passage of the bill, and I really think we ought to get through with it to-morrow.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Some of them have paired and some have not; at least I could not find out at the pair clerk's desk that they had. That is the reason I have asked the question.

Mr. MANN. I take it that unless pairs are arranged, the final vote might be postponed.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is all I am asking.

Mr. MANN. I think practically all of the gentlemen have arranged pairs. That is my understanding.

Mr. DAVENPORT. A portion of them have, but there are some of them——

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether Members of the House who are deeply interested in this bill will be apprised of the fact that we are going to meet to-morrow at 11 rather than at the usual hour of 12? There are only 25 Members in the Chamber now, when the gentleman makes that request.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am making this request in order that we may have more time to get through with the bill to-morrow. We have been considering it for a number of Wednesdays, and we ought to get through with it. I think we have had ample time to discuss it, and I should like to get through with it to-morrow and have a vote upon it. I do not see any occasion for waiting.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Unless we can get an understanding that after finishing the bill the vote on it shall be deferred until these gentlemen return, I shall be compelled to object, although I do not desire to do so. I think we could make better progress by finishing the bill and getting it ready for the vote and then letting it go over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, February 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of letter from the surgeon in chief of Freedmen's Hospital, with accompanying letter from the advisory visiting staff of that institution, calling attention to the necessity for the erection of a building to provide proper laboratory facilities for the pathological branch of the hospital, and suggesting that certain amounts unpaid by the District of Columbia be appropriated for the use of the hospital (H. Doc. No. 746); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Lord our God, Thou didst command Thy people in ancient times to love Thee with all their heart and soul and mind and strength, and in every human heart there is an ability to obey Thy command. But Thou hast come to us with the tender tones of the father. Thou dost win our love with the manifestations of Thy grace and providence and care. Thou dost lure us to this with all the offers of life and all the provisions of grace.

Grant us this day to open our hearts to Thee, to let the influences of Thy grace into our lives, to obey Thy will, and to love Thee out of glad response to all Thy love for us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

COPY OF RESOLUTION FROM THE JOURNAL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF FLORIDA, FOURTEENTH REGULAR SESSION (APR. 8 TO JUNE 6, 1913).

[By Mr. Wilson, of Manatee. House resolution No. 97.]

Whereas the Myakka River, a stream that courses through Manatee and De Soto Counties, of south Florida, and empties into Charlotte Harbor, flows through some of the most fertile lands in Florida; and

Whereas a small outlay, wisely expended, would make said Myakka River navigable to a point where township line dividing township 36 and 37, crosses said river; and

Whereas as many thousands of acres of the finest lands in the State of Florida would be thus opened to cultivation; and

Whereas the hundreds of farmers and fruit growers of this remote section would be thus supplied with transportation, which is their greatest need: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Members of Congress are severally requested to use their influence to secure a survey of said Myakka River from Charlotte Harbor to the point indicated in the foregoing preamble.

Mr. GRONNA. I present sundry petitions from leading bankers in my State, asking for certain changes in the income-tax law. I ask that the text of one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the text of one of the petitions was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Representatives of the United States Congress:

We, the undersigned banks, bankers, and trust companies, hereby petition that the act of October 3, 1913, with respect to the income tax, be amended at the earliest possible date, to provide for a method of "information at the source" in lieu of the present provisions of "collection at the source."

The present method of collection at the source adds many unnecessary complications to bondholders and other investors. It has added enormously to the expenses of banks, bankers, and trust companies, and the labor in investigating and making refunds will yearly cost the Government vast sums of money, all of which can be avoided. The present law provides that the tax shall be collected first and assessed afterwards. The tax is collected on the gross income and is later assessed on the gross income less certain deductions which are allowed, so that refunds will be necessary on a very large proportion of the returns of individuals. Under a plan of information at the source all of these complications and unnecessary expenses, aggregating up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, will be eliminated, and the Government will be in possession of more information for the verification of the returns of individuals and corporations than under the law as it now stands.

We further petition that in the event that the law is not speedily amended as above that an annual appropriation be made by Congress for the reimbursement of banks, bankers, and trust companies for the extra expenses to which they are subjected in acting as agents for the Government in the collection of the income tax.

We also call attention to the fact that we have done everything possible to cooperate with the Government in putting this law into operation without waiting to determine who is to pay this heavy extra expense, and we ask that Congress recognize our efforts and afford us relief as soon as possible.

He also presented petitions of the boards of directors of sundry banks of Pasadena, San Diego, Oxnard, Wilmington, Redondo Beach, and Escondido, all in the State of California, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the income-tax law providing for a method of information at the source, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

ciety, of Covington; of the West End Mutual Aid Association, of Covington; of sundry citizens of Covington; of Local No. 238, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, of Covington; of the Sunny Side Mutual Aid Association, of Covington; of Local Union No. 698, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Newport; of the Standard Social Club, of Covington; of the Star Permanent Building Association, of Covington; of the Covington Baer Society, of Covington; and of Local Union No. 234, of Central City, all in the State of Kentucky, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Local Switchmen's Union of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to make lawful certain agreements between employers and laborers and persons engaged in agriculture or horticulture and to limit the issuing of injunctions in certain cases, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KENYON presented a memorial of the Local Union of Bartenders of Keokuk, Iowa, and a memorial of sundry citizens of Fort Dodge and Clinton, Iowa, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the American Protective Association, citizens of Council Bluffs, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide an educational test for immigrants to this country, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Mount Vernon, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Fort Worth, Tex., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Mansfield and Richland County, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TRANSPORTATION OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I send to the desk a resolution adopted recently by the Board of Trade of Pittsburgh, Pa., in behalf of the proposed constitutional amendment providing for Nation-wide prohibition. The resolution is short and I ask that it may be read.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas these are days of efficiency. "Stop the leaks" is the watchword of commercial and industrial supremacy. When a commercial organization can effect a saving of such enormous sums through reduction of taxation, when added to that they can bring about a moral condition in the county, State, and Nation, it becomes not alone a commercial question, but a commercial obligation resting upon such organizations as this is to take a stand for efficiency in the elimination of the cause of this ever-increasing taxation upon business: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this organization, realizing as never before the increasing burden of taxation, caused by the liquor traffic in this county, as so conclusively shown by the figures given by the census of the United States; realizing the great gain morally to the citizenship of our country by a material reduction of our saloons; realizing that it is poor economy to allow the granting of liquor licenses which annually grind out a grist of humanity for which we must increasingly pay an unnecessary tax; realizing the economic loss to the county through the inefficiency of the individual, and recognizing the fact that more than 47,000,000 of the population of our country already live in territory from which liquor has been banished by the sovereign will of the people; be it

Resolved, That this organization place itself on record as favorable to the passage of the bill now before Congress submitting the question of national prohibition to the several State legislatures, that the question may be settled in harmony with the will of the people.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Philadelphia North American, in publishing the resolution on January 22, 1914, said that never, so far as is known, has so influential a municipal body committed itself officially to such an important national question, and its action is a notable manifestation of the antisaloon sentiment which is now sweeping over the country.

THE CONSTITUTION—PELATIAH WEBSTER.

Mr. BRADLEY. I present the petition of Hon. Hannis Taylor, in regard to perpetuating the memory of Pelatiah Webster, the father of the Constitution. I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library for proper action.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION TO BE PRESENTED TO THE CONGRESS ON FEBRUARY 16, 1914, THE ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE PUBLICATION, AT PHILADELPHIA, OF PELATIAH WEBSTER'S EPOCH-MAKING TRACT OF FEBRUARY 16, 1783, CONTAINING THE FIRST DRAFT OF THE EXISTING CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

[February 16, 1783—February 16, 1914.]

Petition to be presented to Congress by Hannis Taylor on February 16, 1914, the one hundred and thirty-first anniversary of the publication, at Philadelphia, of Pelatiah Webster's epoch-making tract of February 16, 1783, containing the first draft of the existing Constitution of the United States, the prayer of the petition consisting of a request that Congress take into consideration the erection of a tablet or other appropriate memorial in or near the Capitol.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Mr. Speaker, the undersigned petitions the House to pause on this day—the real birthday of the second and existing Constitution of the United States—in order to contemplate the marvelous invention which made the existence of that Constitution possible. On February 16, 1783, Pelatiah Webster, the first distinguished member of the famous New England family of that name, a master of the science of economics and finance, who may justly be called the American Adam Smith of that day, published at Philadelphia, as his invention, the "wholly novel theory" of a Federal Government embodied soon thereafter by the Federal convention of 1787 in the existing Constitution of the United States. The invention thus promulgated was elaborated in great detail and spread broadcast in a pamphlet of 47 pages, printed at the well-known press of T. Bradford, only five blocks removed from Independence Hall, in which the Continental Congress was then sitting. An original copy of that epoch-making publication, entitled "A dissertation on the political union and Constitution of the thirteen United States of North America, which is necessary to their preservation and happiness; humbly offered to the public by a citizen of Philadelphia," and just as authentic as the Constitution itself, is on file in the Library of Congress subject to inspection by anyone having the slightest doubt upon the subject. Certainly the time has arrived when the American people, whose greatest pride should be in their greatest invention, should listen to the admonition of Cicero, who, in the De Oratore, has said:

"Who does not know that it is the first and fundamental law of history that it should neither dare to say anything that is false nor fear to say anything that is true, nor give any just suspicion of partiality on the one hand or of personal animosity on the other."

FINANCES OF THE REVOLUTION IN 1783.

No practical mind, free from prejudice and under the sway of common sense, should have the slightest difficulty in grasping the real origin of the invention in question, when the fact is taken into account that it was made by a trained financier at a critical moment when the financial necessities of the country imperiously demanded it. The cessation of hostilities with Great Britain, followed as it was by the signing of the preliminary articles of peace at Paris, January 20, 1783, had brought the financiers of the Revolution, burdened with an unpaid army and a foreign debt, face to face with the mighty problem of providing, without any visible or reliable means, for the obligations that represented the cost of victory. The Continental Congress was fading surely, and not very slowly, into the shadow of a name; it was with difficulty that men of the first class could be induced to sit as members of it. After 2,000 years and more of painful experience the ancient form of a Federal Government, as embodied in our first Constitution, known as the Articles of Confederation, had ended in failure and disappointment. In the midst of the collapse the only real bond of cohesion which held the States together was a man, and that man was Washington. That he was mightier than the Congress appears from a letter written August 4, 1783, to Vergennes, by Luzerne, who said:

"The taxes, so poorly collected during the war, are yet worse collected at this time. * * * Everyone is reduced to the necessity of waiting the result of the letter of Gen. Washington, and more is hoped from the consideration of a single citizen than from the authority of a sovereign body."

PELATIAH WEBSTER A MASTER OF ECONOMICS AND FINANCE.

At that critical moment in our history, when the possibility of beginning a new national life depended upon the creation of a new system of public finance, a genius appeared upon the scene who was equal to the occasion. This daring innovator, whose instincts as a financier made him the first to understand the necessity for an entirely new Federal fabric, was born at Lebanon, Conn., in 1726, and graduated at Yale College in 1746. In 1755 he moved to Philadelphia, where he became a prosperous merchant; and during the British occupation in 1778 he was arrested at night on account of his ardor in the patriot cause and closely confined in prison, a large part of his property being confiscated to the King's stores. As early as 1776 he had begun to write on the currency, and three years later he began the publication of the famous series of Essays on Free Trade and Finance. We are told by a high authority that during the war "Members of Congress, especially the Connecticut Delegates, were in the habit of passing the evening with him, to consult him upon financial and political concerns," and when in July, 1782, a petition was to be presented to Congress in behalf of "the deranged officers of the lines of Massachusetts and Connecticut," Webster was appealed to for his influence. In a petition drawn in the noblest style he presented the case, which was finally referred to a special committee, whose report, which survives in the handwriting of Alexander Hamilton, is dated March 6, 1783, just 18 days after the publication of the great paper of February 16 of that year. The late Prof. Sumner, of Yale, in his history of the Finances of the American Revolution, says:

"In February, 1780, Pelatiah Webster urged the appointment of a financier—that is, of a competent single officer—to take charge of the finances in place of the committees or boards who had hitherto been intrusted with them."

Thus it appears that Webster, while attempting to improve the finances of the Confederation, created the office to which Robert Morris was appointed, as our first real Secretary of the Treasury. Madison tells us, with great formality, in his famous papers, that in 1781 Pelatiah Webster, in one of his financial essays published in May of that year, was the first to propose the calling of a Continental Convention for the making of an entirely new Constitution.

CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH THE EPOCH-MAKING PAPER OF FEBRUARY 16, 1783, WAS WRITTEN.

Just one year and nine months after Webster thus proposed to break with the past—by being the first to suggest the calling of a Continental Convention, to be charged with the duty of making an entirely new Constitution—he published at Philadelphia on February 16, 1783, his path-breaking tract of 47 printed pages, in which he dared to set forth in great detail just what that new Constitution should be. Nothing could be more graphic than the terms in which Webster himself has described the conditions under which his wholly novel and unique plan of Federal Government was formulated. To the republication of his plan, made at Philadelphia in 1791, he appended this note:

"At the time when this dissertation was written (Feb. 16, 1783) the defects and insufficiency of the old Federal Constitution were universally felt and acknowledged. It was manifested, not only that the internal police, justice, security, and peace of the States could never be preserved under it, but the finances and public credit would necessarily become so embarrassed, precarious, and void of support that no public movement which depended on the revenue could be managed with any effectual certainty; but though the public mind was under full conviction of all these mischiefs and was contemplating a remedy, yet the public ideas were not at all concentrated, much less arranged into any new system or form of government which would obviate these evils. Under these circumstances I offered this dissertation to the public. How far the principles of it were adopted or rejected in the new Constitution, which was four years afterwards (Sept. 17, 1787) formed by the general convention and since ratified by all the States, is obvious to everyone."

His own presentation of his case is conclusive. At the time of the publication of his invention "the public ideas were not at all concentrated, much less arranged into any new system or form of government which would obviate these evils." The silly statement often made that about that time (Feb. 16, 1783) such a scheme of government as Webster proposed was "in the air" is simply mendacious. (In the winter of 1784–85 Noah Webster, then a young man of 27, printed over his own name an abridgment of the great paper of Feb. 16, 1783. That barren [illegible]rint, which failed to add a single original suggestion, is contained [illegible]is Sketches of American Policy.) The spiteful critics who have attempted to rob him of his glory have never been able to find a scintilla of contemporaneous evidence to support such a story. It was years afterwards before any proposals at all like it were made. Prior to Webster's publication there is no trace of any other plan or project of a new Constitution that can be placed in contrast or rivalry with his "wholly novel theory." The great architect thus stands alone and isolated from all rivals in the solitude of his own originality.

A SUPREME FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WITH THE POWER TO TAX.

The epoch-making document in question is so systematic, so lucid, with every thought worked out in such detail, that it is easy to follow the mental processes through which the "great discovery in modern political science," as Tocqueville has called it, was evolved from the brain of the daring innovator who was at once economist, statesman, and financier. The overshadowing practical difficulty to be removed was that involved in the fact that the one-chamber Congress of the Confederation possessed no power to tax. To use Webster's own words: "They could assess and levy no taxes." No Federal Government that had ever existed had been armed with the power to tax. In this country the entire taxing power was then vested in the States. Webster's dream was to create a self-executing Federal system, armed with the power to tax, and operating directly on the individual—an invention of which no trace or hint is to be found in the constitutions of the Greek or Teutonic Leagues, in the Articles of Confederation patterned after them, or in the prior utterances of any other American.

He said:

"I begin with my first and great principle, viz, that the Constitution must vest powers in every department sufficient to secure and make effectual the ends of it.

"They must therefore of necessity be vested with power of taxation. I know this is a most important and weighty truth, a dreadful engine of oppression, tyranny, and injury when ill used; yet, from the necessity of the case, it must be admitted.

"To make all these payments dependent on the votes of 13 popular assemblies, who will judge of the propriety of every contract and every occasion of money, and grant or withhold supplies, according to their opinions, whilst at the same time the operations of the whole may be stopped by the vote of a single one of them, is absurd. * * * This tax can be laid by the supreme authority much more conveniently than by the particular assemblies, and would in no case be subject to their repeals or modifications, and, of course, the public credit would never be dependent on or liable to bankruptcy by the humors of any particular assembly."

Out of that brilliant and daring proposal to arm a Federal assembly with "the supreme authority" to levy all kinds of Federal taxes, regardless of the "repeals or modifications" of the States composing the Union, arose the existing Constitution of the United States. The moment it was settled that such a supreme Government was to be established it followed that such a Government must be completely organized, with the authority to execute its own laws and decrees directly upon individuals through machinery adequate to that end. From the original concept necessarily resulted a completely organized Government "with the usual branches, legislative, executive, and judicial; with the direct power of taxation and the other usual powers of a Government; with its Army, its Navy, its civil service, and all the usual apparatus of a Government, all bearing directly upon every citizen of the Union without any reference to the governments of the several States."

DIVISION OF A FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INTO THREE DEPARTMENTS.

The moment Webster saw that his new creation must be a strictly organized and self-sustaining government he proposed to divide it into three departments—legislative, executive, and judicial—as that partial division then existed in the State constitutions. There never had been a Federal Government so divided in the world's history. There was no such division in the Government created by the Articles of Confederation. To use again Webster's words: "It [the confederation] blended the legislative and executive powers together in one body" [the Continental Congress]. It follows, therefore, that Webster's second proposal to divide a Federal Government into three departments—legislative, executive, and judicial—was but little less bold than his first, which involved the arming of such a creation with the independent power of taxation. And yet some superficial critics have not had the acumen to draw the distinction between the dividing of the government of a single State, like England or Virginia, into three departments and the dividing of a Federal State into three departments. The division of the government of a single State in that way had long been known. It was Webster who first conceived the idea involved in the application of such a division to a Federal system, an innovation that resulted in momentous consequences.

A FEDERAL PRESIDENT SURROUNDED BY A CABINET.

As the Articles of Confederation did not provide for an Executive of any kind, the people of this country had never heard of a President of the United States, much less of a President surrounded by a Cabinet council. Webster was the first to provide for both. He proposed that the executive power should be vested in a President, surrounded by a Cabinet or council composed of the "great ministers of state," such President to be elected by Congress, as the President of France is now elected. "The financier manages the whole subject of revenues and expenditures, the Secretary of State takes knowledge of the general policy and internal government, the minister of war presides in the whole business of war and defense, and the minister of foreign affairs regards the whole state of the Nation as it stands related to or connected with all foreign powers." Later on he says the "great minsters of state shall superintend all the executive departments and appoint all executive officers, who shall ever be accountable and removable for just cause by them or Congress, i. e., either of them."

A BICAMERAL FEDERAL LEGISLATURE.

Just as the State constitutions admonished Webster to split the new Federal Government into three departments—executive, legislative, and judicial—so the bicameral State legislatures admonished him to split the one-chamber Congress of the Confederation into two chambers, an upper and a lower House. As the draftsman of the Articles of Confederation, Franklin was content to follow a model 2,000 years old. All Federal assemblies down to that time had consisted of a single chamber. Therefore, Franklin made the Continental Congress to consist of only one chamber. In criticizing Franklin's work Webster said: "This body, viz, Congress, consisted of but one House, without any check upon their resolution." As an improvement he proposed "that Congress shall consist of two chambers, an upper and a lower House, or Senate and Commons, with the concurrence of both necessary to every act, and that every State send one or more delegates to each House. This will subject every act to two discussions before two distinct chambers of men equally qualified for the debate, equally masters of the subject, and of equal ambitions in the decision. These two Houses will be governed by the same natural motives and interests, viz, the good of the Commonwealth and the approbation of the people." In commenti upon the manner in which the Members should be chosen, Webster said:

"The delegates which are to form that august body, which are to hold and exercise the supreme authority, ought to be appointed by the States in any manner they please, in which they should not be limited by any restrictions; their own dignity and the weight they will hold in the great public council will always depend on the abilities of the persons they appoint to represent them there."

Finally he said:

"It is necessary that Congress should have all usual and necessary powers of self-preservation and order, e. g., to imprison for contempt, insult, or interruption, etc., and to expel their own Members for due causes, among which I would rank that of nonattendance on the House or partial attendance without such excuse as shall satisfy the House."

In thus defining the Constitution of the American Congress as it exists to-day Webster provided even for details. Never before had the world heard of a Federal assembly of two chambers instead of one. And yet the American Congress thus brought into being has never so far recognized the existence of its creator. It has "carved not a line, it has raised not a stone; it has left him alone in his glory."

A FEDERAL JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

An important count in Webster's indictment against the Articles of Confederation was that "they could institute no general judiciary powers." That difficulty he proposed to remove in his new system by creating a Supreme Court, with jurisdiction original and appellate, and such inferior courts of law and equity as the necessities of the country might require. He outlined the Supreme Court, with jurisdiction both original and appellate, in these terms:

"That the supreme authority should be vested with powers to terminate and finally decide controversies arising between different States, I take it, will be universally admitted, but I humbly apprehend that an appeal from the first instance of trial ought to be admitted in causes of great moment on the same reasons that such appeals are admitted in all the States of Europe. It is well known to all men versed in courts that the first hearing of a cause rather gives an opening to that evidence and reason which ought to decide it than such a full examination and thorough discussion as should always precede a final judgment in causes of national consequence. A detail of reasons might be added, which I deem it unnecessary to enlarge on here."

Thus emerged, for the first time, the splendid conception of the Supreme Court of the United States as it now exists, armed not only with original jurisdiction "to terminate and finally decide controversies arising between different States," but also with an appellate jurisdiction "in causes of great moment on the same reasons that such appeals are admitted in all the States of Europe." As to the inferior Federal courts, he concluded with this declaration:

"To these I would add judges of law and chancery, but I fear they will not be very soon appointed—the one supposes the existence of law, the other of equity—and when we shall be altogether convinced of the absolute necessity of the real and effectual existence of both of these we shall probably appoint proper heads to preside in these departments."

Webster perfectly understood that the supremacy of Federal law would be the necessary result of his proposed judicial system. He said:

"(1) No laws of any State whatever which do not carry in them a force which extends to their effectual and final execution can afford a certain or sufficient security to the subject. This is too plain to need any proof. (2) Laws or ordinances of any kind (especially of august bodies of high dignity and consequence) which fall of execution are much worse than none. * * * (3) To appoint a Congress with powers to do all acts necessary for the support and uses of the Union, and at the same time to leave all the States at liberty to obey them or not with impunity, is, in every view, the greatest absurdity. Further, I propose that if the execution of any act or order of the supreme authority shall be opposed by force in any of the States (which God forbid) it shall be lawful for Congress to send into such State a sufficient force to suppress it. On the whole, I take it that the very existence and use of our Union essentially depends on the full energy and final effect of the laws made to support it, and therefore I sacrifice all other considerations to this energy and effect, and if our Union is not worth this purchase we must give it up—the nature of the thing does not admit of any other alternative."

THE RESERVED RIGHTS OF THE STATE.

Webster was no more eager, however, to arm his new Federal creation with supremacy in the event that its laws or decrees should be defied by the States than he was to guard against intrusion such rights as the States reserved to themselves. Nothing could be more explicit on that subject than these declarations:

"II. But now the great and most difficult part of this weighty subject remains to be considered, viz, how these supreme powers are to be constituted in such manner that they may be able to exercise with full force and effect the vast authorities committed to them for the good and well-being of the United States and yet be so checked and restrained from exercising them to the injury and ruin of the States that we may with safety trust them with a commission of such vast magnitude (the first definition of State rights)—and may Almighty Wisdom direct my pen in this arduous discussion. * * * I propose, further, that the powers of Congress, and all the other departments acting under them, shall be restricted to such matters only of general necessity and utility to all the States as can not come within the jurisdiction of any particular State, or to which the authority of any particular State is not competent, so that each particular State shall enjoy all sovereignty and supreme authority to all intents and purposes, excepting only those high authorities and powers by them delegated to Congress for the purposes of the General Union."

Here we have in advance, and in a more elaborate form, the tenth amendment, which declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." Nothing could be more clear and explicit than Webster's declaration that his new Federal fabric was to be one of delegated and strictly limited powers, and yet one absolutely supreme within the limits of its jurisdiction as defined by its own tribunals.

WEBSTER THE FIRST EXPOUNDER AND DEFENDER OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

When the existing Constitution of the United States was given to the world, after the adjournment of the Federal Convention on the 17th of September, 1787, Pelatiah Webster, a citizen of Philadelphia, was able to greet and defend the child of his brain with a father's zeal and a father's love. Then it was that he promptly took his place at the side of Washington, who nearly exhausted his moral authority in a supreme effort to force the States to ratify it. While the jealous Titans were halting between their local self-interests and their fears of a total dissolution of the Union—rendered imminent by a bitter opposition upon the part of many to the commerce clause—the enemies of the new Constitution attempted to strangle it at its birth by inducing Pennsylvania to reject it. With that end in view an unpatriotic minority of the assembly of that State, on September 29—after attempting on the day before to prevent, by breaking a quorum, the reference of the new Constitution to conventions of the States—bitterly denounced it in an address to their constituents. It was at that critical moment that Webster stood forth like Horatius at the gate; in the first assault ever made upon the new Constitution his strong right arm was the first raised to defend it. On October 12, he fell upon the factious secessionists and scourged them in a brilliant response to their address, characterized by all the weightiness of Burke and by the withering scorn of Junius. After answering all of their objections to a Federal assembly of two chambers, very nearly in the language in which he had originally proposed such an assembly, he said: "Vide a 'Dissertation on the political union and Constitution of the Thirteen United States,' published by a citizen of Philadelphia, February 16, 1783, where the subject is taken up at large." The original text of that remarkable, yet almost entirely unknown, paper of October 12, 1787, in which Webster thus refers expressly to his first performance for a more extended statement of his argument, is to be found in the Boston Athenæum and in the Library of Congress. It is certainly notable as the first popular exposition ever made of the new Constitution after the adjournment of the convention; and, above all, it fixes the fact that the author of the "great discovery in modern political science" was also its first expounder and defender. Under the leadership of Pelatiah Webster was thus fought out, in the streets of Philadelphia, the first battle for the Constitution, resulting on December 12 in the ratification of Pennsylvania by a vote of 46 to 23.

THE DRAFTSMEN OF THE THREE PLANS—MADISON, PINCKNEY, AND HAMILTON.

On the day Webster laid his complete and wholly novel plan of a Federal Government at the door of the Continental Congress, Madison, then 32, and Hamilton, then 26, were in their places in that assembly in which Charles Pinckney, then 25, took his place not long afterwards. Only the blind or infatuated will contend that these vigilant and ambitious young statesmen, intent upon improving conditions then crying out for a remedy, did not read and master the contents of the great document, the first to propose the construction of a new Federal system, published "at the seat of government," under their very eyes on February 16, 1783. As a trained and experienced financier and statesman of 57 Webster was certainly far better equipped to solve a problem, in its essence financial and commercial, than either Madison, Pinckney, or Hamilton could have been at that time. He formulated, in the light of his experience, the novel principles they were to translate into a working system of government. After reflecting for four years upon Webster's startling proposal, the three brilliant young statesmen in question restated it, each from his own point of view, in three plans, carefully formulated long before the meeting of the Federal convention in May, 1787. From his life by Rives we know that Madison was at work on the so-called Virginia plan at least a year beforehand; the elaborate plan or "system" presented by Charles Pinckney was described in his "Observations" months before his departure from Charleston; while the Hamilton plan was worked out so elaborately beforehand as a constitution that it might have gone into effect the next day, as his son tells us, if it had been adopted. (I have demonstrated long ago (see Yale Law Journal for December, 1908) that the so-called "Connecticut plan," of which Bancroft has said so much, existed only in his imagination. The records do not contain it.)

ABSURDITY OF THE "INSPIRATION THEORY."

No popular myth was ever so absurd, so foundationless as that so justly ridiculed and labeled by the great German historian Von Holst the "inspiration theory," which assumes, in the face of all the crushing documentary evidence to the contrary, that the "great discovery in modern political science" emerged, after the doors were closed, through some supernormal process, from the combined brains of the convention which only worked 86 days. The records show that the "great discovecy" was taken as a whole into the convention in three plans, prearranged long beforehand, two of which were presented the moment the convention was organized for business. No deliberative body ever had its work so cut out and arranged beforehand as the Federal Convention of 1787. From the time the plans were submitted to the close the single question before the secret conclave was as to the form in which the great invention of February 16, 1783, should be adapted to then existing conditions as a working system of government. The confusion long existing in the public mind on this all-important subject was the natural outcome of the fact that the convention shrouded its proceedings in a secrecy as profound as that which incloses a Masonic lodge, sealed its records at the close and committed them to Washington with the injunction "that he retain the Journal and other papers subject to the order of Congress, if ever formed under the Constitution." Not until 1818 did Congress partially break the seal by ordering the publication of the imperfect fragment known as the "Journal"; and not until 1841, 54 years after the adjournment, was the full record published in the three volumes of priceless "papers" prepared by the semiofficial reporter, James Madison. During that half century of mystery and suppression it was that the mythical history of what actually took place in the secret conclave crystallized into a series of misty and misleading impressions so fixed in the minds of the older men of the country that it is now difficult to dislodge them, even with the aid of clear and explicit documentary evidence. "My siege is finished," exclaimed Vertot, when offered new documents which stultified his narrative. In the same spirit many of the devotees of the pitiful "inspiration theory," redolent of the "Faust book," still respond even when the connected documentary history of all that occurred is offered them. Possibly Sir Leslie Stephen was right when he said "Mankind resents nothing so much as the intrusion upon them of a new and disturbing truth"; possibly Herbert Spencer was right when he said: "The world resents any attempt to show that it has fallen into an error."

THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 AND ITS WORK.

But let us all remember that perfect justice may be done to the fame of the great architect of our second Constitution without injury to the fame of any of his contemporaries. Neither Madison, Pinckney, nor Hamilton ever claimed to be the author of the "great discovery" for the best of all reasons—such a claim upon the part of one would have involved him at once in a sharp conflict with the other two. Nothing more can be said than that each failed to state the source from which the fundamentals of his plan were drawn. If the convention had sat with open doors that omission would have been impossible, because when the three plans as drafted by Madison, Pinckney, and Hamilton are placed in juxtaposition with the original paper of February 16, 1783, a mere comparison settles the fact that the great invention, which is the basis of all of them, was drawn by each from the common source. And yet after that claim has been fully admitted, as it will be by every honest and reasonable mind, the fact remains that the master builders, who transformed under the most difficult circumstances possible the dream—it was only a dream—of the great architect into a working system of government, achieved a result just as remarkable as the invention itself. The philosophers, statesmen, jurists, warriors, experienced men of affairs, who composed the august assembly that wrought at Philadelphia in 1787, may be compared, as to genius and learning, with the master spirits of any age. No assembly so small—it numbered only 55 delegates—was ever dominated by so many men of the highest order. They need not strut in borrowed plumes; they need no fame that belongs to another. The most ardent worshipper of the master builders would only belittle their immortality if he fancied that it could be at all dimmed by the rendition of tardy justice to the great architect, the man of contemplation, who was their natural, perhaps their necessary, forerunner.

All have been rewarded, all have been honored except the great one who made everything possible. While the priceless legacy bequeathed by the immortal document of February 16, 1783, has become the heritage of swelling millions, an humble and neglected grave at Philadelphia has been the only recompense so far received by its author. Every drummer boy, every foreigner who rendered conspicuous service to the patriot cause during the Revolutionary era has been honored by a monument—only the architect of our marvelous Constitution has been forgotten. But he has not been ungenerously forgotten by a noble and grateful people, ever ready to honor all who have served them. For reasons stated already the real facts involved in the life work of Pelatiah Webster have not heretofore been known; it was the fate of this great man of contemplation to work, as it were, behind a curtain which until now has almost concealed him from the view of the world. To the drawing aside of that curtain your humble petitioner has devoted the best efforts of his life. Unbiased by sectional feeling as a southern man, unchilled by the scornful coldness of the leaders of thought in New England, who have done what they could to demonstrate that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country and among his own people, he has moved steadily on, believing, with Langlois, that "History is studied from documents. Documents are the traces which have been left by the thoughts and actions of men of former times. There is no substitute for documents; no documents, no history." By the most explicit and most authentic of all documents Pelatiah Webster's fame has been fixed for all time.

Two years after the new Constitution had gone into effect Webster republished at Philadelphia the great document of February 16, 1783, with important notes, in which he explained with perfect clearness the circumstances under which it had been written. In the notes he says: "I was then pretty much at leisure, and was fully of opinion (though the sentiment at that time would not very well bear) that it would be ten times easier to form a new constitution than to mend the old one. I therefore sat myself down to sketch out the leading principles of that political Constitution which I thought necessary to the preservation and happiness of the United States of America, which are comprised in this dissertation. I hope the reader will please consider that these are the original thoughts of a private individual, dictated by the nature of the subject only, long before the important theme became the great object of discussion in the most dignified and important assembly which ever sat or decided in America." He then says: "I wish here to remark the great particulars of my plan which were rejected by the convention." Among them special prominence is given to the rejection by the convention of his pet hobby involving the creation of a department of commerce in close touch with Congress. "I therefore humbly propose, if the merchants in the several States are disposed to send delegates from their body to meet and attend the sittings of Congress, that they shall be permitted to form a chamber of commerce, and their advice to Congress be demanded and admitted concerning all bills before Congress, as far as the same may affect the trade of the States." Thus looking ahead, great merchant as he was, he announced the idea finally embodied a century later in the Department of Commerce recently created.

The last words of the famous paper of February 16, 1783, are these: "I have not the vanity to imagine that my sentiments may be adopted; I shall have all the reward I wish or expect if my dissertation shall throw any light on the great subject, shall excite an emulation of inquiry and animate some abler genius to form a plan of greater perfection, less objectionable and more useful." The last words of the notes appended to the republication of 1791 are these: "But if any of these questions should in future time become objects of discussion, neither the vast dignity of the convention nor the low, unnoticed state of myself will be at all considered in the debates; the merits of the matter and the interests connected with or arising out of it will alone dictate the decision." Such was the appeal made by the architect of our existing Constitution to the tribunal of history for justice. As an epoch-making mind can only be viewed in all its grandeur through the vista of receding years, it is not at all likely that the world of our time, which "resents any attempt to show that it has fallen into an error," will admit the real magnitude of the work achieved by this marvelous American statesman and patriot. And yet there is a disposition to do something. The venerable representative of the family of Pelatiah Webster, Pelatiah Webster Huntington, of Columbus, Ohio, was invited to personate the great architect in the famous "Historical Pageant of 1912" at Philadelphia, where he marched between John Adams and Thomas Jefferson. Your petitioner therefore hopes and believes that the time has arrived when the Congress of the United States, the first two-chamber Federal assembly in all history, will be willing to pause for a moment in order to do honor to the genius who designed it. As to that fact there can be neither cavil, doubt, nor question. Your petitioner therefore prays the Congress, first, that on February 16, 1914, it will order this petition to be read in each House and then published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to the end that the people of the United States may better understand the facts involved in the life work of one surely destined to stand out in the time to come as one of the foremost founders of the Republic; second, that this petition be then referred, in each House, to an appropriate committee, who shall be directed to inquire whether a tablet or some other appropriate memorial should be erected in or near the Capitol in commemoration of the services of one who has contributed so much not only to our honor and glory but to the politics of the world. All of which is humbly submitted by

HANNIS TAYLOR, Petitioner.

POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS.

By Mr. BRISTOW:
A bill (S. 4503) to amend the Federal reserve act by repealing the prohibition against deposit of the postal savings funds in any bank not belonging to the system established by said act.
Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say in regard to this bill that the present practice is to deposit postal savings funds in any bank in the community where the deposits are made. The change in the act would necessitate the making of the deposits only in member banks of the regional reserve association, and that would be a very great inconvenience. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.
The motion was agreed to.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:
A bill (S. 4514) to authorize the President of the United States to mine coal in Alaska, to reserve from private appropriation or lease certain lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.
Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands? I will say to the Senator that the subject embraced in the bill has been under discussion in that committee for six or seven years. All of the hearings with reference to it have been before that committee, and if the Senator will notice he will find that the same subject is now before the Committee on the Public Lands of the other House. The Secretary of the Interior appeared before that committee yesterday, and the question is now being considered by them. If the Senator has no objection, I think the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have a special reason for desiring that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. While that committee has not been considering the subject so long as has been the Committee on Public Lands, it is, nevertheless, about to take action upon bills relating to the same subject which have been pending before it for a short time. I therefore desire this bill to be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining in order that it may be considered with other bills on which action is about to be taken.
Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] were present, I think the question would be discussed in the Senate. I have no objection to the bill going to the Committee on Mines and Mining, but I should like, when the question is discussed here, for the Senator from Washington to be present in order that he may hear what will then be said upon that particular subject.
Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to be present on that occasion, and am very glad that the Senator has made his suggestion.
Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I desire to say, in this connection, that I understand a bill touching the leasing of coal lands in Alaska has been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The bill should have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, in the opinion of that committee. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. MYERS] was instructed to make that motion, and he delegated me to move that the Committee on Mines and Mining be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Holding that the coal lands of the country are not subject to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate, that motion will be made by me whenever the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is present.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BRYAN (for Mr. FLETCHER) submitted an amendment to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
Mr. LANE submitted an amendment relative to the use of the appropriation for the construction of a central high-school building in the city of Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.
Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF SIMMONS HARRISON, DECEASED.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 276), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to James S. Harrison, of Hattiesburg, and Sallie G. Harrison and Annie S. Harrison, of Belzoni, Miss., children and heirs at law of Simmons Harrison, late messenger, Acting Assistant Doorkeeper of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

TRUCK SOILS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I submit an order and ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Printing.
There being no objection, the order was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed as a public document an article on "Truck Soils of the Atlantic Coast Region," prepared by Jay A. Bonsteel, scientist in the Soil Survey, Agricultural Department.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present a letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission conveying various correspondence in connection with the so-called Lea resolution relative to the investigation of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. I ask that the letter and accompanying papers may be printed in the RECORD for the use of the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,

DEAR SIR: In response to your request, I beg to hand you herewith copies of reports received from our examiners who have been in Louisville and Nashville connected with the investigation ordered by Senate resolution No. 153.

Mr. FRED W. SWENEY,
Chief Examiner of Accounts,
Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I telegraphed you to-day as follows:

"Mapother, first vice president, has refused Carleton inspection card indexes containing reference correspondence files his office. Believed indexes give file reference matter relevant paragraph 12, Senate resolution. Letter follows."

I herewith inclose the letter referred to written by Examiner Carleton giving the full details of the refusal of the card indexes and his reasons for wanting to inspect them. I wish to add that these files are particularly desired, as it is believed that matters relating to politicians and referred to in the twelfth question of the Senate resolution are conducted under the authority of Mr. Mapother, first vice president.

Unless we are allowed free access to the cards we shall find very little reference elsewhere to relevant correspondence.

Will you kindly instruct what further action I shall take in the premises, and oblige,

Yours, very truly,

WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge.

[Interstate Commerce Commission, Division of Carriers' Accounts, Chicago branch office, Steger Building, Chicago, Ill.]

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 23, 1914.

Mr. WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge, Chicago Branch Office,
Interstate Commerce Commission, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: As a matter of record and that you may know the extent to which the investigation directed by Senate resolution 153 is being obstructed by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. I wish to inform you of the position taken by the carrier in relation to permitting examiners of the commission to inspect correspondence files.

The requests upon Mr. W. L. Mapother, the first vice president, for passes issued by him are not filed in a single file covering pass requests only, but as part of his regular correspondence files under the name either of the person on whose request the pass was issued or to whom it was issued. The file numbers covering the requests for annual passes are indicated on the record of passes issued, but no such reference is given upon the stubs recording the issuance of trip passes, it being necessary to refer to the index of the files to determine the file number.

A request was made for access to the correspondence files for the purpose of inspecting the pass requests. This was refused by Mr. Mapother, who, however, stated that if we would give him reference, either by number or by name, as in the case of card passes, to the particular files desired he would be pleased to have them drawn and brought in to us for inspection. He objected, however, to turning the files over direct to an examiner prior to their examination either by himself or his chief clerk. He gave as his reason that the files might contain communications of a nature either personal or confidential and privileged as with counsel, which he considered were not subject to inspection by examiners of the commission and which he might wish to remove before submitting the remainder of the files for examination.

A request was then made for permission to inspect the card index to the correspondence files in order that the examiner could determine what files, whether relating either to passes or any other subject which might be deemed relevant, he wished to inspect. Mr. Mapother was of the opinion that to grant such a request would enable the examiner to obtain information concerning the nature of correspondence which was held by the carrier as not subject to inspection, but before making a positive answer to the request desired to consult with the legal department.

Later in the day Mr. Mapother informed me that he had conferred with the general counsel, Mr. H. L. Stone, and had laid before him my request, and that Mr. Stone was of the opinion that to permit such an inspection would not be consistent with the position taken by him in his telegram of December 9, 1913, to Chairman E. E. Clark outlining his reasons for refusing our examiners permission to inspect certain files in his office. Acting upon such advice, Mr. Mapother refused to allow an inspection of the index to the correspondence files in his office. He wished to assure me, however, that there was not the slightest desire or purpose on his part to obstruct or in any way interfere with the progress of the investigation, and that he would be pleased to turn over for inspection any files I might ask for, provided, of course, that it was considered by him as subject to inspection by an examiner of the commission.

The Senate, under question 13 of the resolution, has asked for information concerning passes issued "at the request of members of legislative bodies and other public officials." Unless free access is had to the files covering pass requests, it will be impossible to secure full information as to such passes. The request upon which the pass was actually issued may be made by others than members of legislative bodies or other public officials, acting at the request of such parties. This the complete files would doubtless disclose, but if the carrier is allowed to first remove such communications as it may deem as privileged, there is no assurance that the full information will be obtained.

It appears that Mr. Mapother is the officer under whose direction any publicity or other campaigns for the purpose of influencing public opinion through newspaper advertising or otherwise is conducted.

In question 12 of the resolution the Senate has asked, in addition to what amount has been expended or contributed for certain purposes, what amount has been subscribed. To determine any authorized subscriptions not appearing in the accounts, because no payments may have been made as yet, it would be necessary to inspect Mr. Mapother's files. His files would also disclose readily information relating to the matters concerning which the Senate has asked which can hardly be obtained in any other manner, and if at all only by means of exhaustive search through other records and accounts.

You can readily see how the refusal, either to permit a free inspection of the index to the correspondence files or to turn over any file requested without its being first examined and stripped of any and all papers which in the opinion of the carrier are not subject to inspection, impedes the investigation and renders it practically impossible to secure all the information desired, especially if the position assumed in relation to Mr. Mapother's files is maintained in regard to files of the other departments, as it doubtless will be.

Your attention is directed to the fact that Mr. Mapother is first vice president and, so far as I can learn, does not in any way act as counsel or attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. It does not appear that the reason for refusing correspondence assigned by the general counsel, Mr. Stone, in his telegram of December 9 previously referred to, namely, that the communications were confidential and privileged as between attorney and client, applies to the request made to inspect the index to the correspondence files in the office of the first vice president.

Mr. Mapother's secretary took notes during our last interview, and I have just received the copy of their transcription which was promised me. As this gives the exact words in which Mr. Mapother declined my request, I am inclosing for your information a copy of that portion which pertains thereto.

Yours, very truly,

WILL H. CARLETON, Examiner.

[Extract from stenographic report of interview between Mr. W. H. Carleton, examiner, Interstate Commerce Commission, and Mr. W. L. Mapother, first vice president Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., at Louisville, Ky., January 22, 1914.]

Mr. MAPOTHER. In accordance with my promise, I narrated to Col. H. L. Stone, our general counsel, the interview which I had with you this morning, and, while we don't mean to be obstinate and don't want to be in the attitude of interfering with your investigation in any way, and want you to feel and the commission to feel that we are doing everything within reason to facilitate your investigation, Col. Stone is of the opinion the examination which you propose would be an invasion of such privacy as the law grants to us, and I am obliged to decline your request.

Now, I want to reiterate what I said to you this morning, that I am perfectly willing to aid you in every possible way, and am willing to turn over to you all correspondence of any character, within the scope of your authority, as you may indicate a desire for. For example, if you say you want all the correspondence relating to the issuance of trip passes, say from January 1, 1911, we will get out the correspondence relating to our trip passes; and same as to annuals or relating to any other feature of the Senate resolution or the commission's investigation, independent of any special authority from the Senate. But, as I explained our system of correspondence, it would be impossible for you to go through our card index and registers without gaining a complete record of the privileged communications between officials of the company and counsel, which Col. Stone has regarded as being private and which he has heretofore declined to turn over to the examiners on the demand of Commissioner Clark; and that is the sole reason we have for demurring to your proposition. Now, I thought that you might be interested in seeing the correspondence that passed between Col. Stone and Chairman Clark. I don't know whether you have seen it or not. [Correspondence handed to and read by Mr. Carleton.] The examiners were here for some time. They first came to me and presented the same request as you present now, and I demurred to it, explaining my reasons—that I thought we ought to be entitled to a reasonable supervision of the examiners' work and ought to be permitted to know what investigation was being made, so we might avail of an opportunity to object to the surrender of records and correspondence; and they acquiesced in my views; at least, they dropped the matter, and I heard nothing more of it. They then went to Col. Stone and called for several of his files that related to litigation conducted in Alabama, in connection with the resistance of the statutes down there and the orders of the commission making what we considered unwarranted and unjustifiable reductions in our rates. Naturally, the files contain a great many private and confidential communications between the general counsel and the attorneys that were employed in Alabama, and these were the communications which Col. Stone considered privileged. They did not get to the point of asking for similar correspondence in this office—the executive department has communications of the same character as the law department. When Col. Stone refused, the examiners reported the matter to Washington, which resulted in the matter being submitted to the Senate, and nothing further has been done. The demand that you make is along identically the same lines, and if we permit you to rove at will through all our correspondence for the purpose of discovering just what we have, it will result in our giving you, in a measure, just exactly what Col. Stone declined to surrender.

Mr. CARLETON. Do you take the position that a request for correspondence must be specific—particular file—or general?

Mr. MAPOTHER. Well, either way to suit you; either general of specific. Of course, it will have to be specific to a certain extent in order for us to know what is wanted. I tried to illustrate awhile ago; if you say you want everything about passes on account of newspapers, or on account of charitable, educational, or religious purposes, or of that sort, we will give you all the correspondence relating to it. As a matter of fact, the annual-pass index, which I presume has been turned over to you, shows the file number and a complete record of the reasons for issuance.

Mr. CARLETON. I was about to ask you for the file of requests for trip passes. Will you turn those over to us?

Mr. MAPOTHER. Yes, sir; but it will take some time to get all of them.

Supplementing my last telegram to Carmalt last night, the following from Carleton quote request made for permission to allow an examiner to work in the room of the first vice president's suite in which his clerks work and from which the file room opens. Refused permission, first vice president stating if we placed a man therein he would close the office. Stated we had permission to come in and go out of his office rooms freely, but before he would permit a man to be stationed in office rooms for purpose intended would fire him out bodily. Also refused entrance to building after office hours. Wire instructions.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
DIVISION OF CARRIERS' ACCOUNTS,
CHICAGO BRANCH OFFICE,
Chicago, Ill., February 4, 1914.

Mr. FRED W. SWENEY,
Chief Examiner of Accounts,
Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On account of the office being closed yesterday evening and not knowing how to get a message to Washington for your attention, I telegraphed Mr. Carmalt concerning the files at Louisville, Ky., and also, at 11 o'clock last night, I wired to Mr. Carmalt for the same reason a telegram from Mr. Carleton stating that he had been ejected from the file room.

I now hand you a copy of letter from Examiner Carleton giving full information regarding the refusal to allow free access to the files, the refusal of files, and his ejection from the file room.

Yours, very truly,

WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge.

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 3, 1914.

Mr. WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge, Chicago Branch Office,
Interstate Commerce Commission, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your first telegram was received about 1 o'clock this morning, and in the first reading I took it had reference to the offices of the "Nashville" Railroad here. Accordingly I awakened Mr. Lawrence, and we came down to the building and waited around for about half or three-quarters of an hour, but observed no lights on the tenth floor where the offices of the president and first vice president are located. It was not until a second reading that I discovered that it had reference to the city of Nashville. I accordingly went to Mr. Keene's room, awakened him, and instructed him that he would have to start on the first train in the morning, which left at 8.35. I also awakened Mr. Reinoehl and so instructed him, and at the time he said all right. I have written you a separate letter explaining why Mr. Reinoehl did not go.

Mr. Keene got off on the 8.35 train, which was due to reach Nashville at 3.10 this afternoon, this being the first train available. I instructed him to wire both you and myself his address immediately upon his arrival, but as yet I have heard nothing from him. As soon as I do, I will wire instructions contained in your telegrams to me.

This morning I compiled a list of the references to files in the first vice president's office referred to in the pass records. I informed Mr. Weis, Mr. Mapother's chief clerk, that I desired to place Mr. Lawrence in the file room and have him examine there certain files which he would indicate, but wished him to be present at the time the files were "pulled." After so informing him, I, in company with Mr. Lawrence, immediately entered the file room and there observed seated at a large table a clerk of Mr. Mapother's (whose name Mr. Weis gave me as John Jenkins) engaged in going over several bound volumes of correspondence indexes. (Mr. Weis, upon being closely questioned, admitted that prior to the establishment of the card index they maintained the index in bound volume, and that it required both the card index and the bound volumes of indexes to form a complete index to the correspondence files.) The clerk was drawing off on a sheet of paper file references. While standing there I had Mr. Lawrence copy from the list he was making as many numbers as possible.

Piled on the table at which the clerk was working was a large number of files, and from these I managed to take a few reference numbers. I observed as I entered, lying on the floor at the left of the table, a large leather valise, open, apparently empty, partially covered with a sheet of wrapping paper. Later I noticed that the valise had been closed and shoved farther under the table, evidently that it might not be so noticeable. At this juncture Mr. Weis informed me that Mr. Mapother stated that I would have to abide by the decision which he gave me previously as to the manner in which I obtained the files.

In company with Mr. Lawrence I had an interview with Mr. Mapother, in which I asked if I was to understand that he absolutely refused to allow an examiner to be in the file room when the papers which I requested were taken from the files. He said absolutely that he did. I thereupon called you on the long-distance phone and related the facts.

Meanwhile, Mr. Lawrence, upon my instructions, had requested all of the files covered by the numbers which he had taken while in the file room. Two of these files were denied us—No. 34867, which Chief Clerk Weis stated "Refers to lease of W. & A. by N., C. & St. L., and contains privileged communications between counsel and officials, and will not be delivered." "No. 82663 refers to Alabama rate case," and which Mr. Weis stated contain privileged communications, and would not be delivered. The remaining files, with the exception of three which Mr. Weis claimed could not be located, were received about an hour and 20 minutes after they were requested.

Upon my return to the office from telephoning you, acting upon your instructions, I placed Examiner Lawrence in the file room and then went and informed Mr. Weis that, acting under instructions, I had placed Mr. Lawrence in the room, there to remain as long as anyone was working on the files, in order to ascertain what disposition was made thereof. I looked about for the valise which I had previously noted, but could not discover it. I asked three clerks and Mr. Weis what had become of it, and they all pleaded ignorance. One of the clerks (T. B. Toon) stated that possibly it was in the possession of a gentleman (whose name I was unable to catch) in the president's office, and went in ostensibly to see. I followed him; no one was in the office, but there was a valise there somewhat similar to that which I had seen in the file room, but newer. Mr. Toon opened it, but there were no files contained therein. I told him that that was not the valise, and he said he did not know what had become of the other one. I returned to the file room and commenced looking around, and at last discovered a valise under one of the shelves, and also noticed another large valise under another shelf. I drew out from under the shelf the valise previously noted, which, upon my first entrance into the office after my interview with Mr. Mapother, was lying on the floor empty, and found therein a number of files. I ran them over and called out the file references to Mr. Lawrence, who took the numbers down. The numbers which were recorded were as follows: 68082, 67341, 72100, 66375, and 39574.

After hurriedly ascertaining the number of the files, I reclosed the valise and returned it to its place. Mr. Weis, upon seeing me draw the valise out, immediately hurried into Mr. Mapother's private office and returned just after I had closed the valise, and stated rather vehemently, "You are not going to take those files out of here."

Immediately following him came Mr. Mapother, who grabbed me by the shoulders and thrust me out from the file room, exclaiming, "You get out of here," and with an oath, "If you won't act like a gentleman I won't have you in my office." Turning upon Mr. Lawrence, he likewise grabbed him by the shoulders and thrust him out, saying, with the same oath, "You get out of here, too."

I said nothing, but left his office, returning to room No. 1011, the room assigned for our use, where I made a copy of the numbers of the files noted in the valise and had Mr. Lawrence return and make a request upon Mr. Weis for the files. This was just shortly before 5 o'clock, and Mr. Weis stepped into the office of Mr. Mapother and returned, with the statement that the office was closed. Mr. Lawrence then requested an interview with Mr. Mapother, and asked if he was to understand that he was denied the files. Mr. Mapother stated that he had not had time to look them over, but that he would give them to us in the morning or assign a reason for not doing so. I immediately sent you a telegram covering the situation.

I have arranged for Mr. Crandall to leave this evening for Nashville to join Mr. Keene.

For your information I inclose herewith a copy of the memorandum dictated by Mr. Lawrence covering his interview with Mr. Mapother, and also a memorandum covering our previous interview with Mr. Mapother, dictated by him as if written by me, which he did at my request during the time I was engaged in telephoning you.

Yours, very truly,

WILL H. CARLETON, Examiner.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEW WITH FIRST VICE PRESIDENT MAPOTHER AND HIS CHIEF CLERK (MR. WEIS), 5 P. M., FEBRUARY 3, 1914.

Made request on Mr. Weis for files Nos. 68082, 67341, 72100, 66375, and 39754, and he asked if they were the files which we found in the valise, and I told him they were. He immediately went into Vice President Mapother's office, came out, and said, "Mr. Mapother said to tell you the office is closed." I asked Mr. Weis if I might see Mr. Mapother. Mr. Weis said I could.

Went into Mr. Mapother's office and said to Mr. Mapother, "Do you refuse us those files?" Mr. Mapother said, "The files are in use;

I am using them now." I said to Mr. Mapother, "Well, then, do you refuse them to us?" He said, "I will give them to you to-morrow, or a reason for not doing so, as I have not had time to look them over to find out what they are."

Mr. Mapother said that he did not propose to have us going into his file room, as we had done.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEW WITH FIRST VICE PRESIDENT MAPOTHER, 2.10 P. M., FEBRUARY 3, 1914.

Asked Mr. Mapother if he would allow me the privilege of having an examiner work in his file room or place where his correspondence and other files were stored. Mapother said that he would not; that he thought that that matter was settled at a former interview; that he refused to allow us or anyone to dictate how his office should be run. I then asked him if he refused to allow an examiner to work in the file room, the carrier's employee to take out the files and give them to the examiner. Mapother said that he did refuse to allow it; that he did not propose to have an inspector stand over his men while the files were being taken out. He said that the files contained matter which was as between client and legal adviser, and that he would not give them to anyone until he was forced to do so by some higher legal authority. He said the matter he referred to was the same as had been denied to Chairman Clark by Col. Stone. Mapother said that he did not propose to have any of our inspectors act as a police over his men. He said he would be glad to give us any file of correspondence or other record which I might ask for, but he would retain the right to look through it before it was turned over to me.

I then asked if he refused to allow me any access to his file room, and he said, "I do." Asked him if the only way we could get any files from him would be to give him a request for specified ones, and have him bring them out to me, to which he answered that we could have any correspondence I might want and was entitled to, but it would have to be handled in that way.

I then asked Mr. Mapother whether there were any contracts, agreements, or correspondence, or other matter amounting to an agreement, with any railroad, corporation, or individual filed in any place other than the office of the secretary. Mapother said no; that the by-laws of the carrier made the secretary the custodian of all contracts, agreements, or any correspondence or other matter which amounted to an agreement, and that the originals of all such agreements would be in the custody of the secretary.

While waiting for an audience with Mr. Mapother I went into the room where correspondence and other files pertaining to matters relating to the offices of the president and first vice president are filed. In there found one John Jenkins engaged in going through the old book indexes to the files. He was taking down the numbers of various files, the nature of which was not noted. Around him on the table at which he was working was piled a large number of correspondence files and on the floor was an open satchel.

While the work upon which he was engaged is not known, the indications were such as led to the belief that he was listing and extracting files for some ulterior purpose, probably to prevent them from being used in this examination.

THE HERMITAGE HOTEL,
Louisville, Ky., February 5, 1914.

Hon. B. H. MEYER,
Commissioner, Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with instructions received from Examiner Walter V. Wilson to wire you all details connected with the situation here subsequent to telegraphic advice to him of the refusal of the first vice president to allow an examiner to be stationed in his office, I wired you this morning as follows:

"First vice president expressing opinion of general counsel that commission under act has authority to inspect only such accounts, records, and memoranda as originate subsequent to August 28, 1906, has in formal letter refused permission to examine such of prior date. Refusal includes any correspondence considered by carrier as of privileged character subsequent that date and all correspondence of whatever nature of prior date. My address Hotel Hermitage."

I inclose herewith a copy of the letter written by the first vice president, Mr. W. L. Mapother, which was delivered to me at the hotel by his chief clerk at 11.45 last evening. I have endeavored to secure an interview with Mr. Mapother this morning in relation to the matter, but have been informed that he was engaged and that I would be notified as soon as he was at liberty to grant me an audience.

In addition to being refused entrance to the building for the purpose of continuing our work in the special room assigned to us after office hours, we have been served notice that we will not even be permitted to remain in the building after office hours.

The file-room door, usually open, has not been open at any time that an examiner has entered the offices of the first vice president since he forcibly ejected Examiner Paul H. Lawrence and myself. The toilet room located on this floor projects slightly from the building, and from a window therein one can obtain an oblique view of a portion of the file room. In the early part of the day following our ejectment the curtains of this window were up, but later in the day they were observed to have been drawn and have so remained ever since, thus obstructing any view which might otherwise be obtained. This is not necessary on account of the sun, because the last two days have been very cloudy.

Last evening, shortly after 10 o'clock, in company with two of our examiners, I walked down to the general office building of the L. & N. and observed a light in the file room and the other offices of the suite occupied by the president and first vice president. We waited in the vicinity of the building until very nearly 11 o'clock, when we observed three of the employees in the executive department leave the building. This information is given you in order that you may have knowledge of the conditions as they exist.

Yours, very respectfully,

WILL H. CARLETON, Examiner.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.,
FIRST VICE PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
Louisville, Ky., February 4, 1914.

W. L. MAPOTHER, First Vice President.

Mr. WILL H. CARLETON,
Examiner, Interstate Commerce Commission,
Hermitage Hotel, City.

DEAR SIR: In view of our several discussions concerning the extent of the powers of yourself and assistants in the matter of examining the correspondence files and papers of the L. & N. R. R. Co., I deem it desirable that I clearly and definitely state the company's position in order that you may govern yourself accordingly.

It is the opinion of general counsel (1) that the extraordinary inquisitorial powers given to the commission, its agents and examiners, by section 20 of the act to regulate commerce relate only to such "accounts, records, and memoranda" as the commission is empowered by that section to prescribe; and (2) that said section as amended by what is commonly known as the Hepburn Act, approved June 29, 1906, effective August 28, 1906, is not retroactive, but prospective only, and relates exclusively to the particular "accounts, records, and memoranda" which have been kept in pursuance of said act, and, hence, necessarily such as came into existence on and after the effective date of said act.

Entertaining these views, we consider that you have no authority at all to examine the correspondence files of the executive department, as you have been permitted to do for some weeks, and no right to examine the "accounts, records, and memoranda" referred to in said section, except those which have been kept on and after August 28, 1906.

We are willing, however, in order to facilitate your work, to allow you to continue your examination of the executive department's correspondence files, as well as any "accounts, records, or memoranda" kept by and still in possession of the company originating on and after the date last mentioned. This permission, it is to be understood, is not to embrace any communications between the representatives of this company and its counsel of a privileged nature as between client and attorney.

Yours, truly,

W. L. MAPOTHER,
First Vice President.

Mr. WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge, Chicago Branch Office,
Interstate Commerce Commission, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: I have your wire stating that you have asked Washington to give instructions in relation to refusal of the first vice president to permit an examiner to be stationed in his office room. There has been no change in the situation here since my wire to you, and consequently I have not communicated with the commissioner.

We have been working in room No. 1011, and made it a point to frequently enter the offices of the first vice president for a few files at a time. It has been noted, however, that the door to the file room has been closed. From the small sink room adjoining the toilet room used by the janitor a diagonal view can be obtained of a portion of the file room. The fore part of the morning the curtains of this room were up, but later in the day they were discovered to have been pulled down, thus obstructing any view of the file room.

It was therefore impossible for us to ascertain what was going on in the file room.

Mr. Bullock has also been denied permission to enter the storage rooms where the old accounting department records of the L. & N. are maintained. The inclosed copies of memorandums dictated by him, covering his interviews with Mr. Pharr, the assistant comptroller, fully explain.

For your information I also inclose a copy of the memorandum of my interview with Mr. Mapother and Mr. Weis this morning, the essentials of which are embodied in my telegram.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEWS WITH MR. A. J. PHARR, ASSISTANT COMPTROLLER, FEBRUARY 3, 1914.

About 10 o'clock this morning I requested Mr. A. J. Pharr, the assistant comptroller, to furnish me with a journal entry charging the cost of road—Evansville, Henderson & Nashville Railroad—with $188,000, said entry being on page 289 of the journal as of date February, 1880. At the same time I requested Mr. Pharr to allow me to accompany his clerk to the file room when he obtained this document, in order that I might inspect the system of filing old records. Mr. Pharr placed a memorandum on his desk and stated that he would inform me when he had sent the clerk for the document.

No action having been taken at 3.30 p. m., I again approached Mr. Pharr on the subject, and he informed me that while he did not wish to be placed in the position of refusing me the record or access to the record room he would have to delay the matter until he conferred with Col. Stone, the general counsel. He further stated that Mr. Stone had told him some time previously that the commission had no right to demand records prior to the date of the establishment of the commission. He supplemented this by saying that he did not know whether Col. Stone meant the date of the amended act or the date of the original creation of the commission.

Up to 5 p. m. no further information was obtained from Mr. Pharr.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEWS WITH MR. A. J. PHARR, ASSISTANT COMPTROLLER, FEBRUARY 4, 1914.

At 10 o'clock this morning Mr. Pharr furnished me with voucher requested of him yesterday, informing me, however, that Col. Stone, general counsel, had instructed him that the Interstate Commerce Commission had no right to demand records made prior to the creation of the commission, but that after inspecting the documents requested the carrier might, at its pleasure, furnish them for inspection.

In regard to inspecting the file rooms, Mr. Pharr said it would be necessary to take the matter up with Col. Stone again. At 2.30 p. m. Mr. Pharr advised me that he had been instructed by Col. Stone to refuse me permission to inspect any of the storerooms containing records made prior to the date the commission issued its first order covering the destruction of records. Col. Stone stating that there was no reason why representatives of the commission should be allowed to nose around in such records. He reiterated his former statement that specific documents might be furnished us on request, although the carrier reserved the privilege of withholding same.

Mr. Pharr stated that the various officers of the carrier were each responsible for the storing and preservation of their own records. As far as his office is concerned, he stated that he had no knowledge as to the records contained in the various storerooms. When asked how he would know where to obtain a voucher made in 1870, he stated that he and his clerk knew generally about where this voucher would be found, but that it would be necessary to find such document before he could state positively where it was stored.

On account of the inadequate facilities, the old records of this office are stored in various places, as follows:

Vault in connection with the comptroller's office, vault in the secretary's office, station baggage room, and roundhouse.

The first two named storerooms contain records made subsequent to the date the commission issued its first circular covering destruction of records, and examiner has not been denied permission to enter these rooms.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEW WITH MR. W. A. MAPOTHER AND MR. C. J. WEIS ABOUT 9.40 A. M., FEBRUARY 4, 1914.

Presented Mr. Weis with a slip containing the names of W. H. Carleton, A. M. Banten, F. D. Bullock, A. N. Bean, A. F. Brevillier, P. H. Lawrence, and C. P. Lishawa, and asked if he would kindly secure passes to the building for those named, in order that examiners might return to room No. 1011 after office hours, as it was found that frequently we desire to work a little later in the evening to get out communications or other matters, and desired the privilege of going out to lunch in the meanwhile; that in the evening previous two of our examiners were inconvenienced by having stepped out for lunch, intending to return to the office, where the remainder of us were working, and being refused admission to the building. Mr. Weis stated that the general manager's orders were that no one except those connected with the company should be privileged to enter the building without a pass, and that he would take the matter up and advise me.

I then presented him with a slip containing the following file numbers, which had been asked for the day previous, but which were not delivered, the statement being made by Mr. Weis at that time that they were not in file (these numbers were among those secured hurriedly by Examiner Lawrence and myself from the filing clerk's list of files lying on the table, and there is a possibility of an error having been made in copying them): 78156, 62590, and 73838.

Mr. Weis stated that there were no papers in the file under those numbers; and, upon being asked where they were, he said he did not know. I asked him if they had been destroyed, and he said not to his knowledge, and wished to know the nature of the subject covered by the file numbers and where I got the information. He was informed that it was not considered necessary to disclose from where the information was obtained, and that what I desired was the files themselves.

Mr. Weis was then informed that I would like to have one of our examiners work in the adjoining room, which is the communicating room between the first vice president's private office and the file room and is occupied by his office force. Attached hereto is a diagram showing roughly the manner of arrangement of the offices on the east end of the tenth floor of the Louisville & Nashville office building, corner Ninth Street and Broadway, Louisville, Ky. The room in which I desired the examiner placed is indicated by "No. 2" on the diagram.

Mr. Weis said he would have to refer the matter to Mr. Mapother. I accompanied him into Mr. Mapother's private office, and upon Mr. Weis stating my request Mr. Mapother replied that he would not grant permission for an examiner to work therein, and that if we placed a man there he would close up the office. He said that we were privileged to come in and out of his office freely whenever we desired, but that he obsolutely objected to police surveillance; and that if we attempted to station men in his office he would eject them bodily, and that they would have to "lick" him first before he would permit them to remain; that before he would grant such permission it would have to be decided by the highest court in the land, and emphasized the fact by pounding on the table with his fist.

I then presented the list given Mr. Weis and informed him that Mr. Weis had stated that the papers covered thereby were not in the files and asked where they were. He stated that files Nos. 78156 and 73838 were missing and he had no record of their disposition. Being asked if they were destroyed he said that they had not been. As to No. 62590 he said there never had been a file of that number; that it was a number which our "spies" had obtained from over the shoulder of the file clerk and that we had made a mistake in the number.

I then told him that I desired to verify his statement that this number had never been assigned to any file of papers, and he said it was impossible to do so; that I would have to take his word for it. I told him that I would prefer to see his numerical record covering the correspondence files, to see evidence that the number was skipped and had not been assigned. He stated that he maintained no permanent record of that character; that the information was kept by the file clerk on a memorandum sheet of paper, and as a number was used he checked it off, and in this manner the numerical order was maintained; and that after a sheet was filled the paper on which it was written was destroyed. Turning to Mr. Weis he asked if that was not the manner in which it was handled, and Mr. Weis replied it was. I then asked to see the file clerk's memorandum slip from which he would obtain the number next to be assigned to a new correspondence file. Mr. Mapother directed Mr. Weis to take me out and show me the file clerk's memorandum. He did so, and the file clerk produced a stenographer's note book (Form 197, Louisville & Nashville Railroad) labeled, "From 88410 to 92229." The book was filled with parallel columns of numbers running in consecutive order one way of the book, commencing with No. 84410 and closing with No. 92229. The book had then been reversed and a series started using the other side of the pages running from No. 92230 and indicating that the last number used was 93301. I then asked where the record was prior thereto, and Mr. Weis replied that I had been told that they have been destroyed. I asked him if he admitted, then, that the prior record of numbers used had been destroyed, and he said yes. It is considered that this is a willful destruction of records, as it is only from this record that it can be determined whether a file is missing or a number skipped.

Just before leaving Mr. Mapother's private office to inspect the previously mentioned record of file numbers, Mr. Weis presented the list of names which I had given him to Mr. Mapother, and stated that I had requested that passes be issued to the gentlemen named thereon in order that they might be allowed to enter the building after office hours. Mr. Mapother replied, "They won't get them"; that they would not be allowed entrance to the building after office hours.

Mr. WILL H. CARLETON,
Examiner Interstate Commerce Commission,
P. O. Box 653, Louisville, Ky.

DEAR SIR: The memorandum of Mopather refusing you generally the files and records prior to 1906 should not deter you from making request for any records that are relevant to your investigation, especially in the investigation of the general accounts. Request should be made on the proper official for the documents needed and a proper memorandum recorded for our future information in case we are compelled to show why the details prior to 1906 were necessary.

Please give this information to Mr. Keene and instruct him that my telegram instructing both yourself and him to wire the commissioner direct any relevant information regarding refusal of files had reference to Commissioner Harlan and not Commissioner Meyer.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. FRED W. SWENEY,
Chief Examiner of Accounts,
Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: For the information of Commissioner Harlan:

I inclose copy of a letter written yesterday by Examiner Keene to Examiner Carleton respecting the situation at Nashville, which would indicate that there is no disposition on the part of the carrier to deny or evade inspection of its records, and that there has been some carelessness in destroying records up to December, 1906.

However, late this morning I received the following telegram, which would seem to indicate that the carrier has since receded from its former stand:

"Demand for indices and general access to correspondence files of president, vice president, and general manager declined by president of carrier on advice legal department. Advise."

To this I wired Keene reply as follows:

"Am writing you regarding telegram concerning indices and general correspondence files. Ascertain whether we have access accounting and other files prior 1906. Ask carrier defer destruction records until after our investigation."

A copy of my letter written to-day to Mr. Keene is inclosed.

All of the above transpired previous to the time of my receiving from Keene a message advising the desires of Senator LEA, and concerning which I to-day wired you.

Yours, very truly,

WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge.

Mr. HENRY C. KEENE,
Examiner, Interstate Commerce Commission,
Hotel Savoy, Nashville, Tenn.

DEAR SIR: I wired you to-day:

"Am writing you regarding telegram concerning indices and general correspondence files. Ascertain whether we have access accounting and other files prior 1906. Ask carrier defer destruction records until after our investigation."

I wish you would take every opportunity to ask for files of correspondence relevant to our investigation. If you can not get the indices, ask for every file that your attention is drawn to. Make every effort to get into the file room without infraction of any laws and secure lists of files, which you will demand for inspection. Make a record of all demands for files for future reference.

I have taken the matter up with the Washington office, and you will probably hear from that source about the matter later. In the mean time we must gather all the evidence we can of either the destruction, removal, or stripping of records, as well as the refusal of records which are necessary for this investigation. In case of a Senate inquiry, we will have to show that the records which we demanded were necessary or may be necessary for the success of this investigation.

Yours, very truly,

WALTER V. WILSON,
Examiner in Charge.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 5, 1914.

Mr. WILL H. CARLETON,
P. O. box 653, Louisville, Ky.

DEAR SIR: Yesterday morning I called on Senator LUKE LEA, at his office, and was presented to a Mr. Price, an employee of the carrier, from whom the information in respect to the destroyed records was received. Mr. Price stated to me that a great many records had been and were being destroyed by order of the comptroller, the records being taken from the offices of the assistant comptroller and the auditor of disbursements. He informed me where the records were being burned, and I made a personal visit to the furnace, but found that only vouchers of dates 1865 to December, 1906, inclusive, with attachments, were being cremated. It is, of course, proper for vouchers of those dates to be destroyed, provided they do not cover expenditures for construction. The segregation of the vouchers for construction, being made to assure their not being destroyed, was being done very carelessly yesterday by a number of boys, and no effort was made to retain vouchers covering the purchase of rail, ties, and material used in new buildings. I took the matter up of having a more careful inspection made, and assurance was given me that this would be done.

I made an engagement with Mr. Price at my hotel, so that I might secure more definite information with respect to the records destroyed, with dates. However, he did not keep the engagement; and when I later met him on the street he stated that he thought he had talked enough. He was very guarded in his conversations at that time, evidently fearing that he would lose his position.

On request I was furnished with all the indices, files, and records covering the issuance of passes during the year 1913. The records for year 1912 are open to our inspection and are seemingly intact, but not in as good a condition as those of the subsequent year. The records for 1911 were not fully kept, but those on hand are open for our inspection.

So far I have noted no disposition on the part of the carrier to deny or evade the inspection of its records.

I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, just to hand, the instructions contained in which are understood.

Yours, very truly,

HENRY C. KEENE, Examiner.

THE HERMITAGE HOTEL,

Hon. B. H. MEYER,
Commissioner, Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your telegram of this date, instructing me to make written memoranda of all details like those mentioned in my special-delivery letter. I have been following the practice of dictating memoranda, dating and signing them, covering all unusual occurrences as they come to my notice.

In accordance with your telegram of February 5 I met Solicitor Farrell yesterday evening and explained to him the conditions here. He did not consider that the evidence was sufficient to ask for a writ of injunction, but instead instituted the necessary mandamus proceedings to enable us to gain access to the accounts, records, and memoranda of the carrier, including correspondence. I understand that Solicitor Farrell will fully inform the commission in regard to the details.

There has been no change in the attitude of the carrier since my letter of February 5, and no unusual conditions have been observed.

I have just received your telegram instructing me to note names of railway employees who seem to destroy or abstract records. Your instructions will be observed.

Yours, very respectfully,

WILL H. CARLETON, Examiner.

THE HERMITAGE HOTEL,
Louisville, Ky., February 7, 1914.

Mr. FRED W. SWENEY,
Chief Examiner of Accounts,
Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge receipt of Mr. Dakin's telegram of even date, advising that the commissioner instructs that I keep your office advised by mail daily, if possible, of the progress and developments in the investigation here.

In accordance with Commissioner Meyer's telegram of February 5, I met Solicitor Farrell at the Seelbach Hotel about 7 o'clock last evening, Mr. Lawrence accompanying me at the request of Mr. Farrell. I explained to him the circumstances and incidents which had occurred. He stated that he did not consider that, in the absence of any further evidence that records were being destroyed, circumstances would warrant the application for a writ of injunction, as he was confident the judge would not consider it.

About 8 o'clock we met the United States district attorney, George Du Relle, by appointment, in his office in the Federal Building, where he and Solicitor Farrell prepared the rough draft of the petition for a writ of mandamus for the purpose of enabling us to have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including correspondence, of the carrier, both prior and subsequent to August 28, 1906. This morning the petition was formally executed and filed, and a United States marshal instructed to serve the notice upon Mr. Milton H. Smith, president of the L. & N.

Solicitor Farrell will doubtless communicate to the commission all the information in relation to the legal proceedings. He left for Nashville on the 3 o'clock train, and I advised Mr. Keene by wire to meet him at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

So far we have not observed any evidence indicating that the carrier was destroying any of its records. The only evidence that we have is that the clerks are working on the executive department's correspondence files, and the fact that they had placed several of the files in a valise, indicating that they intended to at least remove them from the file room, if not from the office. The files so found, they being refused us until after they had been looked over by Mr. Mapother, were turned over to us the first thing the next morning.

I do not understand from Mr. Dakin's telegram that the commissioner desires daily advice of the amount and nature of the work accomplished, but merely a report in relation to records and files which we are denied, and of any changes in the attitude of the carrier or any new developments.

Yours, very truly,

WILL H. CARLETON, Examiner.

In view, however, of the fact that the matter has now been taken into the courts, where each side to the controversy will stand upon its legal rights, this permission is withdrawn and you are hereby notified that we will not allow you to examine this correspondence any further, except so much thereof as relates to the issuing of passes on and after January 1, 1911.

Yours, truly,

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that Senate joint resolution No. 1, being Calendar No. 52, be laid before the Senate. Several Senators have indicated a desire to address the Senate on the joint resolution. Of course I do not purpose to ask for a vote at this time, but merely that the joint resolution may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is the first business on the calendar. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the joint resolution, but I do not wish to be limited under the five-minute rule, because my remarks will take a longer time. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to its discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed with the discussion of Senate joint resolution No. 1, notwithstanding the rule limiting debate to five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, there can be no sound argument advanced against the right of suffrage for women. Woman has the same natural right to the exercise of the ballot as man. When government was largely the enforcement of military authority, there was reason for such function being exercised by man, but that period of the world's history has passed. Intellect and conscience directing the administration of civic affairs are the requisites now for good government. Taxation without representation is the principle against which our ancestors protested. That protest resulted in the establishment of this Republic.

No one would advocate exempting property from taxation because it was owned by a woman, yet the laws in many of our States deprive women of any voice in determining the amount of the tax that is levied upon their property or how it should be collected. The laws compel women to pay the tax, but give them no voice in determining how much it shall be or for what purpose it shall be expended. Such a policy is in conflict with the very fundamental principles upon which every free government is based. Who could have a greater interest in the schools of the country than have our women? Yet in many of the States they are given no voice in their management.

No one can be more interested or more vitally concerned in the moral life and character of the communities in which they live than are the women of those communities, yet they are in many of the States denied a voice in determining what shall be the character of the laws governing such communities or the methods of their administration or enforcement.

There are few who deny that woman has a right to the ballot, though many deny the expediency of her exercising such function. However, I have never heard an argument made against woman suffrage that appears to me to appeal to the judgment of an unbiased and unprejudiced mind. There are those men who have such an egotistical view of the superiority of their own sex that they pretend to believe that man only is mentally fit to exercise the functions of government. These men think that they, and their sex, are intellectually superior to women, yet, if such men ever went through a school or a college attended by the two sexes, I predict that the records of that school, wherever it may be, will disclose that there were female students superior in every line of study to these self-constituted censors of human intelligence. There is not a Senator in this body who must not admit that in his school life he was excelled in many lines of intellectual efforts by female students. The argument that women are not intellectually capable of making intelligent citizens is without foundation, and will not be urged upon this floor.

On moral questions, and government relates to moral questions as well as economic problems, women are far the superior of men. Their sense of natural justice is more acute and they instinctively resent moral wrong. As a whole, they are on the right side of every moral controversy in every community far more frequently than are the men. Indeed, the progress of the human race is due in a great measure to their superior moral sensibilities.

The women of my State for more than 40 years have enjoyed the right of suffrage in matters relating to the public schools. One of the earliest and most pleasing recollections that I have of school elections was in attending the "school meeting" in the country district where I lived, back in the seventies. There in the schoolhouse, gathered together, were the women and men of the district in a public town meeting, discussing and voting upon all questions relating to the schools; they decided upon the amount of tax levy for their support, and elected the managing board of education. The conduct of this meeting was as sensible and decorous as the most critical could desire. Indeed, it was the most creditable political meeting held in the community.

Years afterwards women were given the privilege of participating in all our municipal elections, and for more than 20 years in Kansas the women have voted in the election for mayors, councilmen, and all municipal officers. Their influence has been the best. The towns and cities of Kansas have been far better governed than they would have been without the elevating influence of the female voters. They have given a moral tone to our municipalities that nothing else could have done. There never has been organized among men cleaner and better local governments than we have in the State of Kansas, and the good women of our State have contributed largely to the excellent administration of our laws. It is a pleasure for me upon this occasion to pay them this tribute which they so richly deserve.

When we hold our city elections husbands may accompany their wives and daughters to the polls, or the women may go alone without the slightest embarrassment. The election places are as orderly and respectable, and as free from anything offensive to the most refined woman, as the place of business of any mercantile establishment in the community. It has been a pleasure for me frequently to accompany my wife to the polls, where we both cast our ballots, and never has there been, upon any occasion, anything causing the slightest embarrassment. So that the argument that politics will degrade woman is utterly without foundation, because when women participate the degrading features, if there are any, that prevail about the booths or voting places will disappear.

After 20 years of effort the women of Kansas at last have secured equal suffrage with the men and hereafter will participate in all of our elections. I know that the same good influence which they have exercised in our municipal affairs will be extended to this larger field of political activity.

I shall most earnestly support this resolution, because I believe its enactment will be for the best interests of my country. The consideration of this amendment has been interesting and useful from an educational point of view, because the more that woman suffrage is discussed and the better its operation is understood the more it will commend itself to the judgment of right-thinking men.

Its consideration has also brought to the attention of the country some interesting characteristics of our Chief Executive and in this respect it has also been educational. Our President was called upon in the early part of December by a delegation of ladies, headed by Dr. Anna Shaw, one of the strong, forceful women of America, and they sought the powerful influence of the President in behalf of their cause. They represented millions of the best women of America and were pleading for the cause of justice for their sex. This delegation of patriotic women were as intensely interested in the welfare of their country as any body of men could possibly be. They realized the powerful influence of the President and sought his aid; they asked his help for their great cause, in which many millions of the best women and men of America are deeply interested. To their earnest appeal the President made the following reply:

I want you ladies, if possible, if I can make it clear to you, to realize just what my present position is. Whenever I walk abroad I realize that I am not a free man; that I am under arrest. I am so carefully and admirably guarded that I have not even the privilege of walking the streets. That is, as it were, typical of my present transference from being an individual with his mind on any and every subject to being an official of a great government, and incidentally, or so it falls out under our system of government, the spokesman of a party.

I set myself this very strict rule when I was governor of New Jersey and have followed it as President—that I am not at liberty to urge upon Congress in messages policies which have not had the organic consideration of those for whom I am spokesman.

In other words, I have not yet presented any legislature my private views on the subject, and I never shall, because I conceive that to be part of the whole process of government, that I shall be spokesman for somebody, not myself.

I am an individual; when I am spokesman of an organic body I am a representative. For that reason, you see, I am by my own principles shut out, in the language of the street, from "starting anything." I have to confine myself to those things which have been embodied as promises to the people at an election. That is the strict rule I set for myself.

* * * * * * *

When my private opinion is asked by those who are cooperating with me I am glad to give it, but I am not at liberty until I speak for somebody besides myself to urge legislation upon Congress.

The ladies were very much impressed, as well as depressed, by the party shackles with which our President seemed to be bound hand, foot, and tongue. The platform, politically speaking, to him was sacred. When he spoke, he spoke according to its commands. He said:

I conceive that to be part of the whole process of government, that I shall be spokesman for somebody, not myself.

And again—

I have to confine myself to those things which have been embodied as promises to the people at an election. That is the strict rule I set for myself.

Then, to give more emphasis to this profound and commanding obligation to the party platform, he elaborated as follows:

When my private opinion is asked by those who are cooperating with me, I am glad to give it, but I am not at liberty until I speak for somebody besides myself to urge legislation upon Congress.

After receiving this remarkable address from the Chief Executive, these good women went away sore in spirit and sick at heart. They had read of the fine courage of our President and his manly independence; they had not expected to find such abject servitude to party commands. So they went away, some in sadness and sorrow; others possibly with some symptoms of doubt and irritation. This was December 8 last.

If the platform had declared for suffrage, of course the President would have been bound by it and felt it his duty to force through Congress a measure embodying such declaration in the laws of the country, even if it had taken an extra session of Congress all summer to have accomplished the feat. If it had declared against suffrage, of course he would have seen that no such resolution was given consideration by either branch of Congress. But since it declared neither way, he was not even at liberty to express a private opinion as to its wisdom and desirability.

But in the evolution of human affairs, another question came before the Chief Executive for his consideration. This subject was not brought before him by the good women of the country but by a representative of the English Government, whose action had been instigated by the American and Canadian transcontinental railroads and British shipping interests. The question was in regard to the payment of tolls by ships passing through the Panama Canal, engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. Whatever toll charges are imposed by the canal on the traffic between the southern, eastern, and western coasts of the United States will be added to the freight rates which the ships will have to charge and will, therefore, increase their rates and enable the transcontinental railroads of the United States and Canada to charge just that much more for their traffic, which is carried on in competition with the ships. So these gigantic corporations, therefore, are intensely interested in this tolls question. Upon this subject the Democratic platform, which is the law that prescribes the official and mental operations and activities of Mr. Wilson, so he says, contains the following declaration:

We favor the exemption from toll of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the canal.

Upon that platform Mr. Wilson stood and was elected. He received most of the votes from those sections of the country vitally interested in the tolls question. The wisdom of such a policy was never questioned during the campaign. The Democratic House of Representatives and a large majority of the Democrats in the Senate voted in harmony with the declarations of the platform. Yet, in the face of this party declaration and the statement of Mr. Wilson to the ladies as to its binding effect upon him, in a communication addressed by the President to Mr. Marbury, of Baltimore, dated February 5, 1914, we find the following:

I have your letter of January 30 * * *. With regard to the question of canal tolls, my opinion is very clear. The exemption constitutes a very mistaken policy from every point of view. It is economically unjust; as a matter of fact, it benefits for the present, at any rate, only a monopoly; and it seems to me in clear violation of the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. There is, of course, much honest difference of opinion as to the last point, as there is, no doubt, as to the others; but it is at least debatable, and if the promises we make in such matters are debatable I for one do not care to debate them. I think the country would prefer to let no question arise as to its whole-hearted purpose to redeem its promises in the light of any reasonable construction of them rather than debate a point of honor.

So it appears in matters in which the Canadian and American transcontinental railroads and the English Government are concerned that the binding effect of the Democratic national platform is not so potent with Mr. Wilson as it was when the good women of the country were appealing to him in behalf of right and justice for their sex. When they asked to be given a chance to protect their homes from vice and to be accorded a wider opportunity for usefulness in serving their country and promoting the welfare of its people, he could express no opinion as to the desirability of such legislation. To use his language, "I conceive that to be part of the whole process of government, that I shall be spokesman for somebody, not myself," and that "I have to confine myself to those things which have been embodied as promises to the people at an election. That is the strict rule I set for myself." This was his answer to the ladies. But when the powerful railroad influences, behind the mask of "English interests," got into action this strict rule, which he set for himself, disappeared, and he declared that "the exemption constitutes a very mistaken policy from every point of view." When the women asked a word from him in behalf of suffrage, he said that he had to confine himself "to those things which have been embodied as promises to the people at an election." When the English interests appealed to him, he forgot the promises made "to the people at an election" and was very willing to speak for somebody besides himself. It is true that we have expended about four hundred millions of our own money in constructing this canal on our own territory, and that the Democratic House of Representatives, a Republican Senate by an overwhelming majority, Mr. Taft, then President of the United States, and the Democratic national convention all thought we had a perfect right to permit our own ships engaged in our domestic commerce to go through free of tolls, if we saw fit to do so. But England claims that this must not be done without her consent, though her ships can not engage in our domestic commerce, and she has not directly or indirectly invested a dollar in the construction of the canal. The greed of the railroads and the audacious claims of Great Britain seem far more potent with our President than the appeal of the womanhood of the Nation.

So, I say, the consideration of this amendment has been educational in more ways than one. It has given us a line upon some of the peculiar and interesting characteristics of our Chief Executive that may be exceedingly useful to the country in the future.

For instance, the Democratic platform contains this declaration:

> We favor a single presidential term * * * and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

At the proper time will the President interpret this plank in harmony with his position as to suffrage or as to canal tolls?

I believe it was the peerless Democratic leader, the Hon. William Jennings Bryan, who recently declared that—

> A man who violates a party platform is a criminal worse than the man who embezzles money.

In the meantime we shall with interest watch the conflict that now appears to be going on between party promises and evasive political strategy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, for my part, I wish the President would disregard a good many more of the provisions of the Democratic Party platform than he seems inclined to do.

I wish to say a few words upon this resolution, and as I shall probably occupy more than 5 minutes—perhaps 10 or 15—I should like the permission of the Senate to proceed until I have finished.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The five-minute rule has been suspended.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not underestimate the value of tradition, to which we are indebted for a good deal of wisdom; but since tradition rides in an omnibus which carries all sorts of passengers from one generation to another and not in a golden chariot whose seats are reserved exclusively for the righteous, it has been responsible for the perpetuation of a good deal of foolishness as well. On the whole I entertain a profound regard for notions which have long persisted, because, having passed the scrutiny and survived the buffetings of time, they are more likely to be right than wrong, and yet error has a pernicious habit of sometimes clothing itself in such seemly garb that it is passed along without question from age to age until some doubting hand strips off the disguise and exposes the deception. One of these respectably clothed traditions which we are just now engaged in overhauling is that which teaches that women are either too good or too bad or too weak or too busy in the kitchen to participate in the tribal councils.

Let us inquire by way of cross-examination. If the ballot on the whole elevates man, what particular element of weakness in the character of woman will enable the ballot to pull her down? Have women in the aggregate less native intelligence than men? Have they less desire for social and governmental righteousness? Are they less patriotic? Are they less interested in the common welfare? Have they less at stake? If not, wherein lies the superiority of the male portion of the population? In one respect only is there common agreement as to the inferior condition of womankind, and that is in the matter of physical strength. I am not sure but that in this element of inferiority lies the explanation of the fact that for thousands of years women were not accorded an equality of legal status, an injustice which in civilized communities has been or is in process of being consigned to the limbo of discredited superstitions, and I suspect that it is the survival of a rudimentary bias reaching back for its primal origin to this ancient condition which accounts for the persistence of the obsession which leads so many worthy people to deny her equality of political status in this day of broadened vision. We have many examples of such survivals long after the decay of the root from which they grew. Intelligent men have ceased to believe in the malign influence of sorcery and witchcraft—in spells—in the ill luck inseparably associated with the possession of certain inanimate objects which have received the sinister attentions of the devil—in the malevolence of black cats and cross-eyed gentlemen of color—but a good many of them continue to entertain suspicions respecting the number 13, in spite of its harmless character, and derive more or less mental discomfort from the initiation of any enterprise on Friday, although Friday is in truth as benign a day as any in the calendar. And so in the matter of our objection to woman suffrage are we quite sure that what we regard as twentieth-century wisdom is not the fag end of a medieval superstition?

We are told that if women are given the ballot the household will suffer; that woman's place is the home. The obvious retort is that if the workshop, and the farm, and the mine, and the office, and the countingroom continue in operation, notwithstanding the responsibility which now rests upon the male voter, the household may survive even if the women of the country study politics and take a few minutes off on election day to vote.

It is urged that giving the ballot to woman will destroy her charm and femininity; that she will develop unattractive masculine traits. These are new words set to a very old tune. The same thing was urged against the new woman a hundred years ago when she demanded an equal opportunity for education. She was told that that was exclusively masculine business and solemnly warned to return to her spinning wheel at the peril of losing her womanly sweetness, but girls to-day go to school with their brothers and the brothers of other girls, and young women to-day go to college in brazen disregard of ancient conventionalities, and they are better wives and better mothers and better women and better citizens not in spite of it but in consequence of it. The objection is in a class with the demand for the preservation of the sidesaddle, lest we give verification to the suspicion that the normal tendency of humanity is to accumulate legs in pairs quite irrespective of the accident of sex.

Some people are fearful that if we enfranchise the women the bad women will vote and the good women will refrain from voting. But if the right to vote carries with it the correlative duty to exercise the right in the case of women, as it is supposed to do in the case of men, there is no good reason to expect that good women will shirk in greater proportion than good men do, for women on the average are quite as conscientious as men in faithfully discharging their responsibilities. However that may be, if we are justified in allowing men to vote irrespective of good or bad character, because of our inability to separate them in terms of legislation, how can we justify withholding a similar right from women because of a like unfortunate division among them of good and bad?

Again, it is said by some that the result would simply be to double the vote without changing the result; that the women would generally vote as their husbands do. And it is said by others that it will develop unfortunate antagonism between husband and wife over political differences. I think generally, though not always, in those States which have adopted equal suffrage, that husband and wife vote the same ticket just as generally, though not always, they attend the same church. There is nothing remarkable or sinister in this any more than there is in the fact that generally, though not always, the male members of the same family agree in their political affiliations. There are, it is true, occasional differences of opinion between husband and wife, but I have not observed that it is followed by anything more serious than generally follows from the occasional differences about other matters or from similar differences among brothers and sisters or between mother and son.

I have no intention of entering upon any affirmative argument in justification of woman suffrage. Indeed, to my own mind, the most convincing argument for the political enfranchisement of women is the absence of any really persuasive argument against it. If it be right to extend the voting privilege to all sorts and conditions of men, I am not quite able to see the justice of denying the same right to all sorts and conditions of women. If we have extended the privilege too broadly in the case of men and wisdom demands that we should eliminate the unfit, the thriftless, and the illiterate, that is a good reason for denying the privilege to these classes of both sexes. It is no reason for denying it to the women who are fit and capable. In other words, the line which should separate the voters from the nonvoters is one of character and not one of sex.

In my view of the matter it is not important to consider whether woman suffrage will result in a betterment of conditions. It is enough for me to be convinced that conditions will certainly be no worse. I do not put my support on the ground of expediency or on the theory that society will be greatly or at all or immediately or ever benefited by the change. I suspect that the human nature of men and women in the aggregate does not materially differ. I would not, therefore, expect the political millennium to be noticeably hastened by the change. Things would probably go on pretty much as they do now. We would continue to move forward more or less slowly, more or less painfully, sometimes slipping backward, as we do now, sometimes falling as we now do, but in the end recovering ourselves, picking ourselves up and going on afresh, and on the whole, I hope, toward wiser and better things.

I give my assent to woman suffrage because, as the matter appeals to me, there is no justification for denying to half our citizens the right to participate in the operations of a government which is as much their government as it is ours upon the sole ground that they happen to be born women instead of men.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think that no one in public life has had a stronger desire to give the right of suffrage to women than myself. I favor giving them this right from every standpoint of equity and justice. But I was surprised this morning to hear the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] use the question of woman suffrage to assail the President of the United States.

There has not been in that great executive chair a man in the history of this country who has more honored it, who has been more serviceable, or who has been more appreciated by the people of the United States. That the Senator from Kansas should attempt to place him in the light of being an instrument of the Canadian railroads, to put him in the attitude of abject servility to a mere party call, and to put him in the attitude of equivocation and injustice toward the women of the country does the Senator from Kansas but little credit.

Party platforms ought to be binding upon those who represent a party under our present method of conducting government. Yet every man knows that there will creep into a platform some concrete plank, some detailed suggestion, which has not been fully digested by the members of a party, and which I do not think, in a true and high sense, should be regarded as necessarily conclusive of party policy.

We all know how these conventions are conducted. There is not a man on this floor who does not understand how the committee on resolutions is framed, who does not understand how a few select spirits, active, ingenious, strenuous, lay their hands upon a platform and undertake to voice the sentiment of 45,000,000 people, and they probably do the very best they can.

In so far as the question has been digested by the members of a party, in so far as a plank represents fairly and justly the sentiments of a majority of the members of a party, it deserves to be recognized. But in so far as the question of Panama tolls is concerned, I say frankly that that question, to the best of my belief, has not been passed on by the national Democracy, although discussed favorably in some few States. I say that that plank put in the Baltimore platform is not necessarily binding on the conscience of every Democrat, because it does not in truth really represent the sober, deliberate judgment of the majority of the members of the Democratic Party, but perhaps rather represents the ingenious placing in the platform of the opinion of some excellent gentlemen who found themselves in a position to voice what they sincerely thought was the sentiment of the party. Then, when it passes the subcommittee and in the rush and roar of the convention is not objected to by the committee on resolutions, and the entire platform passes with a huge shout by the convention, it goes into our literature and becomes a plank that may attract or repel many, but which is not observed by millions who look to the spirit of the platform and the great character of the presidential candidate and vote accordingly, with no conception of binding him hard and fast to every item in the platform, much less to bind him or the party itself against new evidence developed, new facts disclosed, or against his conscientious interpretation of foreign treaties or of our national standing with the great nations of the world, or to bind Senators against their conscientious belief of what is constitutional and of what is best for the general welfare.

The Senator from Kansas, who always seems to be strongly in favor of privilege, is quite anxious to have it appear that the President of the United States is serving privilege, that he is serving the interests of the transcontinental railroads, and particularly of the transcontinental railroads of Canada, and that he listens with peculiar favor to the demand of England with regard to excusing our coastwise vessels from paying tolls through the Panama Canal. I say for myself, as a Member of this body, that I am strongly opposed to free tolls through the Panama Canal. I am opposed to it because it is fundamentally unjust to the taxpayers of the United States. I am opposed to it because I do not believe one dollar of privilege granted to the coastwise vessels plying around the American coast will ever find its way into the pockets of the consumers of this country. Whatever the maritime coastwise monopolies do gain they will pocket and use for themselves.

I think, as a matter of common sense and as a matter of common justice, when the American people have taxed themselves to the extent of $400,000,000 to build the Panama Canal, the vessels that take advantage of it, which go through it, which use that gigantic investment for their private profit, should pay at least enough to maintain that great international highway, and that no vessel should have the right to use that investment of the people of the United States without a measureable contribution to the maintenance of the canal, if not to the payment of some degree of interest upon the investment itself.

We have a national policy to observe, of course, because the building of the canal is intended principally to promote our commerce and protect our shores on both oceans. We can not forget that. Therefore it may be necessary, in order to promote commerce through that canal, to put a very low measure of toll on vessels passing through from one ocean to the other.

Regardless, however, of the treaty between the United States and England, I am fairly of the opinion that every vessel which passes through that canal should pay its proportionate part of the cost of maintenance by a system of tolls that shall be uniform upon all the nations of the world.

I regret that the Senator from Kansas should take occasion in discussing woman suffrage to drag in these other questions in order to assail the President of the United States.

The man who is nominated by a great political party, who is elected by a great political party, does owe an obligation to that party.

When we consider the question of woman suffrage we find that many Democrats are opposed to it. We find that many Democrats are in favor of it. I think it is easily true that far more Democrats favor it than Republicans favor it. But that is immaterial. A Republican President has no right to bind the Republican Party in favor of woman suffrage, because there are many Republicans who are opposed to it. A man elected to the Presidency by the Democratic Party has no right to bind the Democratic Party to woman suffrage.

The Democratic Party was not constructed upon that plan. Democrats are not cohered by a common belief in woman suffrage. The woman suffrage party is a different organization, bound together by their judgment as to the question of woman suffrage. I am for woman suffrage. I have made speech after speech in favor of it, and I favor it not so much because of granting the privilege to women as because of its importance, in my opinion, to the welfare of men.

But the Senator from Kansas uses this question of debating woman suffrage to drag in the question of the Panama Canal, and then tries to put the President in the false attitude of an unfair evasion in replying to the women. The answer quoted by the Senator from Kansas is a just, a fair, and an honorable answer. The President had no right, as the head of the party, to commit the Democracy on this question. He has a right, as the titular leader, to express his private opinion on this question when he discusses it with members of his party or with others, but when he addresses a communication to the Congress of the United States insisting upon legislation he will do so as the leader elected by the organized Democratic Party. Therefore he is bound to confine himself to those things which will meet the general acquiescence of his Democratic supporters. But in a matter of the Panama Canal, of this serious importance to the Nation, where he is charged by the Constitution with expressing himself upon a matter which affects our relations with a foreign nation so vitally, which affects our commercial affairs, he is justified in expressing himself, and is compelled to express himself, with regard to it as his conscience and judgment may guide him in the light of the latest evidence upon this subject.

I regret to see that the Senator from Kansas should go out of his way to attack the President. I want to say that, in my judgment, no Senator can afford to assail the present occupant of the White House on any such flimsy, unjust charge and expect to strengthen himself in his own State by that assault.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, no one regrets more than I the fact that the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has united with a brief discussion of the woman-suffrage question a criticism of the President for his views in reference to the Panama Canal.

I am frank to say, however, that I disagree with the views expressed by the President of the United States. I do not attribute to him, as does the Senator from Kansas, any disposition to stand in with the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. or with other transcontinental railway companies. I simply believe that the President stands in the attitude that some of the Senators on this side of the Chamber stand in to-day, entertaining an honest difference of opinion with reference to the propriety of having enacted the so-called Panama Canal act.

As to being a Democratic doctrine, Mr. President, if platforms mean anything, if they are intended to stand on rather than to get in on, then this declaration of free tolls for coastwise vessels is a Democratic doctrine. It was declared for in the Democratic platform in Baltimore. There is no question about that. If it does not bind the Democratic Party, Mr. President, there is not a single declaration in it that does bind the party. Not only that, but if the expression of opinion by Democrats on the floor of the Senate and on the floor of the House of Representatives means anything at all, it means that they have indorsed this declaration in the platform of the Democratic Party, because clearly all the Democrats in the Senate, and I think probably a majority of the Democrats in the House, voted for this clause of the Panama Canal act.

I may say, further, that in the campaign which followed that declaration in the platform at Baltimore Democrats went over the country and declared in favor of it, and it is impossible to know how many votes were influenced by such declarations.

Take it in my own State, if you please. It was made an issue there, and it was discussed not only by myself but by other Democrats on the platform in Oregon and by the press, all taking the position that the salvation of the Pacific coast as well as the Atlantic coast generally demanded this legislation as a regulator of rates charged by transcontinental lines on all transcontinental freight.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that President Wilson himself discussed that plank in New Jersey before the day of election, and is it not true that he approved of that plank in the Democratic platform?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have been so informed. I did not hear him, but I have seen the speech in print, and I think possibly its substance is in the Democratic Campaign Textbook for 1912. I am not criticizing the President. He is entitled to his view. And I am frank to say if there was a plank in the platform which my conscience could not approve I would feel disposed to repudiate it just as the President has done the one under consideration. I say again, I am not criticizing the President. I am simply suggesting to my good friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] that that plank is a Democratic doctrine if any part of the platform is expressive of the views of the Democratic Party in this country.

Oregon is a strong Republican State, by majorities ranging from twenty-five to thirty-five thousand, and Oregon gave its entire electoral vote to the President of the United States in the last election. Who can say, Mr. President, that many of the voters of my State were not influenced by that declaration in the platform? I for one want to say that I do not propose to stultify myself in reference to this subject now nor at any time in the future. I do not propose to go back to my people and say to them that because the distinguished President of the United States happens to differ from me I am going to yield my convictions, my judgment, my conscience, to his view of this subject; and I say that in all kindness, not intending to criticize him at all in his attitude on the subject. I accord to him the same right that I claim for myself; and that is, not to approve the declaration in any platform unless I can do so conscientiously and as a Senator. I do not know how my friends on this side of the Chamber intend to square themselves with their constituents when they go back to them and say that they have been induced to change their attitude with reference to the Panama-tolls question—I do not mean to say that any of them are going to do so—but I, for one, am not going to do so, Mr. President.

Further than that, I am not going to let the delicacy of the diplomatic situation that has been from time to time appealed to influence my judgment. It seems to me that we ought to stand firm, not only with reference to our rights in regard to the Panama tolls question, but as to every other diplomatic question, and that it is not our province or our duty or our right, under the solemnity of our oaths, to yield to the demands of any power on earth. I would rather be a subject of a conquered nation, Mr. President, if you please, with honor, than to enjoy freedom and feel that I had sacrificed every sense of propriety and honor in my action upon any legislation that comes before Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection I wish to call the Senator's attention to the vote which was cast in the Senate on August 7, 1912.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to have the Senator read it into the RECORD. I have forgotten what it was.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] offered the following amendment:

On page 6, lines 13 and 14, to strike out the words:
"No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged exclusively in the coastwise trade of the United States."

The vote upon that amendment showed 11 yeas, 44 nays, and 39 not voting. In the list of 11 yeas not one Democratic name is found. For the information of the Senate I will read the names of those who voted "yea":

Brandegee, Burton, Crane, Fall, Gronna, Lodge, Nelson, Oliver, Penrose, Root, and Wetmore.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is about as I recollect the vote; and I do not believe it will be found that it will be essentially different when the time comes to vote on the question of the repeal of the free-tolls clause of the Panama Canal act. There is not any question but that every dollar that is remitted to American vessels engaged in the coastwise traffic will be a compelling factor in making the transcontinental railway lines reduce the freights for transcontinental traffic. It will be a freight regulator, if you please, Mr. President, and the American people look upon it in that light. Not only that, but the American people have a right to demand that that canal shall be treated as an American institution, built with American money, designed by American ingenuity, and now to be maintained at an expense to the American people of about $16,000,000 per annum out of the Treasury of the United States. It is an institution which was not only constructed, as I have suggested, by American ingenuity and American energy and American money, but is an institution built on American soil; and the American people have just as much right to control it, without the violation of any treaty, as they have to operate the canals on the navigable waterways of this country without charging any toll.

If this policy of the Government, which has been recognized for a hundred years, of the maintenance of these canals and their use without the payment of tolls is to be reversed, then we are simply making this reversal at the demand, first, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co.—I know that that is denied—backed if you please, by the American transcontinental railway systems. We know, Mr. President, that it is a matter of history that the railway companies of this country, and particularly the transcontinental railway companies, prevented the construction of the Panama Canal for years; and when the question of granting coastwise vessels freedom from tolls was under discussion here in the Senate, those of us who knew who the lobbyists of the railway companies were could look up in any of the galleries and recognize the faces of Mr. Schwerin and other men who were lobbying for the railway companies here and opposing this part of the Panama Canal act, just as they had opposed in the past every measure that looked to the construction of such a canal. Having failed to defeat the building of the canal, having failed in thwarting legislation, they now invade the field of diplomacy.

Mr. President, I say—and I feel authorized in saying it here and I think it proper to say it here—that at the time the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was adopted and at the time the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which superseded it, was adopted, an entirely different situation, and entirely different condition existed in this country from the condition which existed when the Panama Canal was built; in other words, the subject which was then under consideration was the construction of a canal across foreign territory. Through the activity and energy, whether rightly or wrongly exerted, of President Roosevelt a 10-mile strip of territory was acquired by the United States across the Isthmus of Panama, and the canal was constructed on American territory. The question was discussed once before as to whether or not that strip is American territory. I say it is American territory to all intents and purposes, and the United States has the right to construct a canal over it and to maintain it and to use it just exactly as we see fit.

In all this I do not mean to criticize the views of the President; not at all. The President has a right to make this insistence, if he pleases; but, now, if we are going to yield to the demands of anybody with reference to the free-of-tolls clause in the Panama Canal act, where are we going to stop? Are we going to listen to an insistence which may be hereafter made by some foreign power and say that we will allow American railroad-owned ships to pass through this same canal? To prevent that is just as much a violation of the so-called treaty as any other condition that we have insisted on in the past. Are we going to dismantle our forts that are built for the protection of the Panama Canal? Their maintenance is just as much a violation of the treaty as is the exemption of American vessels from tolls. Are we going to say that our naval vessels can not be passed through the canal without the payment of tolls, or at all? Allowing that is just as much a violation of the treaty as this possibly can be.

Mr. President, I have been induced to make these remarks because I do not propose to be placed in the attitude of stultifying myself before the people of this country or before the people of my State. After having gone before them and discussed the situation from one end of the State to the other, I do not propose to come here and, at the behest of anybody, to take the back track on this proposition. For one, I will go down to defeat, if need be, rather than to take any such position as that before the American people and be a party to the violation of pledges that I have made to the people of Oregon and to the people of this entire country.

I hope I may not be misunderstood, Mr. President, when I say that I am not saying this in criticism of anybody, but I am saying it because I think it right to say it; my conscience suggests it, and my duty demands it. I accord to the President the same right, the same privilege, and I insist that it is his duty to maintain his view of the situation, if he feels disposed to do so. I have felt it to be my duty and, in accordance with the suggestions of my own conscience, to say to-day just exactly what I have said, without meaning to criticize the actions or to impugn the motives of anybody in this country, much less the President, for whom I have the highest regard, and in the patriotism of whose purposes I have the greatest confidence.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know of anyone who is a more ardent Republican than I am, or one who probably differs so radically with the President of the United States upon the great question of protection, which really divides the Republican Party from the Democratic Party; but I want to say right here, Mr. President, lest it might seem that silence on this side of the Chamber might give a semblance of agreement with the words of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], that I, for one, and as a Republican, repudiate his utterance that the President of the United States is the tool of any transcontinental railway or of any other interest in the world.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. However we may differ with the President of the United States upon any great question of policy of this Government, I believe he is honest, sincere, and a true patriot; and not only do I believe that the greater number of the Republicans on this side have confidence in his integrity, but I believe that the fact that his purpose is patriotic is generally conceded by the people of the United States, Republican and Democrat as well. It was lest we might seem to join the Senator in a criticism of the integrity of the President of the United States that I desired to speak, at least for myself; and in the sentiment I have expressed I believe that I have voiced the feelings of most of the Senators on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am through, Mr. President.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I challenge the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to point to a statement that I made impugning the integrity of the President of the United States. I quoted declarations of the President of the United States made to the ladies when they called upon him in behalf of the suffrage amendment and quoted declarations from the President of the United States in regard to canal tolls. I made the statement that the offer to repeal the toll-exemption clause was backed by the transcontinental railroads of the United States and Canada. That declaration has been made on this floor for more than two years; I have made it time and again in debate, and I make it now. I can read from the RECORD the declarations of distinguished Democrats, as well as distinguished Republicans, to the same effect. I do not impugn the motives of anybody; and if the President of the United States is placed in an embarrassing position it is not because of what I have said, but because of what he himself has said.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not believe that the President of the United States is in the least embarrassed, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] suggests, and I should not undertake to interfere in such a debate as we have been listening to here to-day were it not that the Senator seemed to take a view of the President's attitude in regard to the Panama tolls which I do not share. I listened to all the Senator from Kansas said, and he left with me the impression that, in his opinion, the influence of corporations, both foreign and domestic, had been very strong in determining the attitude of the President with reference to the repeal of what is known as the exemption clause in the Panama Canal act. Whoever else may have changed his mind, I do not think that the President has changed his mind on that question at all. My own impression is that he has held his present view for a long time. Of this I am certain: The President did some of us who are on the Committee on Foreign Relations the honor of consulting with us about this matter, and I am sure that in dealing with it he is guided entirely by what he thinks is for the honor and credit of the United States in our relations with foreign nations. I think he has no other object in view. I think he feels, unless I greatly misunderstand him, as some of the rest of us have felt, that the position we held not very many years ago in the way of prestige and standing among the nations of the world has been lost or greatly impaired. I think he feels that the time has come to retrace some of the steps that have been taken subsequently in late years. I think he has the conviction that in one way or another—and I am laying no blame now at anybody's door—the United States has fallen into an unfortunate and unhappy position, where she has incurred the active dislike of many nations and the distrust of many more, instead of the friendship and respect which she once possessed. The President does not like, in my judgment, to see the United States in the attitude of an outlaw among the nations. He feels that we should have all the prestige, all the influence which is our due and which we have ever had among the nations of the earth. He believes, I think, as I believe, that prestige and influence are not to be obtained by disregarding international obligations or by reversing policies long held by the United States simply to gratify some passing whim or some passion of the moment. I believe also that the President regards the foreign relations of the country as above party.

I do not hold a position in this Chamber which calls upon me or entitles me to be the President's defender, but I can not sit in silence, as a member of the opposition and of the minority, and hear what I consider an injustice done to the President of the United States, in whose hands rests the conduct of all our foreign relations, without making a protest against it simply in my capacity as an American citizen. I have always held very strongly the opinion that in the matter of foreign relations it is our duty always to stand by the President of the United States just so far as it is possible to do so without violating one's own convictions. I have always tried to follow that course in my public life, and therefore I shall not now consent to censure him because he has taken a certain view of our international duties in regard to toll exemption—a view which I think he has probably always held—or charge that he is doing something inconsistent and improper as a party leader which, I confess, seems to me absurd.

I am myself a pretty rigid Republican and party man. Yet I have known things which in some way crept into Republican platforms that I would not have voted for if they had been brought up here as the basis of legislation, because my conscience and my sense of duty would have forbidden it. Cases constantly arise where party conventions in their resolutions travel out of the line of their duty, which is simply to set forth general principles, and not undertake to regulate the details of legislation.

It is entirely within the province of the President, if he chooses, to say that in an act in which he can have no participation—for he does not sign a constitutional amendment—he does not feel justified in injecting a new article into the party creed. I see no inconsistency between his taking that position and saying at the same time that there is another paragraph in that platform to which in duty and in conscience he can not agree. If there were inconsistency, I do not see that that in the least affects the merits of the tolls question upon which the President has taken recently publicly such a decided stand.

I differ as widely as possible from the President of the United States on general political principles, but on the question of foreign relations, speaking, as I have already said, merely as an American citizen, I wanted to make my protest against an injustice being done, as I think has been done this morning, to the purposes and motives of the President of the United States. When he is dealing with foreign relations, in some respects of a most perilous and difficult character, if he says, on his high responsibility, to the Congress of the United States that a certain step in foreign relations is necessary to the good name and possibly to the security of the United States, that it is necessary in order to save the United States perhaps from a situation where serious loss or serious injury might be incurred—if he says all this on his high responsibility, I think it becomes the duty of all men who look upon foreign relations as I do not to try to block his path, but to give him such aid and assistance in our humble way as we are conscientiously able to give.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's last statement was a little broader than I care to accept. Am I incorrect in my understanding of the Senator's notion that the Senator would aid the President of the United States in carrying out a policy which the President thought was the best policy, or a necessary policy, but which the Senator from Massachusetts, from his own investigation, thought was not a good policy and was a dangerous policy if carried out?

Mr. LODGE. I certainly should not support the President in any policy which I believed to be wrong or which went against my conscience; but where I have no policy to substitute, and he is engaged in a difficult situation, I am ready at least not to throw obstacles in his way, and so far as I honestly and conscientiously can, I am going to give him my support.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I agree with the Senator's last statement, but further than that I decline to go.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to suggest that I would support any man whom I believed to be wrong, unpatriotic, or doing something which I thought an injury to the country; but I do say that on a question of foreign relations, where my desire is to support the Executive, if I do not feel that what he is trying to do is wrong, I will go just as far as I conscientiously can in giving him my support, whether he is of my party or of some other party.

I happened to be sitting in the Senate when a President of the United States of the Democratic Party made a declaration in regard to Venezuela which was thought by many persons to bring us to the verge of war with England. I did not happen to agree with the view that it brought us in danger of war, and I thought the President was entirely right in the attitude he took. I thought so then, and I think so now. He was widely and bitterly criticized at the time by many men who belonged to my own party; but I was unable to see my way, for party advantage, to opposing the President when I believed he was doing not only what he honestly thought was best, but that to which I could give conscientious support.

I am anxious to go as far as I can in supporting any President when he is dealing with a difficult and complicated foreign situation, because the great responsibility of initiating and shaping our foreign policy must rest with the Executive and can not rest anywhere else.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I can find no ground for criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts in the fact that he is supporting the President, either in regard to his attitude toward woman suffrage or in regard to his attitude toward canal tolls. The Senator from Massachusetts believes just as the President believes in regard to those matters, I understand.

I am not surprised that the Senator from Massachusetts should come to the defense of the President's attitude in regard to canal tolls, because he is one of the Senators who has opposed the exemption of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade from canal tolls and the inhibition against the use of the canal by railroad-owned ships. The Senator from Massachusetts has fought against those provisions from the beginning. In my opinion the repeal of those provisions would render the canal far less useful to the American people than it otherwise would be, and would continue the monopoly of transcontinental traffic by rail and by sea which has existed for 25 years.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. REED. I entered the Chamber after the Senator from Kansas had made the remarks which have occasioned, to a large extent, the debate of the last hour. I did hear the Senator from Kansas disclaim having charged the President with being in collusion with the transportation lines; but he added that if the President was in an unfortunate situation it was because he placed himself there by his own words or by his own conduct. Evidently the Senator then was referring to something he had previously said.

I wish to ask the Senator, for my information, to tell me what the words of the President were, or what the conduct of the President was, which placed him in this embarrassing position, and which led the Senator to make the remarks which came so near being a direct charge that they had been so understood by Senators.

Mr. BRISTOW. From the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] I do not know that the President is in an embarrassing position; but from the remarks that were made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] I was led to believe that he thought the President was in an embarrassing position.

To answer the question of the Senator from Missouri, however, I quoted from the President's address which he delivered to a delegation of ladies who called upon him and solicited his aid in behalf of the constitutional amendment for woman suffrage, which is pending before the Senate, and I also quoted his letter to Mr. Marbury, of Baltimore, in regard to the Panama Canal tolls controversy. In the one he said he could not speak for suffrage because the platform had not declared in favor of suffrage; in the other he said that the platform had declared, but he thought the platform had declared wrongly. My comments upon the two positions taken by the President were what led to the debate here this afternoon.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if that is all there was to the matter, I have nothing to say. I was interested in knowing whether somebody had discovered the President of the United States "opening his mouth and putting his foot in it," because I had the opinion that that was an accident which happened very much more frequently to the ordinary Senator than it did to the President of the United States, and I was interested in knowing whether he had made a foolish statement. I think the matter has dwindled to so small a point that I do not care to pursue it further.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am compelled to leave the Chamber, and I ask, out of order, to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the introduction of the bill out of order?

Mr. SMOOT. It is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules it is out of order, and it is the duty of the Chair——

Mr. CUMMINS. I assumed it was out of order as something else was before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Although out of order, it can be introduced by unanimous consent. Is there objection? If not, the bill will be read.

[The bill appears under its appropriate heading.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill and a joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I simply wish to call the attention of the presiding officer to the rule, not with the idea that he shall enforce the rule now, but so that in case of future reference to the RECORD it may appear that the attention of the Senate was at least called to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule on the subject.

The SECRETARY. The paragraph of Rule VII at the foot of page 9 reads as follows:

It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, the rule is satisfied. Of course it is not in order to interrupt the Senator from Kansas except with his consent. I now have it, and I ask to have the bill and joint resolution read and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Just for the RECORD I wish to say that it is not in order even with the Senator's consent. I shall not object any further, however. The rule has already been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the Chair is unable to do anything except not to permit the bills to be introduced; that is all.

Mr. REED. The Chair has just allowed a bill to be introduced by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware of the rule at that time. It was called to his attention afterwards.

Is there any objection? If not, the bills will be introduced and referred to the appropriate committees. The Secretary will read the titles of the bills.

[The bill and joint resolution appear under their appropriate heading.]

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. Before the Senator resumes his argument I wish to ask him a question. The Senator said awhile ago that he charged that the transcontinental railway lines were back of the effort to secure the repeal of the exemption from tolls of coastwise ships in the Panama Canal legislation. To what effort does he refer as being backed by the transcontinental railway lines—the effort which it is understood the President of the United States is making?

Mr. BRISTOW. Why, the Senator from Montana must know that the controversy which has been going on for years here in regard to the canal has been a controversy with the transcontinental railroads. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] pointed out, when this bill was being framed by the committee and when it was before the Senate there was a brigade of railroad lawyers here fighting against the provisions which we put in the bill day after day in our struggle to free the water commerce between the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts of the United States from the monopoly of the transcontinental railroads which has controlled it for 25 years. A part of the time they paid about a million dollars a year for the privilege of fixing rates by way of Panama.

Mr. MYERS. But, Mr. President, does the Senator contend that any effort for repeal which is being made now by the President is backed by the transcontinental railway lines?

Mr. BRISTOW. I claim, and state now, and state again, and have been stating on this floor for two years and more, that the fight against the provision in the bill that prevented railroad-owned ships from passing through the canal and the provision that exempted from tolls ships engaged in the coastwise trade has been engineered and made by the transcontinental railroads of the United States and Canada.

Mr. MYERS. Then I do not see how the Senator from Kansas can escape from the charge that has been made here against him to the effect that he has charged the President with being the tool of the transcontinental railway lines. From his language, either he makes that charge against the President or else he must regard the President as an unsophisticated gentleman who is being hoodwinked by designing people with sinister purposes.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator wishes to attribute that motive to the President, that is his privilege. I have not done it.

Mr. MYERS. I have not attributed anything to the President. I have been trying to find out what the Senator from Kansas attributes to him, but without much success.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will read to-morrow morning in the RECORD the remarks I made this morning I think he will understand exactly what the Senator from Kansas said. At least, I endeavored to make my statement very clear and specific.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he simply calls attention to the fact that certain interests are in favor of certain legislation advocated by the President?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have made that statement; yes.

Mr. HUGHES. That is about what the Senator's statement amounts to, as I understand.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have made that statement, and make it again, and have frequently made it.

Mr. HUGHES. I will ask the Senator, for my own information, whether or not the provision with reference to canal tolls has any bearing upon the provision with reference to railroad-owned ships going through the canal?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it has; yes. I think so. I think this is the first step——

Mr. HUGHES. But there is nothing contemplated now about repealing the act?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, I think——

Mr. HUGHES. As a matter of legislative fact, there is not anything in the proposed legislation with reference to canal-tolls exemption which repeals the law formerly passed?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; the canal-tolls exemption clause is simply a part of this legislation. That may be repealed. It renders less useful to the American people the other provisions of the bill, in my opinion, as I shall undertake to show when we get to the discussion of the bill. It is legislation along the same line; and I am not certain that it will not break down the inhibition we placed in that bill after the controversy we had here for months. I am afraid it will.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator called attention a moment ago to the fact that the transcontinental railroads were very much interested in legislation pending before the committee of which he is a member which had for its object the twofold purpose of freeing coastwise vessels from the payment of tolls and preventing railroad-owned ships from using the canal.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Their interest might very well have been, and, as I recollect, their great interest was, to prevent the passage of the legislation which prevented railroad-owned ships from using the canal. I can not see, however, how the railroads are going to be particularly interested in the exemption question if their ships can not use the canal.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator unfortunately was not present when I made my first remarks this morning. The amount of the toll, whatever it is, is added to every ton of freight that passes through the canal as an additional charge. Free tolls for American ships engaged in the coastwise trade would mean that there would be no additional charge imposed upon those ships for carrying commerce between the eastern coast of the United States and the western coast for passage through the canal. If a toll is charged, the rate will be increased by that amount; and the water rate, if it is a free competitive rate, will determine the transcontinental rates charged by the railroads, for every dollar of toll that is levied upon commerce that passes through that canal between the ports of the United States will, as a practical proposition, not only be added to the water rate but also to the transcontinental freight rates.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not true that when Sir Edward Grey filed his protest, the protest was based upon three propositions: First, the provision as to free tolls; second, the provision with reference to railroad-owned ships; and third, the provision with reference to the favor which we granted to the Panama Republic? He linked the two important propositions together; and in my judgment they are not only linked together in Sir Edward Grey's protest, but they are inevitably linked together in the result which it is believed by some will ultimately follow from the first step of repeal.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think so, too. I agree absolutely with the Senator from Idaho. I think the proposed repeal of the free-tolls clause is more than an entering wedge; I am not sure but that it will result in a nullification, in so far as to its practical effect, on the inhibition of railroad-owned ships passing through the canal.

Some of my Republican friends here have apparently become very much incensed at some of the remarks I made, fearing that I was reflecting on the integrity of the President of the United States. They know that nothing——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will suspend. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators, to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Mr. KERN. On account of the illness of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who is the proponent of the resolution, I ask that it be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, when I declared that the effort to repeal the exemption of canal tolls was instigated by the transcontinental American and Canadian railroads, that they were behind it and their interests were affected, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] at once felt impelled to arise and criticize severely the statement I had made upon the ground that I was reflecting upon the integrity of the President of the United States.

There is an effort going to be made, as is plainly indicated from the trend of the discussion here this morning, to base the demand for the repeal of the exemption upon some delicate foreign relations. We now must, it is alleged, give the railroads what they want in regard to transcontinental rates or go into a war with Japan, or Mexico, or England, or some other country. There never was a more preposterous and ridiculous proposition made on the floor of the United States Senate. Has the time come when we have got to permit Great Britain or Japan or any other foreign country to dictate to us what shall be our domestic policy in regard to charging tolls for the use of canals that we build with our own money upon our own territory? Have we forfeited all rights of sovereignty over our own investments?

What has been said upon this floor before in regard to this very subject? I will read now from the RECORD of January 22, 1913, on page 1871, from the speech made by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the Senate at that time. He says:

> The great remedy which was sought to be accomplished by that law receives very little attention and was scarcely alluded to by those who opposed its passage. It was sought by the proper use of the Panama Canal to place a wholesome restraint upon the transcontinental railroads in the imposition of their charges. It is common knowledge that for many years the transcontinental railroads looked with disfavor upon the building of a Panama Canal, because those interested in the railroads knew that with the opening of the Panama Canal cheap transportation by water would require the railroads to reduce their rates and would deprive them of the monopoly which they sought to obtain.
> There was a time when the Southern Pacific Railroad was found in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. There was a wholesome competition which worked for the benefit of the people of the country. That competition was destroyed as soon as the Southern Pacific Railroad was able to secure 51 per cent of the stock of the Pacific Mail. Rates were then placed so high as in some instances to be prohibitive; and it appeared from the lips of many witnesses, many citizens from different parts of the country who testified before our committee, that the best results to the people of the country from the use of the Panama Canal could be secured only by prohibiting the use of the canal by railroad-controlled boats. The proposal to enact this legislation encountered opposition at every step, and I remember during some remarks I had the honor of making in this body on the 17th of July last that I called attention to what was really within the knowledge of every Member—that no railroad corporation in this country ever secured the control of a competing water line without destroying competition. I called attention to the fact that every foot of rail east of the city of New York, that every foot of rail through New England, was controlled by one railroad system; that every boat on the Sound engaged in water transportation between New York and New England was controlled by the same corporation; and that that corporation, perfecting its monopoly, had sought, and had almost acquired, control of every foot of trolley-line service through that important section of the United States.

When we barred railroad ships from passing through the canal in order to free the canal or Panama from the monopoly which has existed for a quarter of a century, then the question of tolls became a most important subject with the transcontinental railroads.

What does free toll do? It gives the competitors of the transcontinental railroads the free use of this great waterway, the same as we give the free use of the Mississippi River to the boats that ply up and down that waterway. We have expended approximately $100,000,000 to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River. Is it proposed here to charge tolls to the boats that ply up and down that river, in order to get an interest on that investment? Then why should you charge tolls to the boats that pass through the Panama Canal?

We purchased the Soo Canal, connecting two of the Great Lakes. Do we charge tolls for the use of the Soo Canal because we have large investments in that waterway? Oh, no; that is not suggested. It is only when railroads are prohibited by law from owning ships that ply through the canal that the toll question becomes a matter of vital concern to them; and when a Senator who is interested in the freedom of the transportation of the United States rises on this floor and protests against legislation that would tend again to fasten this monopoly upon the water transportation between our coasts he is at once denounced as making an attack upon the President. When he points out the fact, well known to every intelligent man who has studied the Panama controversy, that it is a railroad question, that it is a transcontinental freight-rate question and nothing else, he is at once attacked as stirring up international troubles.

Continuing, the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] said:

> We provided in the bill that our coastwise ships should be permitted to use the canal free. We were induced to this course by two considerations: First, to encourage our coastwise shipping, and, second and more important, to secure the cheapest possible transportation by water. Cheap water transportation will compel the competing transcontinental railroads to maintain reasonable rates. The main purpose of the legislation was to reduce the cost of domestic transportation. This clearly presents a question of domestic policy, having no relation to international obligations.
> Of course, we hear it said "You have violated the treaty with Great Britain," and we are told from time to time that we must maintain our reputation for national integrity with the countries of the world.

We have heard some of that this morning—

> But we have not violated the treaty by exempting our coastwise vessels. England, under a similar act passed in 1815 guaranteeing equality to the ships of the United States in the harbors of Great Britain, has for 98 years discriminated in favor of her local shipping. We have some people in this country who are more English than the English themselves in the consideration of our treaty relations.

I suppose if the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] had waited to make that speech until now he would have been denounced in most vehement terms for imputing dishonesty to the President of the United States. Oh, in this attempt to free the transcontinental railroads from the law you can not get behind our foreign relations or use the name of the President of the United States to shield the real purpose. This fight will be made in the open and the country will understand what it is before the controversy is over.

Mr. President, I have other quotations here that I could read, but since the question is not really up for consideration now, except incidentally as growing out of the alarm that seemed to be created by the remarks I made this morning, I will not pursue it any further, but will wait until a more convenient season.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the remarks of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] are presumed to be addressed to the first resolution on the calendar under Rule VIII. That resolution relates to the question of suffrage by constitutional amendment. It does not in any sense concern the subject of tolls at the Panama Canal. The question of tolls at the canal is a serious one, to be considered on its own merits. Insinuations about some mysterious and sinister railroad influence will not obscure the real issue. The question of exemption from tolls being a special privilege to a domestic coastwise trade monopoly is in whatever controversy there may be on the subject. But the issue is not before the Senate. Moreover, the President needs no defense. His position on the question of special privilege is well understood by the country. And whether the general question be considered as a purely domestic one or one with an essentially international aspect, the difficulties inherited by the President in relation to it are appreciated by the American people.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIVELY. I yield to the Senator from Utah before submitting a motion.

INDIAN IRRIGATION.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report back the request of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to have printed a brief on irrigation of Indian lands, prepared under the direction of the Board of Indian Commissioners, by F. H. Abbott. I ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the matter, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I understand that the subject matter of the brief is for the use of that committee, and, under the printing law, they have a perfect right to order the printing of 1,000 copies. Therefore I ask that the Committee on Printing be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Utah, if this is the report submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as chairman of the special commission?

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is a brief prepared by Mr. Abbott, in reference to irrigation on Indian lands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah whether he can present this business at present under the rule which was cited a few minutes ago?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] yielded the floor to me for the purpose.

Mr. SHIVELY. I yielded to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood from what the Senator from Utah said that it would not be in order at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Indiana did not yield the floor I withdraw it. I am not going to violate the rules of the body. I do not ask to do that at any time. The Senator from Indiana yielded the floor, as I understood him.

Mr. SHIVELY. I yielded the floor. I was just on the point of making a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the action requested by the Senator from Utah will be taken.

COST OF OCEAN CARRIAGE (S. DOC. NO. 423).

Mr. SMOOT. I have an article prepared by David Lubin, delegate of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, on the cost of ocean carriage, its influence on the world's price and the home price of the staples, its bearing on the economic, social, and political life of the nations, and the needs for an international commerce commission. I ask that the article be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 120 may be made the unfinished business at 2 o'clock on February 25, which is a week from to-day. I will say that this is the Federal grain-inspection bill. It has been reported now for the third time from the committee, and I wish to get it in a position where we can act upon it in some way.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is already one piece of unfinished business on the calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I will change my request and ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 120 may be made a special order.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I feel compelled to object to that request. I have received very numerous protests against the bill, and I want to examine it somewhat before that is done.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I move that the bill be made a special order for February 25, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. BURTON. Is that motion in order? I do not understand that it is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; that motion is always in order.

Mr. BURTON. To make a bill a special order for a particular day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be done by a two-thirds vote. The Senator from North Dakota moves that Senate bill 120 be made a special order for February 25.

Mr. BURTON. There is one other feature about the matter which I should like to state. I have to be absent on that day, and while I am entirely unfamiliar with the terms of the bill, I have received very vigorous protests against it from the State of Ohio and other States near at hand. I think similar protests have been received from the State of Maryland. As I understand, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is strongly opposed to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. The fact that a State or a city where there is a mixing grain happens to be opposed to the bill is certainly no reason why we should not have it before the Senate so that we can vote on it. That is all I am asking for. I am not trying to hurry it. The Senator will remember that a similar bill has been reported to the Senate, I think, three times, at least twice before. I will admit that it has not been reported far enough ahead of the close of the business of the session to secure its consideration. I desire now, however, to bring it up at a time when it may be considered. I do not want to hurry it. I simply want a vote on it.

Mr. BURTON. I think the Senator from North Dakota will find that there are more than two States that are strongly opposed to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.

Mr. BURTON. Another thing, if it comes up, I should like very much to have it come up when I can be here.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well; then, if the Senator will designate some other day when he will be here, I will change the motion to that date.

Mr. BURTON. I would suggest the 2d of March.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is a good way ahead.

Mr. BURTON. It is not far ahead.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is two weeks ahead. However, to accommodate the Senator, I will move that the bill be taken up as a special order immediately after the close of the routine morning business on Monday, the 2d day of March.

Mr. JAMES. Just a moment, Mr. President. How much time will the bill take?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, this is a bill of very great importance to my State, as well as to many others. The subject is one that has been before the Senate previously. Without some consideration of this bill, I do not feel disposed to consent that the Senate shall give to it the privilege of the unfinished business.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not asking the Senator to vote one way or the other on the matter. All I am asking is a fair expression of the Senate at some time upon the bill. I will give notice to Senators right now that, while the bill has been euchred out of its place during two sessions, it will not be euchred out of its place without a fight every day from now on. I purpose to have a vote of the Senate upon the bill, and it is not going to be jockeyed out of existence by any one Senator or any number of Senators.

I have been perfectly fair. I say that I will fix any time within reason when Senators may want to take it up; and if Senators do not like the bill, they are privileged to vote against it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that there is no disposition to jockey in the matter in any way, shape, or form. This is a bill, however, that is very obnoxious to a great many interests of this country, and there is great opposition to it. So far as I am concerned, I shall lend every effort in my power to defeat it. I think the bill is wrong, and while there is no disposition to jockey—I do not think this body is inclined to that kind of work—I think it is my duty to my constituents to do what I can to defeat it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to the Senator that, while there may be some boards of trade that think the bill will interfere with them—and undoubtedly it will, to some extent—there is a great farming element all over the country that is seeking for justice, and legislatures of States and bodies representing the farming interests of all the northern section of the country have resolved again and again in favor of legislation along this line.

I am not going to argue upon the merits of the proposition now. I only say that as a justification for seeking to fix a time at which I may bring it up, at least. In asking for this particular date I am not asking that it be made the unfinished business, but simply that it be made a special order for that day, not that I may have a day on which to express to the Senate my own views upon the bill, but so that Senators may have notice that it will at least come up for consideration on that day.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the bill is made a special order for the day named, and it is not finished on that day, what will be its status?

Mr. SMOOT. It would go back to the calendar.

Mr. BURTON. I am frank to say that I am entirely unfamiliar with the terms of the bill, but a very vigorous protest against it has come from millers in my own State and from other persons as well. It is claimed that it is entirely unnecessary, and that it will create a great deal of confusion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I wish he would give me the resolutions from millers in his State, because both of the great milling papers of the United States are ardently in favor of it, and they represent the milling interests of the country. I have letter after letter from millers in the State of Ohio favoring the bill. I think the Senator is mistaken when he says the millers are opposed to the bill. The millers are in favor of it, because they want to know what they are going to get when they buy a certain grade of grain, and at present they do not know what they are getting. I have not found a single miller who is opposed to it. At all events, not a single one who has ever written me has expressed any objection to the bill. The objection comes from commercial bodies that deal in wheat options, grain options, and so forth, and not from the trade.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply wish to suggest to my colleague that extended hearings have been held on this particular bill at least three or four times, and those hearings are printed. The only opposition to the bill has come from certain boards of trade and chambers of commerce. I recollect very well that the boards of trade from the city of Baltimore were here during the last session of Congress and had an opportunity to be heard. In fact, practically every board of trade in the United States has been heard on this particular bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to my colleague that at the present time boards of trade, like those of Duluth and St. Louis—and I can give him a great number of others—have begun to change their opinions upon the bill and are now becoming strongly in favor of it. Even those that were opposed to it, after viewing the matter over, are in favor of legislation of this character.

That is neither here nor there, however. This is a question of getting the measure before the Senate for a vote. If I can not convince the Senate that the bill is a proper one, I will take the responsibility of having it defeated. I therefore make that motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire what motion is made by the Senator from North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to make Senate bill 120 the special order of business at the conclusion of the morning business on March 2, 1914.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator why this particular matter should be made a special order so far in advance? It is the Senator's privilege at any time to move to take up the bill, and if the Senate consents he can then make his speech. The matter has not been before the Senate at all for discussion as yet. With the appropriation bills coming on, and the urgency of routine matters, I see no reason why the Senate should foreclose the matter and say that upon that day the time shall be given up to the bill which the Senator from North Dakota is urging.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can answer the Senator from Nebraska very briefly. I was trying to accommodate the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who said that he would be absent on the day I originally proposed. I judged that he did not want me to bring up the bill during his absence, and I was taking the earliest opportunity to fix a day when it could have a hearing before the Senate, at least. It will have to have a hearing some day. It will have to be upon motion. No one, without disobeying the rules of the Senate, could speak for more than five minutes upon the matter if it should be considered under Rule VIII.

If we are to start in on a system of attempting to prevent a hearing on this bill, we can fight the matter out every day until we have determined the question. I am trying to accommodate myself to the desires of the Senate and not to obstruct the operation of the Senate on other matters every day by attempting to get a hearing upon this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not familiar with the Senator's bill, but from what he says I judge it is a matter of considerable importance, and it is not likely to be passed upon the day which he may now endeavor to set in advance. It probably must be discussed on a number of occasions.

Why is it not possible for the Senator to-morrow to move to take up his bill, and make his speech, and have the matter discussed to some extent? Then, after it has been brought before the Senate and discussed, it will be time enough to set a day either for a vote or for special consideration.

It seems to me unjust to other matters which are pending at this time for the Senate to decide in advance, without knowing anything about the measure, upon what day it shall be made a special order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senate that I would rather take up the bill to-morrow and go on with it; but we have other matters coming up here, and some Senators say they have not read the bill. I want to be prepared, if possible, to go on with the arguments, both for and against the bill, and finish it up at the earliest possible moment. Therefore I thought it would be better, and I am still of that conviction, if we could fix a day certain upon which, at least, it might be made a special order. Then, Senators who are opposed to it would not be uneasy lest it might come up at a time when they were absent.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. So far as I am concerned, I should prefer to have this bill take its regular course. I see no reason why it should be given any special consideration.

If, as the Senator from North Dakota says, he is going to ask to have the bill taken up day after day, that is a matter for his own consideration and for the consideration of the Senate. So far as I am concerned, however, I see no reason why special favors should be shown this bill.

The Senator himself recognizes that the bill has had no discussion whatever. It has not been before the Senate. I think it is asking a good deal of this body that a bill should be made a special order of which there has been no discussion whatever. I shall therefore oppose a motion for a special order.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator says this is a bill that has had no discussion. Why, this bill has been discussed for hours and days before the Senate. I know that the Senate changes, and that the bill has not been discussed before all the present Members of the Senate; but very lengthy addresses have been made upon the subject, and it has been before the Senate for 10 years.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that a bill on this subject has been before the Senate probably for several years; but I know nothing as to what this bill is, and I assume there is hardly a Senator on the floor who has read the bill that has been reported by the committee. Therefore, while this bill is probably similar to some others, this particular bill has never been before the Senate, so far as I have any knowledge.

Mr. McCUMBER. There has not been any change at all in the bill from its form when it was discussed before the Senate on two other occasions when it was reported favorably from the committee.

I will ask that a vote be taken upon the matter now, Mr. President. If the time I have suggested does not suit the convenience of Senators, of course I shall have to bring up the matter day in and day out until we get a decision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota. [Putting the question.] It is impossible, on a viva voce vote, for the Chair to tell whether two-thirds have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has been called from the Chamber on important business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on official business of the Senate.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] is absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 19, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In the midst of a busy life, O God our Father, we pause and turn to Thee for love and sympathy, for wisdom and strength, that we may be cheered, upheld, sustained, and guided on our way; that whatsoever our hands findeth to do we may do it in accordance with our highest conceptions of right and truth and justice, assured that Thou wilt look with favor upon us and bless our earnest endeavors. So we trust, so we hope, so we pray. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HELVERING, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the Alaskan railway bill. The House resolves itself automatically into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in Alaska, and for other purposes. Just before adjournment on last Wednesday, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] offered an amendment, which was then pending and which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, after line 15, insert:
"Provided, That if any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated, as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater."

Mr. SCOTT was recognized.

Mr. LENROOT. Before the gentleman begins his discussion I want to suggest that the word "hereinafter" in the amendment should read "hereinbefore," because the condemnation proceedings are provided for before.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, that is possibly a typographical error, and I will agree to the substitution. I ask unanimous consent that the correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the word "hereinbefore" be substituted for the word "hereinafter" in the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, on the 21st of January in general debate I addressed the House upon the subject of the pending bill. My remarks at that time were directed to what I believe to be a very vital defect in the bill as introduced. I pointed out that the Wickersham bill embodied essentially the Alaska Railroad Commission plan; that it involved the construction of 733 miles of railroad calculated and intended to continue the existing lines respectively, from Chitina to the Yukon and from Kern Creek to the Kuskokwim; that upon the construction of the line or lines under this plan, the Government would be confronted with these alternatives: First, either to lease and turn over to the owners of the existing lines its roads; or, second, to lease from the owners of the existing roads their lines; or, third, to enter into some traffic arrangements with the owners of the existing lines under which the Government and these respective owners would operate their own portions of the continuous lines thus constituted. I pointed out how, under these various propositions, the owners of the existing lines would be left in the ownership and control of the lower trunks, the mountain passes, the terminals, and the choice harbor locations and facilities at Cordova and Seward. I also showed that the Alaska & Northern was an abandoned and bankrupt project; that the Copper River & Northwestern had discontinued further construction and was being operated at a loss of about $800 a mile annually, not figuring any interest on the investment; that under present conditions these lines could be condemned for a comparatively small sum; that the Guggenheims and the owners of the Alaska Northern had already sustained a great loss consequent upon the abandonment of their original plan and promise to build to the Yukon River; that to pursue the Alaska Railroad Commission plan under this bill would transfer that loss to the Government of the United States and inject many millions of dollars of value into the existing lines and the pockets of their owners.

On January 23 the Alaska railroad bill was under debate in the Senate, and Senator BRISTOW offered an amendment calculated to meet the very evil that I had pointed out. The amendment was debated at length and finally adopted with only 12 votes against it. The amendment offered by me on last Wednesday evening, and which is now pending, is identical with the Bristow amendment. It was offered following two votes of the Committee of the Whole of this House upon amendments involving essentially the proposition here presented. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] had offered an amendment to strike out the word "lease" in the second line on page 12. That amendment was agreed to and eliminated the proposed power or discretion of the President to acquire by lease either of the existing lines. In other words, it was a vote against the proposition to acquire those lines, or either of them, in a way that would leave the present owners in the ownership of these lines, terminals, and harbor facilities. Immediately after this a vote was taken on the Mann amendment, which struck out all after the word "Congress," in line 2, page 12, down to and including the word "proper," in line 7. This was a vote squarely against the proposition that the Government should enter into traffic arrangements with the owners of the existing lines, leaving such owners in the ownership and control of the present properties and harbors and the Government to own and operate only the new extensions. Thus this House has declared itself unequivocally upon two of the three alternatives that I have suggested, and there remains only the one that the Government should build these upper extensions for the use and benefit of the owners of the existing lines and turn the Government-constructed roads over to them under lease, and attempt then to regulate them through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Chairman, for over 40 years we have attempted to regulate railroads of the United States through instrumentalities of various commissions, including the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have met with great difficulty in that respect, and we are now most indifferently accomplishing the purpose even in the light of conditions with which we are intimately acquainted and which are quite well settled. What difficulties may we then expect in an attempt to regulate railroads in Alaska under conditions the nature of which we can not even now conjecture, working without precedent and with no known principles to guide our course. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the people of the United States want to go into partnership with the Guggenheims and the Alaska Syndicate, and I for one do not favor the proposition.

Under all these circumstances, and the House having by two votes already committed itself to the principle, we ought not now to hesitate to meet the responsibility resting upon us as a legislative body. We ought not to reject this amendment now upon the theory that in conference we will be forced to accept it anyway. Why not rise to the level of our own responsibility and do what ought to be done of our own volition.

Mr. Chairman, I think my amendment should be adopted. It has already been essentially agreed to by two votes on two separate occasions. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have always been impressed with the idea that the Guggenheims were promoting this legislation in a large measure, and I am more convinced of it now than I ever was before. On the 15th of this month Mr. Guggenheim gave a special interview to a representative of the New York American, which reads as follows:

Daniel Guggenheim, in an exclusive interview given the New York American yesterday, vigorously declared he believed the United States Government could successfully operate the railroads, telephones, and telegraphs.

Mr. Guggenheim is president of the American Smelting & Refining Co., American Smelters Securities Co., Guggenheim Exploration Co., Yukon Gold Co., and a director in several other large enterprises.

"Judging from the apparent success the Government has attained with the parcel post," said Mr. Guggenheim, "I believe our Government will succeed in doing things in which the foreign Governments have failed.

"Ten years ago I did not believe the United States Government could succeed in running the railroads, telephones, or telegraphs. I felt that the American people could do it better than the Government.

"My former prejudice was based on my knowledge of what had been done abroad; but I have been converted, and it is evident to me now that our Government will succeed in operating the railroads, telegraphs, telephones, or parcel post to an extent that I never thought possible."

* * * * * * *

Regarding the rumor that his brother, former Senator Samuel Guggenheim, would gradually succeed him as the director in general of the Guggenheim companies Mr. Guggenheim said:

"Since the relinquishment of my brother's senatorial duties he has simply taken off his coat and started to help the whole Guggenheim family assist in taking care of the white man's burden. With the great amount of knowledge gleaned from his association with Senators and Government interests, my brother is better equipped to take up the work he left off when he became a Senator."

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt whatever but that the Guggenheims are anxious to unload the white elephant they have in Alaska in the form of this railroad, and if this bill passes I predict that the Guggenheims will no longer be owners of the railroad through which they have made great losses, but that the losses will be unloaded upon the American people by the purchase of their railroad by the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if we can not reach some agreement as to the time on this amendment. I suggest that we have 10 minutes on a side.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me suggest to the chairman of the committee that this matter was debated for two days in the Senate. We ought at least to have time enough to consider it in the House with a reasonable degree of debate. I should say that we ought to have one hour.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman from Tennessee opposed to the amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; I am opposed to the amendment. Now, I suggest that debate be closed at the end of 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Make it an hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to make it 30 minutes, and give 20 minutes to those in favor of the amendment and 10 minutes to those opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes, 20 minutes to be occupied in favor of the amendment and 10 minutes to those opposed to the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is not entirely clear to me how many gentlemen desire to be heard on the amendment. I think I see at least four standing who desire to be heard in favor of the amendment. There may be others. Before this arrangement is made I would like to know whether it is possible for those of us who desire to speak to have an opportunity to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I do not think that is sufficient time to discuss this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes, 10 minutes to go to those opposing the amendment and 20 minutes to those favoring it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members present; a quorum, and the point of order is overruled. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] that debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, again let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that unless we adopt this amendment we shall build only pieces of a road, and not any complete system. We shall be carrying out the idea that this bill was founded upon the recommendations of the Alaskan Commission that contemplated building branches of the Guggenheim road and branches of the Alaskan Syndicate road. It is to make defensible the action that we take here to-day, if we do take action affirmatively with regard to building a railroad in Alaska, that this amendment is urged by those who favor it. It has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] within our hearing a moment ago that the Guggenheims in all probability favor this legislation. They well might do so, in the form in which the bill is at present before the committee, because it contemplates an extension of their line from Chitina on to Fairbanks, a very considerable and a very profitable feeder for them. It contemplates a branch to the Bering coal fields, built at the expense of the Government, that would be another feeder for their line. It contemplates extensions which will make their line, which is now unprofitable, a profitable line for them. Why should they not favor this legislation? We can not afford to pass any bill here that will compel the Government of the United States to enter into a partnership with the Guggenheims, that will compel us to take such steps as will make it necessary for us to make traffic arrangements with them, and to use their terminal facilities on such terms as we can make. This amendment will prohibit our entering into that kind of an arrangement. It will compel the Government, if it builds a line on this Copper River Valley, to purchase the Guggenheim line. I am not in favor of this, and I hope it will never be done. If a road is to be built I should favor the line which would have for its southern terminus either Seward, Portage Bay, or both.

The building of any line should be a complete act on the part of the Government, and not pieces and parcels of road that will help other properties already built now held in private ownership.

My colleague has well shown that if we take this action we immediately add to the value of the Guggenheim properties and the Alaskan Syndicate properties, and if we afterwards seek to acquire them it will be only at the increased valuation which our action will give to them. Let us make it impossible that we shall take any action that will increase the value of the property that we will be compelled afterwards to purchase.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Has the gentleman seen in the newspapers lately, during the last two days, of the partnership about to be entered into between the Standard Oil Co. and China in the production of oil? Would not the wording of this bill, carried to its logical conclusion, mean that the United States would enter into partnership with the Guggenheims?

Mr. TOWNER. This would compel the Government of the United States to do so; but it is to prevent it that this amendment is urged.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this bill which requires the President to make any such arrangement as the gentleman has suggested. This amendment was very carefully considered by the committee, and there does not seem to me to be any reason why it should be adopted. On the other hand there are very substantial reasons why it should not be adopted. In the first place, this amendment provides that if any purchase is to be made of any other railroad to carry this line through to the coast it must be done before the main line is located, whether it is acquired by private sale or by condemnation. Let us see the position that would leave us in. Let us assume that the Alaska Northern Railroad should be offered to the Government for $5,000,000. The President might believe that two million and a half is all the property is worth to us. But he would be compelled, if this amendment prevails, to pay the railroad's price, delay the project for a number of years, while condemnation proceedings were being conducted, or entirely abandon all purpose to acquire that road, even if convinced it could be used to good advantage. The position would then be this: The President, having refused to accept the proposition to pay $5,000,000 for the road, and deciding that the long delay necessarily incurred by condemnation proceedings would be most unfortunate for the people of Alaska——

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he so understands that in condemnation proceedings the fact that you have to proceed in court delays the taking over of the property or the use of the property after the condemnation proceedings have been begun?

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply to that that in condemnation proceedings, unless the condemnation act itself specifically provides that the title vests upon the filing of the oath of office of the commissioners, or the happening of some other event, the Government or the municipality condemning would get no right to take possession of the property or use it in any way until the value was fixed in the condemnation proceedings and the price paid.

Now, if the President, having determined it was not wise to pay the price demanded, and fearing the value of the property as fixed in condemnation proceedings would be in excess of what it would be wise for the Government to pay, and should proceed to make a location entirely and absolutely independent of any road which is now there, and suppose within two weeks thereafter the proprietor of such road should say, "We will now accept $2,000,000 for it," the President will be compelled to say, "Unfortunately, while I think it would be in the interest of the country to take it at that price, I am precluded by the terms of the law from now entertaining the proposition."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, one of the great objections to this legislation lies in the fact that it is dangerously indefinite as to what the President may and should do under it. So far as the President would have any guide at all as to the intent of Congress will be found in the report of the Alaska Railway Commission, for this bill in effect adopts the report of the commission as to mileage and as to expenditure. That report proposes the construction of 350 miles of branches of the Copper River & Northwestern road, the Guggenheim road, at a cost of $16,000,000, and the construction of approximately 380 miles of branches and extensions of the Alaska Northern road, at an expense of $18,000,000. The last-named road, it is claimed by some of those supporting the bill, is largely owned by Mr. Morgan; so if the bill passes in its present form the President has before him the proposition of an expenditure the effect of which would be to very greatly enhance the value of the railways heretofore constructed by private enterprise in Alaska.

If we are to build railroads in Alaska, we should do one of two things. We should either build an entirely independent line from the coast to the interior rivers, as proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], or we should condemn and take over such portions of the roads already constructed as may be necessary in completing a through line from tidewater to the navigable waters of the interior. We should not under any circumstances do what the Alaskan Railway Commission evidently contemplated—add largely to the value of the property now owned by private interests in Alaska; in fact, reviving values that are now practically extinct, making valuable roads upon which the owners are now receiving no income whatever and from which they can receive no income except by an additional great expenditure. If we are to keep these railways to be constructed in Alaska free from criticism, we should have them entirely divorced from privately owned railways. In my opinion, the best thing to do would be to build a line from Portage Bay to the Yukon and possibly short branches to the two coal fields. If we adopt the amendment now proposed, we should either do that as an independent proposition, without utilizing any of the lines now constructed, or we should take over one of the lines constructed, buy it, pay for it, and make it part of the Government-owned lines. If we use one of the lines now constructed, or both of them, as part of the Government lines, we shall enhance the value of these lines greatly and make them pay whether the Government road does or not, and eventually it will probably be necessary to take them over at the greatly enhanced values we have created.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry, indeed, that the members of the committee have not seen fit to accept this amendment, for it is altogether in the public interest, and if it be adopted the results following it will be exactly contrary to those predicted by the gentleman from New York. Evidently the gentleman from New York is of the opinion that if it shall be determined to build either from the present terminus of the Alaskan Northern to the Yukon or from Chitina to the Yukon this Government should either make joint rates with the Alaska Syndicate or the Guggenheim road or else wait until this white elephant the gentleman from Illinois has spoken of has become very valuable through the action of the Government itself.

The gentleman says that it would delay construction of railroads in Alaska, by reason of delay in condemnation proceedings. Mr. Chairman, exactly the contrary would be the case, and the result would be that we would secure these existing railroads for what they are worth to-day. And why? Because, under this amendment, if these railroads in their present condition are worth $2,500,000 or $10,000,000, whereas their owners would like to sell them for $5,000,000 or $20,000,000, as the case may be, if this amendment is adopted these existing railroads would accept, and they will be practically forced to accept, such price as the President of the United States may choose to pay them. And why? Because, under the amendment, if they do not choose to accept a fair price for those roads in their present condition, the President will relocate or locate a line of roads from the coast paralleling their roads to the present terminus of their roads; and what becomes of the value of their roads then? So, as a matter of practical result, they will, of course, if this amendment be adopted, accept such price as the President will see fit to give them. And the two roads, as suggested by my friend from Iowa, will bid against each other, because, if the Government will parallel their roads, does anyone believe that those roads, after that parallel is made, will be worth anything like what the President himself would choose to give them before construction is entered upon?

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman understand that there is any provision in this bill which would prevent the President from taking exactly the course he has suggested, by paralleling the roads, if the other road will not sell at a fair price?

Mr. LENROOT. There is not. But the gentleman's own position is that construction should be entered upon immediately, and that condemnation proceedings would delay construction, and, therefore, if we are going to purchase the roads or condemn them, we shall wait until the Government enters upon this construction, and then the gentleman must see that the price that any jury would award the Alaskan Syndicate or the Guggenheim Syndicate will be very much in excess of the price that they would award them for their roads in their present condition. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] suggests that the Guggenheims want this done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two things that the Guggenheim Syndicate would like to see done. First, they would like to see no railroad construction whatever, and they would be satisfied to see Alaska opened to them alone under the old law. If that can not be done, the next thing they would like to do is to see the Government build railroads from Chitina, build railroads from the 72 Mile Post, and connecting with their existing roads, making them valuable, and they control the terminii, control the harbor, and thus control the business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will not be adopted. One reason is that the President at present, as the bill is framed, can do the very thing this amendment provides he shall do. He has that power and can exercise it. To attempt to harness him up, limit his powers, and force him to buy the road from Cordova Bay up to Chitina, if it was decided that that was the most feasible road, would be very unfair. Suppose the President, after he gets reports from his engineers and others investigating the matter, should decide that the best plan would be to build a road from Chitina to Fairbanks, connecting with the Copper River road? This amendment would force him to buy the Guggenheim road, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] calls it, in order that we may have a continuous line from the seaboard up to interior Alaska. We do not want to compel him to do this.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I can not yield now, as I have not the time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there can be no good reason for limiting the power of the President. Let him exercise his own discretion. He would make just as good a deal, just as advantageous a trade, with the Guggenheims or with the Alaskan Syndicate or any other road there, without this provision being adopted. By this proposition he has to connect from the southern coast to the interior, and if he happens to think the Copper River Valley is the best line, he has got to buy the railroad. We do not want to force him to buy that railroad. We want to give him the power in this bill to buy that road or not, just as he thinks for the best interests of the country, and we want him and the Interstate Commerce Commission, which will have control of the Guggenheim road, or whatever road it may be, to compel them to deal in fair traffic and fair rates, and we can do that. There is no reason why we should stand out and be afraid of a Guggenheim road there if our road connects with it. They are under authority of law, they are under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they can be compelled to make fair traffic rates.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope there will not be any such limitation as this put upon the President. If he thinks the Copper River Road route is the best, and should want to invest these millions of dollars in other lines, then he should have the power to do so. I do not want money invested in a road or a road built unless it is absolutely necessary. I would rather see this $35,000,000 expended in the construction of new lines of road and that we should get the benefit of the additional lines of roads and then compel these men that have these roads there to let us use their roads on fair terms, as they will have to do, at fair and reasonable rates.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have sufficient time to reply to a question, if he will yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to make any agreement that will extend this time. In fact, I can not do it under the rule of the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. I will not take much of your time.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let the gentleman ask the question in his own time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to this error in the gentleman's argument: The gentleman assumes that if the President acts under the bill as it is now framed, he can accomplish all that he can under the amendment. The point of distinction is this: That before the President can determine the question of taking over the existing lines under the bill as now framed he must first locate and designate his routes and lines. Then he must, by independent action thereafter, proceed to condemn or purchase existing lines. The first act will in law establish the status of the Government lines, and will also change the status of the existing lines. And you will have to condemn under the new status, and your values will be fixed under the rules of evidence and under the law, in the light of an established and located Government line, which will make the existing lines part of through lines and will double, treble, and quadruple the value under the law.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman's argument is as to whether we must buy these railroads?

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all. I am arguing on the assumption that if we do desire to occupy these routes and take over these lines we should take them over now, while we can condemn them as unprofitable propositions—not paying, very nearly worthless—rather than after we have by the establishment of Government lines made them parts of through continuous lines and very valuable. There is the distinction between the Bristow amendment and the bill as now framed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment would the Government proceed to buy and condemn these lines before they would attempt to extend them?

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman's argument to be to that effect.

Mr. SCOTT. No. If the amendment passes, then the bill itself gives the status to the Government lines, not the subsequent action of the President. But the bill here and on this floor says that if the President adopts that route, he shall as a part of the same transaction take over the existing lines, thereby fixing the permanent status as the basis under which he shall receive them.

Mr. MANN. But in neither case will he buy the lines now constructed until he has located the route?

Mr. SCOTT. No; certainly not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was making an argument on the discretionary power of the President to locate first and then give a value to those lines.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman does not understand my distinction between building a road under a law that fixes at the outset the fact that the existing lines must be taken over and a law which makes it necessary first to locate the line over a part of the route, and then to leave it to the discretion of the President as to whether he will take over the constructed part in order to continue the road to the seaboard.

Mr. MANN. I still do not understand the gentleman's position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

This bill proposes to appropriate $35,000,000 for the purpose of building railroads in Alaska. There are certain railroads there now. If we use the $35,000,000 for building additional lines, we shall go much nearer giving to Alaska the amount of trunk lines it must have than if we should use a part of the $35,000,000 to buy lines that are already in existence. I do not know what it would take to purchase the roads already in existence, and I do not know how much benefit or how much value such new roads would add to the lines now in existence, but I take it that this is not a bill to punish the Guggenheims or to decrease the value of their property or to do injustice to anyone. It is a bill for the purpose of giving better transportation facilities to the people of Alaska. The question is, Which plan will give them better facilities for transportation; whether to add some 700 to 1,000 miles of railroad to what they already have, or to use this money to buy railroads already built? Surely it is better for the development of Alaska to build additional lines rather than to purchase lines now in existence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SCOTT. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 73.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] demands tellers. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand in their places until they are counted.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his demand.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. L'ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. L'ENGLE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 5, after the word "railroad," strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"In the State of Florida, from Jacksonville to Tampa, to be so located as to traverse the counties of Duval, St. John, Volusia, Brevard, St. Lucie, Palm Beach, and Dade in a general northerly and southerly direction, and thence starting at some point on said railroad in either Palm Beach or Dade County and running in a generally northwesterly direction, and south of Lake Okeechobee, through the counties of Lee, De Soto, Manatee, and Hillsboro, to the city of Tampa; to construct and build a standard-gauge railroad or railroads, with the necessary branch lines, feeders, sidings, switches, and spurs along such route or routes as he may so locate and designate; to purchase or otherwise acquire all real and personal property necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; to exercise the power of eminent domain in acquiring property for such use, which use is hereby declared to be a public use, by condemnation in the courts of Florida in accordance with the laws now or hereafter in force there; to acquire rights of way, terminal grounds, and all other rights; to purchase or otherwise acquire all necessary equipment for the construction and operation of such railroad or railroads for the transportation of freight and passengers; to build or otherwise acquire docks, wharves, terminal facilities, and all structures needed for the equipment and operation of such railroad or railroads; to improve by dredging, constructing jetties, retaining walls, and otherwise, such harbors as may be expedient to increase the tonnage of said railroad or railroads; to fix, change, or modify rates for the transportation of freight and passengers, subject to the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as hereinafter provided; to receive compensation therefor, and to perform generally all the usual duties of a common carrier for hire; to make and establish rules and regulations not in violation of law for the control and operation of said railroad or railroads; to employ agents and employees for the conduct of the business of said railroad or railroads, and to fix and provide their compensation; to lease the said railroad or railroads after completion upon such terms as he may deem proper, but no lease shall be for a longer period than 10 years, nor to a competing transportation line, or in the event of failure to lease, to operate the same until the further action of Congress; to lease, purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire any other line or lines of railroad or canals in Florida which may be necessary to complete the construction of or increase the tonnage of the line or lines of railroad designated or located by him in the first instance upon such terms as he may deem proper; to make contracts or agreements with any other railroad or with any steamship company for joint transportation of freight or passengers, and to make such other contracts as may be necessary to carry out any of the purposes of this act; to transfer any tools, equipment, or other property belonging to the United States and used in the construction of the Panama Canal or other Government work for the use of such railroad and railroads in Florida, and no charge shall be made therefor, but credit may be taken for the fair value thereof by the department having them in charge."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order. The reading of the amendment discloses the fact that the amendment is not in order and is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. L'ENGLE. I would like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to give his reasons for making the point of order and to state why he says the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. MANN. To a bill for the construction of a railroad in Alaska an amendment to construct a railroad in Florida is not germane. It has no relation to the bill any more than on a bill proposing to pay John Smith a certain sum of money it would be in order to propose to pay John Jones a certain sum of money. That is not in order under the rules.

Mr. L'ENGLE. But the title of the bill, Mr. Chairman, could be amended, if this amendment were adopted, so as to make the title of the bill really read, "A bill to construct a railroad in Florida."

Mr. MANN. Of course the title of the bill would not govern. In any event the amendment clearly is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment: On page 10, line 5, to strike out the words "standard gauge."

Mr. MANN. An amendment to that effect has already been voted down.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, that amendment has already been offered and rejected.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was absent last Wednesday and was not aware of that. I have no desire to reraise a question. I was necessarily absent from the city last Wednesday when this matter probably was considered. I understand, however, it was not considered where it appears in line 17. In order to express my view I make the motion to strike out the words "standard gauge" in line 17 of page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 10, in line 17, by striking out the words "standard gauge."

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, what I desire to say to the committee is simply this: There are some things that a legislative body——

Mr. OGLESBY. I make the point of order against that amendment that it has already been offered and rejected.

Mr. SHERLEY. That raises a question of fact. I am informed that it was not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the reading clerk says that the amendment was offered in both instances.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am advised by Members who were present that the reading clerk is mistaken. I should like to know accurately.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the gentleman from Illinois desires to speak to the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes. There was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] to strike out the words "standard gauge" in lines 5 and 17 of the bill. The words "standard gauge" in line 5 relate to the location of the road. The words "standard gauge" in line 17, to which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] now offers the amendment, relate to the construction of the road, an entirely different proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have the citation in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. FOWLER. Not now.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a question of order, and it is in the discretion of the Chair. I will state to the Chair that I have the citation from the RECORD, and it will expedite the hearing of this proposition to have it read. It is a matter entirely within the control of the Chair.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not yield to the gentleman now.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a matter of discretion with the Chair to get information concerning the point of order. The Chair will be very glad to hear any information that will throw light on the subject.

Mr. FOWLER. That is just what I am trying to do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the citation read.

Mr. STAFFORD. On page 3515 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, midway down the second column, appears the following:

> Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on page 10, line 17, I move to strike out the words "standard gauge."
> Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman also move to strike out those words in line 5.
> Mr. FERRIS. In line 5, also. My first amendment is, on page 10, line 5, I move to strike out the words "standard gauge."
> The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
> The Clerk read as follows:
> "Page 10, line 5, strike out the words 'standard gauge.'"

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the citation——

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has no citation that applies to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin is reading an amendment that was offered last Wednesday. If that is so, the Chair would like to hear it.

Mr. FOWLER. There was an amendment offered, and that is what I am stating, for I was here and was going to offer the amendment that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has offered, when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] offered an amendment to strike out the words "standard gauge," in the lines to which I have referred—lines 5 and 17.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it appears from the RECORD, on page 3516——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. If my colleague [Mr. FOWLER] will permit me, I have a citation which sustains him entirely.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to state my position, for I know I am correct.

Mr. MANN. The RECORD sustains the gentleman. On page 3516 appears the following:

> The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.
> The amendment was rejected.
> Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I assume that it is not necessary to offer the same amendment below, but I will offer the following amendment—which was an entirely different amendment; so that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] did not offer the amendment in both places.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the understanding of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]?

Mr. FOWLER. Why, certainly; and that was what I was trying to state all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. But my genial friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] wanted to take me off my feet on a point on which he was wrong, but he did not know it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there are certain things that a legislative body is peculiarly well fitted to determine, and there are other matters that it is just as disqualified to determine. When it comes to a question of policy, the size of a legislative body is an asset, because all angles of a question are presented and you get the wisdom of common counsel. When it comes to the details of a particular work, the very size of the body precludes its judgment amounting to anything of value. Therefore it is always wise in matters of this kind not to undertake to determine with any degree of nicety the details of the work that is to be performed, but simply the policy that shall determine the Executive in the performance of that work. And this bill, aside from the question of policy, will have a virtue only to the degree that it does not attempt to write details of construction into the law.

I have a proper respect for the opinion of men here as to policy. I have not the slightest respect for the judgment of this House as to the engineering propositions involved in the building of a railroad in Alaska. For that reason I believe it is a mistake to compel the President, in the construction of a road, to necessarily construct a standard gauge road. In my judgment—and my judgment in the matter is of no special value—I think it probable that a standard gauge road will and ought to be built; but I am not willing to see a limitation that compels it without voicing a protest. This body should determine a policy and not undertake to write the details of a piece of construction work. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOOHER). The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. When our fathers were writing the Constitution of the United States, they stated in a broad and general way the powers which were to be exercised by this Government. They did not seek to give definitions. This bill seeks to give to the President the power to construct a railroad in the Territory of Alaska. It ought to be left to his wisdom and his judgment to determine the character of the road which he will advise.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FOWLER. I will.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman understand that this is a proposition for a trunk line, and that all five roads in Alaska, those that are operated and those that are not operated, are standard gauge?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not questioning what the President will do, but he ought not to be hedged about by definitions and limitations. If we are going to construct a railroad in Alaska, it ought to be done under wise provisions which can be reached by the President. To require him to construct any character of a railroad is to say to him, "We know in advance what kind of a railroad ought to be constructed; we know better than your engineers can find out; we know better than investigation will reveal, and therefore we say to you that you shall construct a railroad of a certain character."

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky prevails, it will give the President all the rights that are granted in the bill as it stands now. It will give him more rights than is stipulated in the bill now. It will leave to his judgment and his discretion and his wisdom, based upon evidence revealed by his investigations, as to the character of the road which ought to be built, and, Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOUSTON) there were 54 ayes and 27 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that the House refused to make the same amendment in line 5, page 10.

I ask unanimous consent that we make the same amendment in line 5, page 10, that we have in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to strike out the words "standard gauge" in line 5, page 10. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 6, strike out "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, this motion is to strike out 1,000 miles of railroad, as contemplated by this bill, and insert in lieu thereof 500 miles. I submit to this committee that we ought not to build or attempt to build more than one system of railroads. We ought not to build more than one line from the coast to the interior. There is no possible justification for any action further than that. If this committee decides, if the President shall decide, to build one line and to build it on the Chitina, Fairbanks, or Bering line, it will only require 483 miles of railroad. If we decide to build the Fairbanks-Seward-Matanuska line, it will only require 493 miles.

If we decide to build to that later-considered southern-coast harbor at Portage Bay, it will only require 441 miles of railroad. So that in any event the number of miles of railroad required to carry out every one of the specified objects of this bill can be brought within 500 miles, and the cost can be reduced from $35,000,000 down to $20,000,000. Is it of no consequence to gentlemen here that needlessly we appropriate for two systems when every object we seek to attain in the bill can be carried out by one line? Is it of no importance to gentlemen on the other side who are charged with the responsibility of this legislation that you spend $35,000,000 when you can carry out every object in the bill by an expenditure of $20,000,000? Is $15,000,000 worth saving to the Treasury and to the people? I favor the bill, but I want to see legislation passed which is defensible in the eyes of the world. Gentlemen on the other side who are going out on the stump this fall to defend their party against the charge of extravagance for needlessly expending $35,000,000 for this project, how are you going to meet the argument that every object that the bill contemplates can be carried out by an expenditure of only $20,000,000? This is not what you desire or expect. You do not want fragmentary beginnings of systems. You want something completed as a result of your action, and this is what the people expect and will approve. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask to have the following telegram read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks to have the following telegram read in his time. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 17, 1914.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The Board of Trade of Nashville, a union of organizations consisting practically of every business man in the city, by appropriate resolution passed, favors very strongly the building by the General Government of a trunk line of railway in Alaska as the best and only wise means of developing, for the benefit of the whole people of the country, the proven wealth of that Territory, and, as far as may be consistent, respectfully urges you to support that measure.

E. S. SHANNON, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "proper," line 7, page 12, the following: "Provided, That the price to be paid in case of purchase shall in no case exceed the actual physical value of the road based on the cost of reproduction less depreciation."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer, as the committee probably knows, is taken from the Senate bill verbatim, and the purpose of the amendment is that in case of purchase of these existing roads the price shall be limited to the actual physical value of the road based upon the cost of reproduction less depreciation.

Now, those of the committee who have read the hearings carefully upon this bill are aware of the fact that in the case of the Alaskan Northern Railroad particularly it is not now in operation; that the present owners claim that it cost between five and six million dollars to build it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman if that would not be taken as a criterion of the cost of reproduction?

Mr. LENROOT. It is not to exceed that.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be taken by the court as a criterion? Are any of these roads now worth the cost of reproduction?

Mr. LENROOT. No; they are not.

Mr. MANN. We do not want to pay the cost of reproduction, it seems to me. I ask the gentleman's opinion about it. It seemed to me that that might be taken by a jury, if not by the court, as a criterion upon which to base a verdict. Of course it would give the railroads an opportunity to make that claim.

Mr. LENROOT. If I thought the contention of the gentleman were correct, I would not favor the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I know that; but I ask the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. LENROOT. It is my opinion it does not, and the only thing the amendment does is to fix a maximum beyond which the President will not be authorized to go in making the purchase, and there is this in the situation: There will be equitable considerations urged upon the President with reference to the purchase of these roads as to the amount of money that went into the roads and the very heavy initial cost, and the claim will be made that the Government itself, through the withdrawal of coal lands, very greatly prejudiced these railroad companies and thereby rendered the value of their railroads very much less than they would have been had it not been for such action on the part of the Government. In addition to that, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested a short time ago that when we locate a railroad from the terminus of either one of these roads, going on to the Yukon, the danger there is of adding value to the property of the roads, and the railroad companies ought not to be able to make such a claim with reference to the purchase, that not one dollar should be added to the purchase price of these roads by reason of anything that the Government may do in the way of constructing railroads, from either the present terminus of the Alaska Northern or from Chitina.

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether it would be practicable to say that the cost of the road should not exceed the present actual value, or the actual value exclusive of franchises, or something of that sort. I do not think they are worth 50 cents on the dollar on the cost of reproduction.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree with the gentleman that they are not worth 50 cents on the dollar on the cost of reproduction, and I think the Government has a perfect right to take those roads at what they are worth to-day, even though they be worth but 25 cents on the dollar of what they cost, because in both cases—the Copper River road and the Alaskan road—they were built as a part of a conspiracy, attempting to secure control of the coal lands in Alaska belonging to the Government of the United States, and, therefore, there are no equitable considerations whatever that should have any bearing on the purchase price of these railroads by the Government.

If the amendment that I have suggested does not reach it, I should favor some other amendment; but my own opinion is that it only fixes a maximum beyond which the President will not be permitted to go. It is a declaration of policy on the part of Congress to the President that he shall not entertain these considerations that will be urged upon him, which under other circumstances might properly appeal to him. It would relieve the President of that and will enable him to stand on a proposition that he will pay for these railroads just exactly what they are worth to-day, regardless of what they may have originally cost.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, that amendment makes the bill conform to a like provision in the Senate bill. I see no reason why a different rule should be applied to fixing the value of this property than is ordinarily applicable in valuing any property. If the amendment had been made so that it applied to condemnation, it would be clearly unconstitutional, because the United States Supreme Court has passed on that proposition, and the law was settled in the case of the Monongahela Navigation Co. against United States. In that case a bill had been passed which provided for the taking of certain steamships, but which contained a proviso that in valuing those steamships nothing should be allowed for the franchise.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman whether if we build on to the Yukon that would not give added value to this road, which would be considered by any jury?

Mr. OGLESBY. I want to say to the gentleman that I do not agree with that proposition at all. If condemnation commissioners were appointed to fix the value of this road, they would have to take into consideration its value now, and whatever there may be of value in the potentiality of the unearned increment, it would have to be considered just the same, whether we have already laid out a line to connect with it or whether we have not. If this amendment prevails, it will mean that the President can not, in negotiating for the purchase of any road, take into consideration items of value which would have to be considered if it were being valued in a court of law.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the amendment be satisfactory if the latter part were stricken out, limiting it only to physical value, regardless of the cost of reproduction and depreciation?

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, my objection to the provision is that it attempts to set up a rule of value which is not recognized and never has been recognized by the court of the country. The cost of reproduction is not necessarily material. The first cost of the road is admissible as some evidence of value. If this amendment should prevail, here would be the situation: The President would be required to limit the price to the physical valuation of the road, based on the cost of reproduction, less depreciation, which would mean that he would have to have experts giving opinions as to the cost of construction and giving opinions as to the amount of depreciation, and when he got through there is no means of determining their accuracy. It could not be a mathematical calculation. You will have tied the President down to a rule of value which no one could ever say he had exactly complied with. You would leave him in a position where anyone who had the right might bring action to compel cancellation of the contract or to prevent the consummation of the purchase on opinion evidence. One engineer might fix the value as so much and another might say that it would not cost more than half that much. One engineer would say the depreciation was twice what another engineer would estimate such depreciation to be. So you are really fixing here a rule of valuation which the President would be required to follow and which is not capable of being followed with any degree of accuracy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify my amendment by striking out after the words "physical value"; in other words, strike out "based upon cost of reproduction less depreciation."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin to modify his amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment reported as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported as amended. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment as amended was reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Wisconsin offered the amendment, although I do not feel certain it ought to be adopted. That provision is now in the Senate bill, and in any case will go into conference, where I think, after the expression of opinion in the House, the conferees would endeavor to reach an agreement in some way. Of course, I do not think we ought to pay more than the physical valuation of these railroads. I do not think we ought to pay anything like what the physical valuation is, if it is taken on the basis of what it would cost to reproduce them. If the language is left out of the bill and these railroads have any physical value, it is a matter of speculation by gentlemen who constructed them; they took their chance on the matter. They gambled on the question, and the railroads did not turn out what they thought they would turn out. They say it is the fault of the Government. Well, they gambled on what the Government would do.

If they had had their way about it, the railroads would have been, possibly, very valuable in connection with the mines in Alaska. Now they have lost; they have property up there which is practically worthless as it stands, and I can see no reason in the world why the Government should pay a fancy value for the property, or even why the Government should pay anything like what it would cost to reproduce the property. I think we all know we will operate those railroads in Alaska for some years, and possibly forever, at a loss. I am in favor of making the experiment, but I am not in favor, under any conditions, of trying to replace the loss which these gentlemen have made by building railroads up in Alaska. I do not think we ought to pay anything more for them than they are really worth—not worth to us, but worth to them—without regard to anything else, and they are not worth much.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. If I have time, I will yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he does not think it wise for Congress to declare, so far as it can, the policy that the gentleman has just suggested, which I am heartily in favor of?

Mr. MANN. I think it wise, whether this amendment prevails or not. That provision being in the Senate bill, if it goes into conference, the conferees on the part of the House ought to either accept what is in the Senate bill or arrange the language in such a way as to absolutely protect the Government from paying a fancy price, or from the President being tempted by influences which might surround him, regardless of his incorruptibility, and force him to pay a larger amount than ought to be paid.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the amendment was again reported.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, the patron of this amendment, what his language means? What is the present physical value of a road that can not now and never will be operated, save with the consent of the Government.

Mr. LENROOT. It means to limit the elements of value that may be taken into consideration. It eliminates from consideration the question of franchise; it eliminates the question of good will, the value of the railroad by reason of its being a going concern and makes it the actual physical value.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What is the present physical value of a road that has been constructed, say at an immense cost, and yet which can not be operated owing to present legislation? What is the physical value of the land in the dumps, and of the excavations on the line of the road? Of course it is the amount that these dumps and excavations, would bring, if put for sale at public auction. Under these conditions of sale, these dumps and cuts are practically valueless.

Mr. LENROOT. The present physical value, in my judgment, is exactly what those physical things are worth laid where they are. Now, that is my judgment about it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then the land that has been taken out of the excavations, and put in the dumps has no value? That is what I am trying to bring out. The effect of this amendment, if it is reasonably construed, is to render valueless the railroad proposed to be taken.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not seen the Senate amendment. It might throw some light on the subject.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was asking the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to explain the meaning of his amendment. I have not seen the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. It might throw some light on it, because it is exactly the same as the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], followed by "based on the cost of reproduction less depreciation."

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is not in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MANN. It was in the gentleman's amendment, and he struck it out.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is apparent that an open cut in Alaska, or that dirt removed from that cut and put into a dump, has no physical value. If offered for sale on the ground, these physical elements will bring nothing.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not connected with the railroad itself. Here is a 72-mile railroad, and that dump has value as a part of that railroad.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes it has value, with reference to the road in operation. But as I understand your amendment, you have absolutely excluded from consideration every element except the value on the ground of the physical contents of your dumps, and the value of the cuts that were excavated in the process of construction.

Mr. LENROOT. The physical property as a railroad, whatever it may be.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is not the same thing.

Mr. LEVY. Do you believe it is fair to confiscate the property of these people?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No. I do not. That is exactly what I am trying to point out. This amendment is confiscation.

Mr. LEVY. They went up there and were prevented from improving Alaska by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am trying to point out, Mr. Chairman, to the committee, that according to any rational meaning that may be attributed to this amendment, it practically takes property proposed to be taken without compensation.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do.

Mr. WINGO. What other element of value ought they to take into consideration when they come to pay for these roads?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am trying to ascertain what the words "physical value," mean, as used in this amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He did not catch my question. My question was, What do you regard as the elements, other than physical value, that should be taken into consideration and paid for?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The word "value" would carry a very much larger meaning. I am anxious to have some friend of this amendment tell me what physical valuation will mean as applied to the dumps and cuts proposed to be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, can we have some agreement as to the time when this amendment can be voted on? I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] may proceed for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. In response to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say, that when it is proposed to acquire this road by condemnation, we should consider the use to which it is intended to be put, and its value to the Government. Ought the Government to take a road that may have cost millions, and that may be worth millions to the Government as a part of its system, merely for what the roadbed will bring, if sold at public auction? The physical road, is the open cuts, and the material in the dumps. What is their value, if you eliminate the use to which the road may be put by the United States, when it proceeds to establish a complete system of roads in Alaska, of which this road shall be a part?

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is aware that the term "physical value" has been construed by courts a great many times as having several elements. One is the original cost of the property to be considered, another the cost of production as well as construction. There are several of these elements, and all this amendment does is to limit it to the physical value of the railroad.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If that be true, why has the gentleman stricken from his amendment, language that would have included these elements?

Mr. LENROOT. I included only one of them, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested that the physical value of the property might be less than contemplated in the amendment I first offered.

Mr. SAUNDERS. As an offhand proposition, I would not undertake to say to this committee what the various courts of the Union have, or have not declared, as to the meaning of the words "physical value" in this connection, but according to the decisions of my own State, I do not think this language would include these elements. And it was for that reason, and because I attached their ordinary, everyday meaning to the use of the word "physical" in this connection, that I oppose this amendment. It proposes to render this entire property valueless. The physical elements are, as I have said, the dirt on the dumps, and the open cuts excavated in the progress of the work. I maintain that these things per se, considered without reference to their use as a part of the proposed system of Government roads, have no value.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is familiar with the physical-valuation bill passed by Congress last year, and that very thing, physical valuation, is one element considered by itself that the commission must find, and in addition there may be franchise values and good-will values, and other elements of value in another division, and the same thing is true with reference to this, but we will cut out the good-will and the franchise values.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Those elements in connection with a going railroad have a very different value. I can understand the physical value of a building in a city, which is in every-day use, but take the same material out of which it is constructed, and transport the same to a mountain top, a thousand miles from civilization, and those materials will practically have no value if offered for sale. This is the distinction that I have been trying to develop in connection with this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has expired.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, this whole discussion has demonstrated the fact that this yardstick which you call "physical value" is a very uncertain standard by which to fix value.

My own information is that the standard is differently construed in different court jurisdictions, and I know of no greater trouble that has been experienced by this Government in recent legislation than in its attempts to have a proper physical valuation of the railroad properties in this country made.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], with its indefinite legal language, is incorporated as a part of this bill, the practical result, in my judgment, will be that the President will be unable to purchase any railroad in Alaska which may be required to carry out the object of this measure, and he will inevitably be forced to condemnation proceedings; and if he be forced to condemnation proceedings because he is unable to purchase in advance the effect will be that the very elements of value which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] does not want to be considered will have to be considered in the courts; and the franchises of the railroads and their good will will have to be computed as component elements of their value in acquiring title to their property.

Mr. Chairman, the principle of this bill is that the President should be unhampered in the power to secure railroad property in Alaska that may seem necessary and advisable. It may be—and the friends of this measure think it is likely—that there will be no concern for the purchase of any other railroad in Alaska except the Alaska Northern, which goes from Seward to a point 72 miles into the interior. That railroad at present, I take it, has little value. While it starts somewhere, it goes nowhere. I think it highly likely that the owners of that property would be very glad to sell it to the United States. I think it may be that the Government will desire to acquire it. If that is so, the President, under the circumstances that exist, ought to be able to negotiate a very satisfactory purchase.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman says this railroad 72 miles long is worthless, as I understood him?

Mr. WATSON. Under present conditions.

Mr. GORDON. Then, would the gentleman see any objection to forbidding the President to pay for any franchise value in the purchase of that road?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, if the President could be told in explicit terms what elements he should consider when he contemplated the purchase of this road, I can see no objection to it, from a legal standpoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. I asked a question of the gentleman from Virginia a while ago, and I would be interested in having his answer to it. I would like to ask him if he thinks it would be proper for the President to pay the present owners of those railroads anything for supposed franchise values? Does the gentleman think we should do that?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, I could answer that, Mr. Chairman. I think that in these condemnation proceedings you ought to have reasonable regard for the utility of what these people have done for the United States.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I wanted the gentleman to answer my question as to whether or not he thinks the President should pay them anything for the franchises.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know that I do.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think he ought to pay them anything for the fact that it is a going concern?

Mr. SAUNDERS. You can not go into the elements of argument here as to condemnation proceedings, but I think the United States ought to have regard reasonably to the utility of this road for its own purposes.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has answered my question.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. With pleasure.

Mr. LEVY. Does not the gentleman know that it is claimed that the railroads were ruined by the withdrawal of the coal lands by the United States?

Mr. WINGO. O my friend——

Mr. LEVY. Does not the gentleman know the railroads were the forerunners of opening up Alaska, but were ruined by the conservation policy of the Government?

Mr. WINGO. I can not stop to answer that. The gentleman is still "harping upon my daughter," and I do not know anything about the "ruining" proposition he is talking about.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] that there is not a uniformity in the proceedings of the courts in the different States as to what elements of value are taken into consideration in condemnation cases. If there is any one question on which the different courts of the Union are agreed, it is that one question. The elements are very plain. Most of them have been enumerated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. If the gentleman wishes to pay something for franchise value, I can not understand his viewpoint. If he wishes to pay something in the way of recognition of its value because it is a going concern, or, as he says, its "utility value," I can not understand his position, for he admits that it is worthless.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield now. If he wishes to pay something for its good will when it has no good will, I can not understand the gentleman's viewpoint. If you eliminate those, and one other minor consideration, which will not enter into the valuation of a railroad, then you have left nothing to consider except the element set out by the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is pending here goes to the crux of the situation, and that is that they shall not unload upon the United States these properties which they say are worthless at any other valuation than their physical value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I understood that a minute was left. There is a suggestion I wanted to make.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "physical," so as to make the amendment as amended read: "Provided, That the price to be paid in case of purchase shall in no case exceed the actual value of the railroad."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOUSTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and the Chairman announced—ayes 33, noes 23.

Mr. LEVY. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members present, a quorum.

Mr. HOUSTON. What was the result, Mr. Chairman? I did not understand the result of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes were 33 and the noes were 23, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. WINGO Mr. Chairman, is it not too late to demand tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not. The Chair thinks it had not been announced before.

Mr. WINGO. I submit, if the Chair will recall, that he did announce it, and after he had announced it the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] made the point of no quorum, based upon the announcement of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not made the announcement, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] made the point of no quorum. The Chair did announce it afterwards, and he thinks technically the gentleman from Arkansas may be correct.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order, then, that it is too late.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, we were trying to hear what the announcement was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from Tennessee had understood the announcement.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not understand that there had been an announcement of the result.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to the point of order. In the Committee of the Whole, the Chair does not endeavor by any undue expedition to head off a Member who is in good faith trying to keep up with a situation, and make the appropriate motion. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] was endeavoring to ascertain the precise parliamentary status, intending to make a motion. Because somebody was a little more expeditious on his feet and having secured recognition from the Chair, made a point of no quorum does not, under our usual procedure, deprive the gentleman from Tennessee of the right to make the demand that he has preferred. I submit that the gentleman from Tennessee has not been dilatory. He was in time to make his motion, and the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the further point that if we are to run on strict technicality the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] did not make his point until after the demand for tellers was had and the House was dividing to see if a sufficient number would second the demand.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the whole matter may very easily rest on the facts. After the vote had been taken by a standing vote, the Chair announced that the ayes were 33 and the noes 23. Then was the time when the gentleman could have demanded tellers; but before he had the opportunity to demand tellers, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] made the point of order that no quorum was present. The Chair had not said, "The ayes have it." The Chair had said, "The ayes are 33 and the noes are 23." The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] then made the point of no quorum. That stopped everything until the presence or absence of a quorum was determined. Immediately upon the presence of a quorum being determined, the Chair again stated the vote—33 and 23—and thereupon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] demanded tellers. I submit that he was in time.

Mr. MANN. Clearly so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist on his point of order?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; and I should like to be heard, both upon my point of order and upon the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I will notice that first. He says I was too late because the House was dividing for tellers. I do not understand what he means by that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not say that; and that is the reason the gentleman could not understand it.

Mr. WINGO. Immediately upon the gentleman from Tennessee demanding tellers I rose, and had made my point of order before any question had been raised at all. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is wrong in his statement of fact, because I was anticipating exactly the situation that exists and was watching it, and declined to be interrupted by my friend from Virginia. The facts are these: That when the division was had the Chair stated the ayes are so many, the noes are so many, and the amendment is adopted. That is the language the Chair used. Then the gentleman from

New York made the point of no quorum. Afterwards the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] arose and inquired of the Chair if he had announced the result. The reason he did so was because his attention was diverted, and he did not hear the Chair announce the result originally. I submit that my point of order should be sustained, and I insist on it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word. The point I make is this, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] requested tellers, and the Chair asked those favoring tellers to rise. Then it was, after the House was dividing to see whether it would order tellers, that the gentleman from Arkansas made his point of order. If he is going to make this whole matter depend on the question of minute divisions of time, I insist he is too late.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Kentucky was in the rear of the Hall at the time I rose and made the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but it is also a fact that I heard from the rear of the Hall.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not undertake to say that I did not immediately rise when the demand for tellers was made and make the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I must say this, that in my judgment the gentleman did not make the point of order until after the Chair was counting to ascertain whether there was a second to the demand for tellers.

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. Just a moment. Under the rule of strict practice, which never has been followed, when a vote is announced and a gentleman desires to object to it because of lack of a quorum he would say that he objected to the vote because there was no quorum present; but making the point of no quorum immediately when a vote is announced takes the place of that in the universal practice of the House. In this case the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] made the point of no quorum immediately after the vote was announced, at the time the point is usually made. No other business could be transacted by the House until the Chair had ascertained the presence of a quorum. Thereupon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asked whether the announcement had been made, and asked for tellers. It is the universal practice of the Chair under such circumstances to take the sense of the House as to ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] was negligent in making his demand. Technically the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] may be correct, but in view of the fact that the Chair wishes to see justice done, he overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Arkansas. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment reported. A good many gentlemen do not understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asks unanimous consent that the amendment be reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment again, as follows:

Amend, by inserting after the word "proper," in line 7, page 12, the following:

"Provided, That the price to be paid in case of purchase shall in no case exceed the actual physical value of the railroad."

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise. Evidently a sufficient number, and tellers are ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. LENROOT and Mr. HOUSTON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 56 ayes and 39 noes.

During the division and before the announcement of the vote, Mr. LEVY made the point of no quorum, and then withdrew it.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is read, I desire to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 40 minutes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I shall object to that at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that all debates on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 30 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. What would be the status of amendments not yet offered?

The CHAIRMAN. They can be offered but not debated.

Mr. WINGO. They could be offered if a Member could get the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that amendments can be offered, but they can not be debated after 30 minutes. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennesee.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the period in line 15, page 12, and inserting a colon, and inserting the following as a proviso: "Provided, That in carrying out the provisions of this act no part of the appropriation herein made shall be expended by the President in the construction of a railroad or railroads in Alaska until the Government has acquired and has in operation a line of steamships from the ports on the coast of the United States to tidewater in the Territory of Alaska, so that all tools, machinery, and material used in the construction of said railroad or railroads may be transported to the Territory of Alaska in Government-owned vessels."

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, that a proposition to purchase steamships is not germane to the bill.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, upon that proposition I think it would be well for the gentleman to examine the rules. It is germane because it is in aid of the very purpose of this bill. It is absolutely imperative, from the testimony in the hearings, that if a railroad is constructed in Alaska the tools and materials with which it is to be constructed must be transported from tidewater in continental America or some foreign country to the tidewater in the Territory of Alaska. It is germane upon that question; and if that is the only point of order, I say that the point of order, in my judgment, is not well taken, because it is in aid of and amendatory to the method and manner of constructing the road. It is as essential that we have steamships to transport the tools and materials to construct the railroad as it is to construct the railroad, because the Government will have to pay the transportation. We know that privately owned steamship companies plying between continental United States and Alaska are expecting to reap a harvest from the Government in the way of freights to transport this material and machinery.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to take up any great length of time on this amendment. My position is that we are starting out on a great enterprise that is an experiment on behalf of the United States. In constructing this railroad, if this bill becomes a law, all of the material must be transported from the United States to the Territory of Alaska, or we must purchase the material in a foreign country and transport it to the Territory of Alaska. My contention is that the greater part of the tools and machinery that will be used in the construction of that road will be taken from the United States, and that the greater part of the material will be purchased in the United States and taken to the Territory of Alaska.

Under the testimony in the hearings it is 1,000 to 1,400 miles from the nearest port in continental America to tidewater in Alaska. There are privately owned steamship companies plying between the Territory and the United States, and if this provision or some other provision that will so aid the Government in transporting the machinery and material to construct that railroad is not adopted the United States will be the loser. If we had the ships to carry the material, it would materially reduce the expenses of the Government in the construction of this road in Alaska.

Of course I am aware that if a provision of this kind will go into the RECORD, there will be telegrams coming to different Members of the House from every port in the United States on the Pacific coast by privately owned steamship companies and commercial clubs protesting against this provision, because this bill is expected to aid their friends who have the privately owned steamship to get the pay for transporting the tools and materials. We had an instance of this kind this morning which amused me very much. My friend from Tennessee, Mr. SIMS, introduced a telegram from a commercial body in that beautiful and elegant city of Nashville, where my friend BYRNS lives, urging that they vote for this bill. I suppose Nashville expects to take part in that celebration.

I believe that an amendment similar to this should be adopted. The Government has ships turned over from the Panama Railroad Co. that have been doing Government work in carrying material for the construction of the Panama Canal. I do not believe we ought to commit ourselves soul and body to the privately owned steamship companies along the Pacific coast.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, if there was anything left to demonstrate the inconsistency of my friend from Oklahoma, he has certainly supplied it. The gentleman from Oklahoma did not want to launch the Government into private enterprise.

We think it is without an economic leg on which to stand—said the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] in his minority report. That report continues:

We think that it is a dream, beautiful to look upon but unsound at the core; that it does not square with our pledges to the people for economy; that it is unworkable, unreal, and based on false assumption.

The gentleman now comes forward, after having proposed an amendment here to compel the Government to operate the road, and not lease it, which, according to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], developed an inconsistency, and he now proposes to launch steamships and transports and big ocean vessels, and turn those vessels into carrying freight up there to the Alaska railroad for its construction, thus negativing all that he has ever said and every position that he has ever taken, even to the particular technical term of launching. He is now a thorough advocate of launching. As far as I am concerned, I would like to see the Government own ships up there just as the Government's Panama Railroad Co. owns and operates ships; but I do not believe in putting an amendment on this bill that prohibits any movement or step being taken in connection with the construction of the railroad until the Government builds these ships, and then to transport tools and supplies for the railroad only, and does this launching that the gentleman has so strenuously and earnestly opposed heretofore.

The amendment is not proposed with a view to helping out in the construction of the railroad, but, as its very terms indicate, it seeks to postpone and harass the construction of the railroad. If the gentleman can not kill it, he would like to postpone it. I think that this is not a sincere amendment, and I can cheerfully oppose it, although I would like to see the Government own steamboat transportation from Seattle and Pacific ports to Alaska, and I believe we will own and operate boats out there in time, but that result will be accomplished in spite of the gentleman who really is opposed to the plan.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, replying to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN], I do not know whether this is a sincere amendment or not, but I think it is a wise one. We have here a proposition that the Government shall borrow $35,000,000 and deposit it in a great snow bank up in Alaska and pay 3 per cent per annum cold storage on it. There ought at least to be some means of reaching the bank and using the deposit or withdrawing it. A great many of us would like to vote for this proposition, especially that feature of it which seems to respond to the national demand to develop the coal fields for the Government's use. That the Government may obtain coal on the Pacific coast is the great recommendation for the Alaska railroad, and I am not certain but that it is the only one yet entitled to serious consideration. However, pessimistic reading of American future has not often added to the reputation of prophets——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman made an examination of the test submitted by the department of this coal in Alaska?

Mr. SLOAN. I have read what other gentlemen have said about the tests. Of course, I do not think it is as good coal as the carboniferous ages deposited down in Quakerdom.

Mr. BUTLER. Where is that?

Mr. SLOAN. It is where the gentleman and his ancestors located.

Mr. BUTLER. There is not a pound of coal there except what we buy and pay for. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Well, we have paid a very large price for something they said was Pennsylvania coal, and perhaps we have been imposed upon.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman got good stuff when he paid for it, too.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, if we now invest an additional $35,000,000 in Alaska, it means a probable investment later of several times that amount. If we invest that much in Alaska under Government ownership and control, we ought to have means under the Government control and Government ownership to complete the link between our western coast and that Alaska railroad. To do that, I think it is proper at this time to make provision for the establishment of lines of steamships or to utilize those that we have already, so that we may have a unit and not a part of a transportation system for the mineral wealth or the possible agricultural wealth of Alaska.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware that the Government vessels that now carry freight to Panama and Colon charge more than private steamships?

Mr. SLOAN. Whether they do or not, they are the Government's property, and the Government may control them and fix the price.

This proposed toy of the President may prove an expensive one to the country. If there were to-day any other fairly good proposition for opening up Alaska and reaching its wealth in the interests of the people and the Government, I should be glad to support it; but with the groove into which Alaskan legislation has been directed and in which it now runs we are obliged to vote not for what would, in our judgment, be wisest, but it means this legislation or nothing for four years.

This might be neither final nor conclusive, but it appears that there are coal deposits in Alaska and practically none elsewhere in our country on the Pacific coast. Our foreign relations are, unfortunately, in such a condition that the appeal of the administration becomes temporarily, at least, almost imperative. I supported in this committee an amendment to confine the present governmental investment into a road reaching from the coast to the coal fields, which would have reduced the costs more than one-half; but $35,000,000 is to be invested, in the face of a depleting Treasury and increasing appropriations. The general fund of our Treasury is now the lowest it has been in years. As this stands it amounts to an investment of $35,000,000 to build a railroad into a country containing only 35,000 white people, or an investment of $1,000 by the Government for every white person in Alaska.

A great deal has been said about the agricultural possibilities of Alaska, which we are obliged to leave as a still open question of debate. The gentleman from Alaska and the Members who reside upon Puget Sound tell racy tales of the agricultural products of our great northern possession. They would endeavor to convince us that the Equator is seized by the warm currents of the Pacific and bent up into the latitude of Alaska, carrying with it almost a tropic clime, with consequent tropic productions, producing cereals, fruits, and forestry in profusion. On the other hand, the Oklahoma group insist that the frost is deeper than the political prejudice of a Georgia Democrat and that the very volcanoes instead of emitting fire and lava belch forth great streams of liquid air.

Perhaps the true condition lies somewhere between. I note an agreement upon the fact that it is in nearly the same latitude and has quite a similar climate to the great Scandinavian peninsula of Europe. I also note and am somewhat swayed in my judgment by the general support given this bill here on the floor of the House by the descendants of that hardy, brave, and enterprising northern race. Their arguments seem to minimize the frigid features of our great American peninsula of the North.

I should feel constrained to favor any bill designed to build up a vigorous and intelligent citizenship in Alaska. If that climate is, though severe at times, of a general temperate character, there is opportunity for our people to build up there a great citizenship. If we should be able to people that vast domain with a race similar to the Scandinavians, who have done so much for the upbuilding of continental America, it should meet with general favor.

Looking over that part of our continental section where snows are deep and winters long; where our greatest water traffic is conducted; where the greatest railroads are; where finest farms have been carved out of treeless plains, congested forests, and forbidding swamps; where great cities and prosperous villages are numerous and schools and universities many; where home comforts are multiplied; where intelligence abounds; where thrift is exemplified; where political independence is most prominent; where God-fearing people with a record for achievement, with faces and ambitions set toward the future live, this is the land where people love liberty, enforce justice, and themselves obey the law. Here we find in the forefront the Swede, Norwegian, and Dane, together with the other great northern European peoples, loyal to American institutions, bent on perpetuating them and making America what it should be, a blessing to all mankind.

Of these many live in my section, State, and district, each of which is the better for that fact. They are the descendants of the Vikings, the first discoverers of our continent; a people who with the Irish and Germans built our railroads and now own them; who gave us many of our soldiers in the time of war; who gave us Erickson, who in turn gave the North the Monitor, which turned the tide of war in favor of the Union. It is a race that gave to modern times its sweetest singer, produced great modern poets and philosophers, and has furnished us many of the leading men of the Nation in Congress and out of it. May not the future again demonstrate that a race living under the stimulus of a severe climate, spurring the energies of all to life, activity, and progress, in the generations to come through strong bodies and clear minds of Alaskan citizenship work important results in the economy of the world and welfare of mankind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma does not propose to secure a line of steamships to engage in general commerce between Alaska and the Pacific coast. It proposes that the Government shall acquire these ships so that all tools, machinery, and material used in the construction of this railroad shall be transported to Alaska by Government-owned vessels. So the amendment is not so ambitious as the plan which has been commended by gentlemen on the other side. It simply proposes that the tools which shall be transported from the Isthmus of Panama to Alaska shall go in Government-owned ships. Gentlemen know full well that the Government already owns, or rather the Panama Railroad Co. owns, two steamships of the character required and leases two more. There are also countless transports belonging to the Government of the United States which can carry this material without encumbering the President with the necessity of acquiring new ships.

Mr. Chairman, the zeal felt for the fate of this measure by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] is interesting. He not only desires to apply the principle of Government ownership of transportation lines to the mainland, but wants to extend it to the waters of the sea. When I recall the fact that three weeks ago he was before this committee insisting upon his opposition to the launching of the Federal Government into private enterprise, for the reason that he did not believe it belonged properly to the functions of a republican government, I am disposed to flatter the committee with the suggestion that they must have converted the gentleman from his views in the past, and upon the fact that he is now not only willing to accept the principle of Government ownership of railroads on the mainland, but is ready to go to the uttermost parts of the sea to exploit his new principle.

There is no need for this amendment. The Government already has ships to transport tools, and I sincerely hope that the committee will vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOWLER). The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it is the intent and purpose of Congress through this act to authorize and empower the President of the United States, and he is hereby fully authorized and empowered, through such officers, agents, or agencies as he may appoint or employ, to do all lawful acts and things in addition to those specially authorized in this act necessary to enable him to accomplish the purposes and objects of this act: Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to withdraw, locate, and dispose of, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, such area or areas of the public domain along the line or lines of such proposed railroad or railroads for town-site purposes as he may from time to time designate.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out all after the word "that," in line 7, page 13, down to and including the word "empower," in line 8, page 13, and insert the word "be" between the word "States" and the comma in line 9, so that the paragraph will read as follows:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, fully authorized and empowered."

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, the intent of that amendment is to cut out the following language, which now reads as follows:

That it is the intent and purpose of Congress through this act to authorize and empower the President of the United States, and he is hereby fully authorized and empowered.

It will cut out this, "the intent and purpose of Congress through this act to authorize and empower," and therefore it is not necessary to say what is the intent of the act, because if that language should go in as amended it would give him specific power without saying what was the intent of Congress, and we must absolutely judge our intent by our acts. If we empower him to do a thing, there is no necessity of carrying the language in there, in my judgment, that we intend to do what we empower him to do. That is why I offer the amendment.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman vote for the bill if the amendment is adopted?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to say, if the gentleman thinks it will gratify him in any way by my answering the question, that unless there are a great many more amendments to the bill than now, I will not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], but I had intended to offer at this place an amendment providing for the leasing of the coal lands in Alaska; but I have concluded not to do so, first, because I do not care to take up the time of the committee in the discussion of the point of order which would undoubtedly be made, and secondly because I do not think it would be possible at this time to get a fair and unbiased consideration of such an amendment. The Committee on the Public Lands is now considering a bill which is intended to provide for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska. I have been assured by Members of that committee that it is the intention of that committee to press that legislation. I have some doubt whether such legislation will ever be written on the statute books if it is not written on the statute books in connection with this bill, and yet realizing that it would be utterly impossible for me to secure the adoption of an amendment providing for leasing because of the lack of time to consider it I shall not offer it.

I simply want to suggest to gentleman who do not believe in private ownership of coal lands in Alaska that in allowing this bill to become a law or to pass the House without a leasing amendment they are taking pretty desperate chances in securing such legislation in the future. My fear is that after this bill becomes a law it will be impossible to secure such legislation, and that we shall return to private ownership of coal land in Alaska and the very policy which lead to the withdrawals which in turn created the conditions that have been the basis of the excuse for offering this legislation. My belief is that if the bill passes without a leasing provision relative to coal lands that we will ultimately return in Alaska to the same condition of private ownership relative to which there has been so much agitation, largely political, in the last few years. I believe the bituminous and anthracite coal lands of Alaska ought to be leased and ought not to be in private ownership. If there was the slightest hope of securing an amendment to accomplish that result I should offer it at this time, but I do not offer it simply because I feel confident from what has been said here that it would not be adopted now and in this connection.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, public confidence in the Taft administration began to crumble early in its existence, due in no small part to the fact that the public lost faith in its Alaska policy as early as the fall of 1909. The public believed that the Secretary of the Interior under that administration was hostile to the Roosevelt conservation policies—the regulation of public lands and natural resources for the public good. This was particularly true of the coal fields and other resources of Alaska.

The public believed that Mr. Taft's Secretary of the Interior favored the turning of the Alaska resources over to private monopolies, and the administration suffered the loss of public confidence as a result; a loss from which, unfortunately, it never recovered. It would have been fortunate, indeed, had the Taft administration had a Secretary of the Interior who stood without question for the Roosevelt conservation policies.

The attitude of the public toward these policies of the Secretary of the Interior under Mr. Taft only gave emphasis to the public wishes.

The public wants something done toward the development, for public benefit, of the great Alaskan domain and its resources. From my five years' service on the Committee on Territories, during which time I have heard testimony as to conditions in Alaska many times over, I am convinced the only practicable way, for the present at least, is for the Government to open up that great country by the construction of a railroad from the ocean to the great valleys and rivers of the interior; that the only method that the people will tolerate is development, under governmental control, of the natural resources of the Territory. Unless it is undertaken, the country is destined to continue to be locked up for the next half century, as it has during our ownership of going on 50 years.

On principle I am opposed to governmental ownership and operation of railroads, but in Alaska special and unusual conditions exist that call for the construction of a Government road at this time, to be operated perhaps later on under a lease to private parties, if it can be so leased as to fully protect and serve the public interests, as provided for under this measure.

Within a few days this House has voted $25,000,000 to improve the highways in continental United States, ostensibly to improve the public service over these highways, but, in fact, it will result more especially in the enhancement of values of private property along the roads on which the money is expended.

In Alaska we will build a railroad over Government land, and thereby enhance the value of public property along that road. That great estate that the Government acquired from Russia in 1867 is worth developing. It has an area greater than all the New England States, an area nearly equal to one-fifth of the United States. It has a coast line as long as the coast line from Maine to Florida. It has a climate favorable to all conditions of life and all pursuits of mankind, and the appropriation of the sum called for by this measure in all probability will not in the end take from the United States Treasury a single dollar, as the amount that the Government will receive back from lands and resources through the development of the country in connection with this railroad will, under the provisions of this bill, fully repay all moneys called for in the bill.

In connection with the question that has often been raised on this floor as to the prospects for business along the proposed railroad, I call attention to the data that I find taken from the report of the Alaska Railroad Commission and other sources.

I wish to introduce in the record at this time some statistics taken from the report of the Alaska Railroad Commission in regard to the commerce of Alaska.

As throwing some light on the commerce of Alaska and its bearing as a freight-producing region, I wish to put in the record the last report of the collector of customs for Alaska, i. e., so much as precedes the collector's signature:

COMMERCE AND CUSTOMS BUSINESS OF ALASKA FOR THE CALENDAR YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1912.

UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Juneau, Alaska, January 31, 1913.

Although there was no material increase in the population of Alaska during the calendar year 1912, the commerce of the Territory broke all former records in almost every particular.

The total trade, valued at $72,741,060, is 27 per cent higher than that for any previous year. The balance of trade in favor of Alaska is the largest of record, amounting to almost $20,000,000.

Gold, which until recent years has constituted the bulk of the Territory's exports, though greater than for the two previous years, was 50 per cent less in value than the total of the other Alaskan products shipped to the United States and was exceeded by the single item of salmon—canned and otherwise preserved.

For the first time both the shipments of merchandise from the United States and from Alaska to the United States passed the twenty-million mark. The shipments to southeastern Alaska show an enormous increase and are more than double those of any one of the other three divisions. This increase was principally due to the establishment of 20 new salmon canneries throughout the division and the extensive development of mining properties in the Juneau district.

The following table shows the value of the real and transit commerce of the Territory. The imports and exports of foreign gold and most of the exports of merchandise to foreign ports represent the trade between the United States and the Yukon territory which passes through Alaska.

The articles enumerated in the following table are all of Alaskan origin, and the comparative figures are indicative of the growth and importance of the various industries of the Territory.

The value of furs shipped during the year includes the products of the Pribilof Islands and shipments by mail—a total of $300,003—not shown in the bureau's reports for the same period.

Owing to the fact that gold carried on the persons of travelers is not included in the returns made by this office, the value of precious metals reported shipped from the Territory is, as usual, slightly less than the amount shown by the Bureau of the Mint.

The Eagle and Dawson movement shows the local frontier travel, which must not be considered with the general account, as the greater number of those passengers arrived or departed from Ketchikan or St. Michael and have been accounted for in their returns.

All of the four divisions of Alaska show an increase over 1911 in the values of shipments received from the United States. Most of the unprecedented increase however, was due to the unusual industrial activities in southeastern Alaska, resulting in that division receiving 44 per cent of the entire amount shipped to the district, an advance of 75 per cent over the preceding year.

The tables following give the value of merchandise shipped to Alaska from the United States for the year 1912, segregated as to place of consignment, with comparative statements for five years, and general customs business transacted by ports.

J. R. WILLIS, Collector of Customs.

I wish also to have printed in the record an extract from Bulletin 442, of the United States Geological Survey, entitled "Mineral Resources of Alaska, 1909, by Alfred H. Brooks and others," and found on page 25 of the bulletin:

"In 1909 about 47,000 tons of freight was received at Nome, including merchandise, coal, lumber, and live stock, at a cost of about $660,000. The cost of freighting to the mines by coasting vessels and wagons in summer and by sleds in winter in different parts of Seward Peninsula varies from about $80 to $200 a ton in summer, and from about $3 to $50 a ton in winter. It appears that the average price paid for transportation in the peninsula is about $20 a ton. On the assumption that half the supplies landed at Nome are for the use of the miners, this will represent an additional freight charge of nearly half a million dollars. The total transportation charge on the supplies of Seward Peninsula will, then, be about $1,200,000, or nearly 30 per cent of the value of the entire gold output of the year.

"No exact figures are available in regard to the amount of freight annually shipped to the Alaska portion of the Yukon Basin, but it is probably safe to say that this amounts to 30,000 tons and that it costs over $2,500,000 to land it at the end of steamboat navigation. The mine freight must then be hauled by wagons or sleds, except at Fairbanks, where there is a railway. It is estimated that this haulage from steamers to mines for the Alaska Yukon costs from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000 a year. The total annual cost of freight for the Yukon Basin is therefore probably between $4,500,000 and $5,000,000, or nearly 50 per cent of the value of the entire gold output. It should be noted that these estimates of the cost of freight do not include any charge for the transportation of fuel, which is included in the similar figures already presented on the commerce of Seward Peninsula. In the Yukon Basin practically only wood is used, whereas Seward Peninsula depends almost entirely on coal brought from a distance."

The following are estimates of expected tonnage on various trunk lines proposed to be built by the pending bills:

CORDOVA-FAIRBANKS ROUTE.

Freight movements from Cordova to Fairbanks will be carried on the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co.'s tracks for 132 miles to the town of Chitina and over the proposed Chitina-Fairbanks line 313 miles to Fairbanks.

The average freight entering the Rampart-Fairbanks district during the last five years amounted to about 24,000 tons per year of all classes, the maximum in any one year being approximately 33,000 tons and the minimum 15,000 tons. Having in mind the increase in freight movement to be expected and the natural development of new territory following the construction of a railroad, the commission assumes that a line from Cordova to Fairbanks would carry, almost immediately, through freight at the rate of 45,000 tons of general merchandise northbound per year. The through southbound freight in sight is so very little as to be negligible for the purposes of this analysis. In addition to the through freight, it is estimated that coal mines will be operated in the Nenana lignite fields. This will involve the construction of a branch line from 30 to 50 miles in length, although it is at least possible that the Nenana coal may underlie certain territory through which the main line will be run. Without definite data, it is assumed that 30,000 tons of coal will be hauled an average distance of 20 miles on the main line and that 1,000 tons of local freight originating between Chitina and Richardson will be hauled an average of 150 miles. In round numbers, therefore, the annual freight ton-miles would amount to 15,000,000, or the equivalent of 50,000 tons of freight hauled over the entire 313 miles of line. It is assumed that there will be an annual through passenger traffic of about 10,000, or 3,000,000 passenger miles.

VALDEZ-FAIRBANKS ROUTE.

This route involves the use of no part of any existing railroad. Running in a northerly direction for 101 miles it reaches a point on the proposed location of the Chitina-Fairbanks route considered in the foregoing section. From thence to Fairbanks, 279 miles, the two routes would be identical.

The business which a railroad connecting these two termini might reasonably expect would be practically the same as in the case of Chitina and Fairbanks, with a small increase for local freight originating in the immediate vicinity of Valdez. For this study, therefore, the tonnage for the first five years of the road's existence is assumed to be as follows:

Tonnage.

	Tons.	Miles.
Through freight	45,000	380
Nenana coal	30,000	20
Local freight between Valdez and Richardson	2,000	150

In round numbers, 18,000,000 ton-miles, or the equivalent of 47,500 tons of freight, over the entire 380 miles of line. It is further assumed that there will be 10,000 through passengers annually, or 3,800,000 passenger-miles.

SEWARD-FAIRBANKS ROUTE.

Freight movements from the seacoast to Fairbanks over the Seward-Fairbanks route would be carried for 71.6 miles over the existing tracks of the Alaska Northern Railroad and from thence to Fairbanks, a distance of 391.4 miles, over the proposed Susitna Valley route to Fairbanks.

In the main, the tonnage expectancy of this route would be the same as that of the Cordova-Fairbanks line, previously considered, with an allowance for coal traffic originating in the Matanuska district. Were this road built and operated on a traffic agreement with the Alaska Northern, the opening of the coal fields would result in a coal tonnage from a branch line tapping the Matanuska district. The bulk of this coal movement would go southward to Seward, and therefore become a source of revenue mainly to the Alaska Northern Railroad. A part would undoubtedly be distributed in the Susitna Valley, but as the amount of this which could be counted upon for revenue would necessarily be small during the early part of the road's existence, it is only placed at 1,000 tons annually. The estimate of tonnage to be expected during the first five years following construction is, therefore, as follows:

	Tons.
Through freight, 301 miles	45,000
Nenana coal, 20 miles	30,000
Local freight, Susitna Valley, 150 miles	1,000
Local coal shipment, Susitna Valley, 150 miles	1,000

Total movement 18,500,000 ton-miles, or 47,000 tons of through-train haul. The passenger movement is estimated at 10,000 over the entire trackage, or 3,910,000 passenger-miles.

SEWARD-IDITAROD ROUTE.

Freight movements between the Iditarod district and Seward will be carried over the trackage of the Alaska Northern Railroad for 71.6 miles, thence over the proposed new line for approximately 344 miles.

Based upon such information as the commission was able to obtain concerning freight movements in this district in the year 1910–11, the following tonnage assumptions are made:

	Tons.
Through freight between Seward and McGrath, 344 miles new line, 72 miles Alaska Northern	15,000
Local freight, 100 miles	10,000
Coal, 230 miles	10,000
Coal, 120 miles	10,000
Coal, 30 miles	10,000

A total of 9,960,000 ton-miles, or 29,000 tons through-freight haul. In addition to this, it is assumed that there will be a through passenger traffic of 5,000 annually over the new line of 344 miles, or 1,720,000 passenger miles.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill. It would no doubt be a desirable, if not, indeed, a good thing, for the 35,000 white people in Alaska if this Government should decide to dump its millions into a railroad project in that frozen and unproductive section. In my opinion it would be an unwise and a wasteful thing so far as the United States is concerned. Those insisting upon this Alaskan railroad legislation are no doubt sincere in their support of the matter. We are equally as sincere in our opposition to it.

After hearing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] read the interview of Mr. Guggenheim on this subject I am convinced that back of this proposed legislation is a purpose on the part of the Guggenheims to unload their railroad and other poorly paying investments in Alaska onto the United States Government.

I agree with the view which the minority has presented through its report on this subject. It is estimated that to build this road in Alaska will cost the United States $35,000,000. The proposition in this bill is to issue bonds for $35,000,000 and to start the work by an initial payment of $1,000,000. It is the view of the minority report on this subject that it will cost at least a hundred million dollars before the project is completed. Those advocating the plan to commit the Government to this unwise proposition have advanced plausible arguments in its support. They tell us that it will open up the ice fields of frozen Alaska and that wonderful developments will follow. They tell us it will open up the coal fields of that country. It is plainly and ably pointed out in the minority report that we do not need the coal as badly as some seem to think. It is pointed out that the Geological Survey has developed the fact that we have in this country enough coal already located to supply the "Republic, the Navy, and the interior for 7,000 years to come."

The movement to build this Alaskan railroad at the expense of the taxpayers of this Government has been referred to as a dream. It is no dream. It is a cold-blooded proposition that will deliberately take anywhere from thirty-five to one hundred million dollars out of the Treasury of the United States, for which the people of the United States will get no substantial returns.

Even if what is claimed for Alaska were true, there is no justification for fastening upon the people of this country a bond issue of $35,000,000. It is our duty to guard the Treasury against unwise and unjust appropriations.

If the Government has $35,000,000 to spend, let it be spent for something that will result in great good to the people who will be taxed to pay these bonds. Those of us from sections of this country where drainage is needed have been pleading for Government aid; except in a limited way we have been denied aid in this important work.

It is a well-known fact that by draining the swamp and wet lands of the country we will serve a "triple purpose." First, it will reclaim millions of acres of fertile lands in our own country for cultivation; second, it will add to our annual productions; and, third, it will help to eliminate malaria and make our country more healthful.

This is only one of many objects to which Government funds could be applied with much greater profit to the people of this country than the Alaskan railroad. We allowed only $25,000,000 in the bill which we passed a few days ago for building and maintaining public roadways of the country. I believe in profitable internal improvements that make for the development of our country and will add to the happiness and prosperity of our people, such as public-roadway building, education, agricultural extension, and experiment work, such as contemplated in the Smith-Lever bill. These expenditures will make returns to the people who pay the taxes, but to legislate to build a railroad in Alaska will be an act for the "interests" and not for the people.

This Alaskan railroad scheme is a most unwise and unfair one. I raise my protest against it. I shall not consent for the people of this country to have fastened on them an immense bond issue with which to buy and build railroads on the ice fields of nonproductive Alaska. The people are looking to us to safeguard and protect the Treasury. When an expenditure is made the Government should get something in return. The people are entitled to "value received" when their tax money is spent. To pass this bill will mean, in my opinion, a willful and deliberate waste of public funds, for which Senators and Representatives will be held to strict account. I am opposed to this foolish expenditure of public funds and hope this bill will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. NEELY of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, many Members of this House, including myself, have had no sufficient opportunity to make original investigation as to the natural resources of Alaska, or to obtain first-hand information as to the feasibility of building a thousand miles of railroad through a region ordinarily thought of as a wonderland, perpetually wrapped in ice and snow. In these circumstances it became my duty to consider the best available hearsay evidence relevant to the question under consideration, preparatory to voting for or against this bill. To my mind, such evidence is contained in the majority report made by the Committee on Territories to accompany House bill 1739. This report discloses many interesting facts, to some of which I wish briefly to call attention. Alaska has an area of considerably more than half a million square miles—an area the extent of which, it may be observed, is somewhat out of proportion to the 10 minutes' time limit within which I am obliged to confine my remarks. The total cash disbursements made by this Government for Alaska since 1867, including the purchase price of the Territory, amount to less than $36,000,000; the Treasury of the United States has received in cash from Alaska during the same period of time more than $17,000,000; thus the United States is shown to have paid out for all purposes pertaining to Alaska less than $19,000,000 in excess of what has so far been received from this much-neglected domain.

Alaska's gold production from 1867 to 1911, inclusive, amounts to more than $195,000,000. Its fishery products for the same period of time amount to more than $147,000,000, and its production of fur-seal skins to more than $51,000,000. Alaska is preeminently a land of gold and fish and fur. The value of these items, added to the value of its various other productions since 1867, reaches a grand total of more than $429,000,000. Viewed from a mercenary standpoint, and this is the very lowest point of view, it would seem that an isolated and neglected Territory that has contributed almost half a billion dollars to the world's wealth in less than 50 years, without railways and without adequate means of transportation, deserves the initial expenditure of $35,000,000 provided in this bill. Does it not deserve the construction of a railroad that will develop almost unlimited resources which are at the present time beyond the reach of man? Alaska is said to have more tin than Wales, fornia and Colorado, and more coal than Ohio, Pennsylvania, more fish than all the rest of America, more gold than Cali- and West Virginia combined. In my judgment, this Government can invest $35,000,000 in nothing more profitable than a railroad that will make accessible coal fields more vast and valuable than those of West Virginia. It is conceded that this Alaskan coal, when reached by means of transportation, will be a source of prodigious wealth as an article of commerce in time of peace. It is obvious that naval activity would so increase the demand for this coal that it would lose none of its value in time of war. The only naval coal on the whole Pacific coast is found in the Territory of Alaska.

The only naval coal lands owned by this Government are situate in the Territory of Alaska. In order to make this coal available for use on our battleships and cruisers this railroad must be built to connect the interior with the sea. In order to provide for the naval defense of our thousands of miles of Pacific coast line in the event of an invasion, and in the absence of all other reasons, we would be more than justified in voting for the passage of this bill.

While many are skeptical as to the agricultural possibilities of Alaska, it is nevertheless a fact that European countries in the same latitude, with similar soil and with less than twice Alaska's area, support more than 11,000,000 people, who are engaged almost exclusively in agricultural pursuits.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARRISON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the other motion. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia have three minutes more, which will extend the time to 33 minutes on this paragraph and amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to disagree with the Chair, but I do not think there was any limitation on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that there was 30 minutes of debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. DAVENPORT. On the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That was done when the present occupant of the chair was absent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEELY of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, Sweden, in the same latitude, but with only one-third of Alaska's area, now has a population of about five and one-half millions. In 1907 the Swedes produced more than 1 bushel of wheat, 3 bushels of rye, 13 bushels of oats, and 10 bushels of potatoes per capita. I venture the observation that the obtainment of such favorable results as those just mentioned would be considered fairly successful farming by my distinguished friend, Mr. FERRIS, even in his own fertile State of Oklahoma.

If, in proportion to its area, Alaska shall hereafter be farmed half as successfully as Sweden has been, the freight on its agricultural products alone will, in no unreasonable length of time, reimburse us for our expenditure of public money to build this railroad.

Another cogent reason why Members on this side of the House should support this measure is found in the fact that the last Democratic national platform contains a declaration that is equivalent to a party promise to take some such action as that provided in this bill. Hear what our platform says:

> Immediate action should be taken by Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska, under conditions that will be a perfect guaranty against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations, or interests.

By this declaration we have clearly acknowledged that we owe Alaska the duty of making available its deposits of coal. The best means of discharging our admitted obligation are those specified in this bill. To vote for the pending measure is to vote for the redemption of another Democratic platform pledge.

Last, but by no means least, the President, in his message, delivered in this Chamber on the 2d day of last December, in most happily chosen language, recommended that the Government build and administer a system of railroads in Alaska as the first step toward the development of her tempting resources. Who is better qualified than the President to speak authoritatively on this or any other subject of public concern? Who in all the history of this country has ever been endowed with more profound wisdom or more penetrating and prophetic vision? Who has ever more skillfully and safely led or more faithfully and devotedly served a great people? In turn the people are accepting the words of Woodrow Wilson as the words of an oracle. They are following his footsteps as the Mussulman follows Mohammed. They are approving his official actions as the actions of a political Messiah. I believe that his voice is the people's voice, and I also believe in the good old Democratic doctrine that the people's voice is the voice of God. The President has conclusively proved his right to stand in the foremost rank of the greatest statesmen who have ever lived "in the tide of times." [Applause.]

When he insisted on an honest revision of the tariff, a hostile press predicted that he would destroy his party and ruin his country; but the Underwood tariff bill became a law, and the country is flourishing and prosperous; plutocracy has been exiled and to-day Democracy rules the land.

When the President demanded currency reform, the same hostile press promptly proclaimed that Democratic currency legislation would be followed by dire disaster and financial frenzy. But the Owen-Glass bill became a law, and the country is safe and sane. We have at last adopted a currency system to which all may point with pride and which all may view without alarm.

When the President alleged that the Capitol had been infested with an insidious lobby his political enemies ridiculed his assertion and mocked in glee and laughed with scorn; but the testimony before the lobby investigating committee proved that the President was right and that the scoffers all were wrong. Recommendations from the other end of the Avenue for antitrust legislation were awaited with anxiety by many men of affairs, but the President's message on that subject reassured an expectant public and convinced all engaged in legitimate business that the Democratic Party is a friend to every honest enterprise and a foe only to that which stops or stays the progress of a civilization that is marching with rapid strides and steady steps from the old empire of special privilege to the great republic of a new freedom. Mr. Chairman, I purpose to vote for this measure, believing that my action in so doing will meet with the approval of the people of my district, who have commissioned me to fight their fight and defend their faith according to the plans and precepts of Woodrow Wilson, a man who in leadership is a Joshua, in statesmanship a Jefferson, in wisdom a Franklin, in courage a Jackson, and in patriotism a Washington; a man whose mind is a mirror that reflects the possibilities of the future as well as the promises of the present and the prophecies of the past; a man whose judgment is as unerring as the mariner's compass and whose purposes are as constant as the Northern Star. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

Mr. NEELY of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen must vote for this bill, I had hoped that at least they would spare us from any further recital of the wearisome and worn fairy tales with regard to the agricultural possibilities of the interior valleys of Alaska.

Mr. Chairman, there may be good arguments in favor of this proposition, but they are not based on agriculture. The only part of Alaska that has a climate such as produces agricultural crops in considerable quantities in any part of the world, to wit, southeastern Alaska, has been settled for 45 or 50 years, and in that entire region below the Coast Range all of the agricultural products of the Territory could be loaded into one handcart.

The part of Alaska that these gentlemen are referring to as being an agricultural Eden are the valleys of the Tanana and the Yukon, in a latitude of about 68° north. Look at the globe out here in the corridor, and where do you find that parallel of latitude runs? In the center of the Great Slave Lake, north of the northernmost boundaries of Labrador; through the center of the southern half of Greenland; north of all the inhabited portions of Sweden, save the portion inhabited by fishing settlements; north of practically all of the agricultural portion of Finland; north of Archangel, which is north of the agricultural portion of Russia; at least 400 miles north of the Siberian Railroad along almost its entire length; 600 miles north of the frozen harbor of Vladivostok, at the end of that railroad.

There is not on the inhabited globe any region anywhere that produces any considerable quantity of agricultural products where the soil is frozen continually and eternally as it is in these central valleys of Alaska, and there is not any part of the inhabited globe that produces any considerable amount of agricultural products nor that has any agricultural population worth mentioning having a climate and a temperature and a soil similar to these interior valleys of Alaska.

And yet, as I said in my speech during the general debate on this bill, I am an agricultural optimist. I know that you can grow hardy vegetables and hardy grains——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I know you can grow those hardy vegetables and hardy grains after expensive preparation in some of these interior valleys. I have seen some growing in the upper Yukon, and I have an advantage in that respect over many who claim to know so much about it in that I have seen some of that interior region for a brief season. If you want to develop the agricultural possibilities of the interior of Alaska, do not build any railroads. The only reason why anyone grows grain and hay and potatoes in the interior of Alaska is that the price is so high that they can almost afford to grow those products in a hothouse. They spend large sums for the melting of the surface of the soil, for the thawing of the soil far enough down to produce these hardy crops. They will continue to produce, in a limited way in that interior country, these crops until the railroads come and the price of produce is reduced, and then it will largely cease. Agricultural development in Alaska will be most rapid in those regions where there is no railroad transportation and therefore prices are high.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I desire two minutes. Will the gentleman yield two minutes to me?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes. I withdraw my suggestion, Mr. Chairman, for the present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman [Mr. HOUSTON] think he ought to make some explanation of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], or state his position toward it? I think it is a very meritorious proposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman has been heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] is recognized.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. FALCONER. I do.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not mean to take the gentleman from Washington off the floor, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asked a question.

Mr. FALCONER. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes if I can have five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming is always interesting, and he is particularly interesting when he talks without considering the facts he is using so glibly and easily. [Laughter.] The gentleman suggests that we go out in the corridor and get the reports of the Weather Bureau, and for his information I should like to read from the Weather Bureau reports of the 14th.

Mr. MONDELL. No; I suggested that the gentleman look at the globe.

Mr. FALCONER. For instance, in Yellowstone Park, Wyo., on the 14th, the temperature was 18 above zero. Now, let us see what it was up in the frigid and frozen regions of Alaska, about which we have heard so much. At Dutch Harbor, away out yonder, 2,000 miles west of Wyoming and a great many miles north, the temperature was 36. In Sitka, Alaska, the temperature was 44. In Valdez, Alaska, the temperature was 22 above zero, as compared with 6 above zero in Lander, the State of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. Tanana, which is away up in the northern part of the country which we are considering developing at this time, was down to zero on that day, as it also was at Miles City, Mont. Nome, Alaska, in that portion of the Territory that is said to be frigid and frozen 2,000 feet below the earth's surface, on the day when it was 6° above zero in the gentleman's State was 14° above.

We have heard much about the icebergs and much about the opposition to Government ownership of railroads. I submit that when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] reads his speech in the morning he will find he has made a splendid speech in favor of the Government ownership of public utilities and transportation lines.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Washington that if he will closely observe the language he will see that it is confined to a much smaller proposition than the Government ownership of railroads.

Mr. FALCONER. The gentleman suggested that the Government could save much money by having steamships and transportation lines running from the western coast of the United States to Alaska, rather than to pay the prices demanded by private corporations and steamship companies.

To show the inconsistency of the opposition to the bill, a different position is taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] when he submits the proposition that the Government-owned ships down in the Panama country charge higher freight rates than do private corporations. So I want to say it seems to me that the opposition to this bill are put to the limit for material upon which to base an argument when they refer to temperatures being frigid, which, as a matter of record, are better than those of their own localities, and when the gentlemen who have been opposed to the bill are now willing to concede that Government ownership of transportation lines, when compared to the transportation lines owned by individuals, accrues to the benefit of the whole people of the country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a moment ago advised us to go out into the corridor and look at the weather map. Having often taken his advice before, I have followed it at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman misstates my proposition. I advised the gentleman to go out and look at the globe.

Mr. MANN. Very likely I misunderstood the gentleman. He is not always so perfectly clear that I recognize what he means. [Laughter.] I thought that was what he meant from what he said.

The temperature in the District of Columbia this morning was 26 above zero. The temperature in Valdez last night was 28° above zero. The temperature in Nome was 32° above zero, or just at the freezing point. The temperature at Dutch Harbor was 38, and the temperature at Sitka was 44; after all, not quite so cold as the speech of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. WHITE. Has the gentleman a record of the temperature at Fairbanks?

Mr. MANN. I have not.

Mr. WHITE. That would be most interesting.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. I have no doubt there is cold weather at the North Pole and at many places in Alaska, but that does not answer the proposition that there is also some mild weather up there.

Mr. WHITE. We have never contended that the southern coast was not mild. It is the interior that has the unfavorable climate.

Mr. MANN. There is enough coast to make a good deal of space up there.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that all the time there is left?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto was to close in 12 minutes. There are three minutes of that time remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I prefer to speak later, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 13, by striking out lines 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "the," in section 2, line 19, page 13, the following: "act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all amendments thereto shall apply to said railroad or railroads and the."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it is to extend the act of February 8, 1887, and all amendments thereto. Does the gentleman think the phraseology embodied in his amendment will extend to the amendatory acts.

Mr. LENROOT. It so expressly states—all amendments thereto.

Mr. MANN. That covers it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I simply wanted to inquire whether the gentleman thought it would extend to amendatory acts of the original act.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. COOPER. Is not that amendment already covered by language in lines 19 to 23, page 13, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have as full power and authority over all matters connected with said railroad or railroads as it has by law over other railroads, and nothing in this act shall in any wise limit its powers or duties in respect to said railroad or railroads.

Mr. LENROOT. There is this distinction: The interstate-commerce act, in addition to giving the Interstate Commerce Commission power, lays down certain mandatory duties and prohibitions on railroads.

Mr. MANN. Like the long-and-short-haul clause.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and with reference to passes. The power of the Interstate Commerce Commission over railroads in this respect depends upon the railroads violating the law, and therefore merely giving the Interstate Commerce Commission power over these railroads, as they have over other railroads, would not extend their power over them unless the railroads themselves violated some provision of the interstate-commerce law. If it is desired—and I understand it was the thought of the committee—that the interstate-commerce act should apply to these railroads, then it seems very clear that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it was the understanding of the committee and is the understanding of the committee that the language of the bill already covers the provision. The Supreme Court has already decided that the Interstate Commerce Commission has control of all railroad matters in Alaska, the same as anywhere in continental America, and they are now exercising that control. However, I have no objection to the amendment, because the committee thinks it is covered already.

Mr. LENROOT. That might be so if section 2 was not in the bill, but inasmuch as it was found necessary to provide certain things with reference to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it might well be that the court in construing this act would say that it was the intention of Congress to exclude the interstate-commerce act from these railroads.

Mr. MANN. Might it not easily be said that the railroad, if operated by the Government itself, would not be under the interstate-commerce act, although the Supreme Court has provided that the interstate-commerce act extends to Alaska? I doubt very much whether it would apply to a Government owned and operated road without explicit statement.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will observe, the Senate bill expressly excludes the interstate-commerce act except as to certain of its provisions.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I did not catch the purport of the gentleman's amendment. Does it apply to railroads only?

Mr. LENROOT. To railroads only.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to extending the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We are on the verge of great prosperity, and the only obstacle in the way is this commission. The railroads of this country have asked for an increase of freight rates of 5 per cent, and the evidence was closed on the 15th of last December. The commission again opened the case and submitted 78 questions. Now, the answer to those questions, or the material for the answer, the commission has in its archives. If the railroads have to answer the questions submitted by the commission, it will take 10 years of their time and cost many millions of their money. The Interstate Commerce Commission has at the present time piled upon it too much work. They have investigations into the question of the increase of rates coming up given them by the Senate, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the United States Steel Corporation rebates, and all that, together with everything else, takes up all the time of the commission.

They have extended temporarily the decision of the rate-increase question to September—a question which they can decide now. The people, by the prima facie evidence, have decided that the railroads are entitled to this increase in rates. The commission is holding the country up. In the month of November 478 leading railroads of the country lost in that one month $15,000,000 net. The railroads have increased the wages of their employees about 20 per cent during the last four years. The Interstate Commerce Commission has done nothing but reduce freight rates.

The railroads carry a ton of freight 6 miles for a postage stamp and carry a ton of freight 400 miles for a dollar. We have the great postal system of the United States, and the railroads of the country are compelled to carry the mail for less than cost. I believe they do it at a loss to themselves of some $10,000,000 a year. We all know of a railroad which is nearly bankrupt, and they are carrying the mails at an annual loss of about $500,000. The Interstate Commerce Commission has held up many of its decisions. The Terminal decision was only handed down the other day, and I understand it was pending for a period of two years. Are we going to continue to hold up the entire country?

So much for the Interstate Commerce Commission. I honestly believe that you should adopt the bill recently introduced by me to increase the membership of the commission to 11. You should put on that commission some great railroad man and a financier, as they do in England, on the board of trade. This commission started in its infancy with people who learned their business inside the Interstate Commerce Commission and not outside.

I am opposed to the principle of the Government using the money of the people of this country for the purpose of constructing railroads, but in the case of Alaska the treatment accorded that great Territory of the Northwest by the United States has been so disastrous in destroying private enterprises and preventing its improvement by private capital, thereby bankrupting all corporations that had taken advantage of the mining laws of the United States preempting coal lands under the mineral act, that, in my judgment, it is no more than proper that the Government should construct this railroad and give the people the benefit of the wonderful wealth of Alaska.

I myself, am as firm a believer as anyone in the general principles of conservation, but I do not believe that we should utterly neglect the present in order to care for the future generations. The laws of conservation that prevent the purchasing of coal lands under the existing mineral act should be repealed and the people thus be granted an opportunity to give the United States advantage of the enormous wealth of this young giant of the Northwest. No capitalist can afford to open up coal mines in Alaska, as the cost of undertaking such an enterprise runs into many thousands of dollars, and then the return will be very insignificant for some years to come. The only prospect in the way of return is the possibility of increased value year after year, due to improvements. In the State of Alabama the average leasing price for coal rights is between 7½ cents and 8 cents per ton, while at the junction of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania during recent years coal lands have been purchased for $150 per acre. In my judgment, there is no sensible reason why the Government of the United States should not sell these lands of Alaska for $20 an acre, and this would be a handsome price, even though the lands may be rich in coal.

It is impossible for us even to more than faintly estimate the enormous future possibilities of the Territory of Alaska. This wonderland has been so crippled and hampered in its efforts for progress and industrial development by the restrictions placed upon enterprises by a mistaken policy that its development will not be retarded, but absolutely stopped, unless our policy is changed. Canada within recent years has progressed by leaps and bounds, and it is well to note how our Canadian friends have assisted their railroads during the past few years. Up to the year 1912 Canada spent on railroads approximately $500,000,000 and on canals about $140,000,000, and during the same year the Canadian House of Commons appropriated nearly $40,000,000 toward the building of railroads.

To understand more fully, Mr. Chairman, the opportunities that we have been neglecting, let us examine some of the resources of Alaska. Let us first see how the account of this wonderful Territory of the Northwest stands with the United States from the time of its purchase up to the year 1911:

The United States paid to Russia $7,200,000 for Alaska, and this, added to all the moneys expended by the Government of the United States from 1867 to 1911, makes the full amount that this country has paid for all items of governmental expense only $35,816,674.25, which leaves a difference between the productions of Alaska and the amount the United States has expended thereon of $410,824,310.54.

Under ordinary circumstances I would not go so far as to advocate governmental construction of railroads, but in the case of Alaska there is no other alternative, and I shall cheerfully give my support to the pending bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter in which I have taken a considerable interest. I do not follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] in his reasoning by any means, but I believe that this section ought to be stricken out of the bill. I do not believe in the Interstate Commerce Commission regulating this Government-owned railroad. I am willing to extend the power of that commission over privately owned railroads, but I do not see any use of our appointing a chaperon to look out for the department that constructs and operates this railroad in Alaska. There is no reason for having two departments clashing, one with the other. I do not believe in creating a tribunal before which other railroads and interests, such as the Guggenheims or anybody else, can complain against the Government railroad on the ground that it is carrying freight for too low a rate, or passengers for too low a rate, or as to any other matter. We may have to run this railroad at a loss, for that matter, and I do not believe that it is right to create a court or to give any agency jurisdiction such as the Interstate Commerce Commission over a Government owned and operated railroad contradictorily with the executive that has charge of the road. We may institute entirely different ideas in the management and control of this road, and we want to have a free hand.

Mr. LINDBERGH. But there is a provision in here for leasing this railroad. The gentleman would not want the Interstate Commerce Commission to have authority over that?

Mr. BRYAN. But the leasing proposition has been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. LINDBERGH. No; it has not.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, if the road passes into private hands, that would be a different proposition, and the present law would then apply, and the Interstate Commerce Commission would have jurisdiction without the matter being referred to here. I do not believe there is any necessity for the Interstate Commerce Commission to have charge of this railroad. We will, of course, put into effect our eight-hour law; we may put into effect some law as to minimum wage and some humanitarian features that Congress may provide, and we ought not to have to be subjected to any question that may arise by virtue of other interests making complaints.

Mr. MANN. But suppose the railroad is constructed and there is a line of steamships operating from the gentleman's part of the country to Alaska, and a man wants to ship some freight from New York City to an interior point in Alaska. Unless the Interstate Commerce Commission has control, how would it be possible to compel a reasonable freight rate?

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman mean it might be necessary to compel the Government of the United States to give a reasonable rate?

Mr. MANN. To compel the railroad companies and the steamship lines.

Mr. BRYAN. I want the Interstate Commerce Commission to have control over the other lines, but I do not see any reason why there should be any law to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel Uncle Sam to give a reasonable rate.

Mr. MANN. But suppose you want to ship stuff the other way? You can not make a through rate from one point to another unless the Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction over this road.

Mr. BRYAN. I am willing to have the Interstate Commerce Commission require a through rate and require a concession and contract with the Government of the United States, but there is no necessity for the Interstate Commerce Commission having jurisdiction over Government-owned roads unless that commission is to run the road.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is aware that the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so far as the rates are concerned, relates to the maximum rates?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; but the power is being extended every day.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think they can extend beyond the power they get from the act itself?

Mr. BRYAN. We make new acts here every Congress; that is exactly what we are here for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know whether the gentleman can not extend that for five minutes?

Mr. HOUSTON. No; I do not think so. We have had enough discussion on this section.

Mr. MOORE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, after the poetry which was read concerning the State of Wyoming, I think the gentleman from Wyoming ought to have at least five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of that poetry, I am willing to concede five minutes to the gentleman, and I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much of misstatement—unintentional, I am sure—so much of exaggeration, so much of fairy tales connected with the alleged arguments in defense or apology for this legislation that I am not surprised that the few cold, plain facts I uttered a few moments ago caused a tremendous flutter among the apologists for this legislation. I said a few moments ago, or, rather, I asked a few moments ago, gentlemen who are so optimistic about Alaska, without knowing anything about it, to go and look at the globe in the corridor and discover that the inland valleys of Alaska, of which we have heard these illuminating tales of possible agriculture, are situated from 65 to 68 degrees north latitude. Immediately several gentlemen came in, not having examined the globe, but having examined some of the weather reports; and what sort of a report is it that they bring us? I believe it was once said by a great warrior and historian that all Gaul was divided into three parts. Alaska for climate purposes may be divided into two: Coastal Alaska, fringing the Pacific for 2,000 miles, with a temperature moderated by the Japan Current and a heavy rainfall; interior Alaska, beyond the coastal range, having the climate of the Tropics—[laughter and applause]—of the Arctic. I have heard these fairy tales of what they can grow there so long that I can not even say the word arctic when I speak of the region. And the gentlemen give us the temperature of what? Why, of coastal Alaska—Sitka and other coastal towns. Why, Sitka has as mild a climate, on the average, as the city of Washington; and yet they do not grow much of anything in Sitka or the surrounding country but skunk cabbages.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I can not. I say again what I said a few moments ago, that in all that portion of Alaska in regard to which the gentlemen have given figures of temperatures is territory which has been occupied for years, does not to-day produce more agricultural products than you can load in a pushcart. First, because the climate, while mild, is not suitable for the successful growth of a variety of agricultural crops. There is not enough level ground in all that portion of Alaska to grow any considerable product. But gentlemen have given us no temperatures of interior Alaska, with its Arctic climate, and even then those winter temperatures might not on a certain day be very low. The fact, the cold, hard, frozen fact, denied by no one, is that a large portion of these interior valleys, particularly Tanana and the upper Yukon, are frozen eternally to a depth of from 50 to 200 feet. It never thaws out until the tundra or the timber has been removed and opportunity given for the sun to strike the soil unimpeded by this vegetation. That is when you can grow a little something in the three summer months, in spite of its frigid temperature. The cost of producing crops under such conditions is so great that they can not be produced with a profit except when the price is extremely high. Therefore the building of railroads into interior Alaska will not encourage agriculture, but discourage it. I do not claim this is a good reason for not building railroads, but it is a fact to be considered by those who are basing their support of the bill on the idea it will help agricultural development.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to ask unanimous consent for one minute, in order to give the gentleman from Wyoming a little information in regard to weather conditions in the interior of Alaska. The gentleman said none has been given.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the time may be extended one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, on February 13, this year, the Government reports show that in New York City the highest temperature was 10 and the lowest zero. At Tanana, interior of Alaska, of which the gentleman talks so much, the same date, the highest was 6 and the lowest was 2 above zero, and that in this cold, frigid Alaska. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an editorial from the Commercial Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the editorial to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the editorial referred to:

OPENING OF ALASKA.

Along with the announcement that the Government railroad in Alaska will be built according to the outlined plans previously discussed comes the practical plan to develop the Alaskan coal fields.

A bill has been introduced in Congress, with the approval of Secretary Lane, and it is the general understanding that it outlines the administration's policy.

Since the eyes of the country have been directed toward Alaska unexpected resources have been discovered. The wonderful mineral fields are just beginning to be explored. The exhaustless deposits of coal make it a Mecca for the miner. Development of Alaskan resources has been slow on account of the practical inability to reach the markets of the world. There are no railroad lines penetrating the coal fields and rich veins of ore await the pick of the miner. Great fortunes are within the grasp of the people. If the railroad to be built is built by the Government, and is to be controlled by the Government, the land grabber will have but small chance to dominate the situation.

This stand of the administration is said to represent Democratic socialism. If it is a socialistic view—this Government control—it was a socialistic inspiration which prompted this country to purchase Alaska in the beginning.

Some day, if Secretary Bryan's views are confirmed, the Government will own and control all railroads and telegraph lines. This is the situation in Europe. Democrats have at various times leaned more or less favorably toward Government ownership, and both Democrats and Republicans in the House, when the Alaskan bill was voted upon, overwhelmingly leaned toward Government ownership of the proposed Alaska railroad.

The United States having purchased Alaska from Russia it is now the duty of the Government to develop its holdings and give the people the advantage of the acquired territory. The Government should utilize its new possessions for the best interests of the public, and there can be no question that national sentiment to-day, without any consciousness of socialistic taint, is in favor of the Government retaining a controlling power over the Alaskan coal fields. In fact, if a consensus of public opinion were possible on the question, a majority expression might be expected on the taking by the Government of such coal lands as are now in private hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to perfect the text of the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 11325. An act to authorize the reconstruction of the existing toll bridge across the Hudson River at Troy, in the State of New York, and the maintenance of the bridge so reconstructed.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3439) appropriating funds for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the order of the President, is hereby authorized to borrow, on the credit of the United States, from time to time as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds, when received, to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures), the sum of $35,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe in denominations of $100, or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after 10 years from the date of their issue and payable 30 years from such date, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in gold coin, at a rate not to exceed 3 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all the citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commission shall be allowed or paid thereon, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000 to be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, including the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the bonds herein authorized, to continue available until expended: Provided, That so much of the said sum of $1,000,000 as shall have been expended shall be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the first proceeds of the sale of said bonds: Provided, however, That the total amount authorized by this act to be appropriated shall not exceed the sum of $35,000,000, including any sum in or by this act appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. TOWNER, Mr. LINDBERGH, and Mr. WILLIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, by striking out all of the section commencing with the word "that," in line 24, down to and including the word "however," in line 3, page 15.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be closed in 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to strike from the bill authority to issue bonds for the reimbursement to the Treasury of the moneys to be appropriated for the construction of the railroad authorized in the bill. As drafted the amendment leaves in the bill the limitation of $35,000,000 upon the cost of the roads. If the amendment be adopted, I shall offer an amendment to strike out section 4, which is in the nature of a sinking-fund provision, and it would be necessary that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] offer an amendment appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 to commence the work, which is contained in the language which I propose to strike out.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest the striking out of the authority for the issuance of bonds, because, in my opinion, no justification exists for providing for the bonding of this country for the construction of the proposed railroads. The Treasury condition does not demand it. It is not a part of the fiscal policy of the United States to enter upon its public works and provide for their construction out of the issuance of bonds. It is contrary to the policy of the Democratic Party. If it be done, it will mark the beginning of a policy that is not only new but wholly unnecessary. Its one result will be to stimulate the desire and the activity of those who are seeking aid from the Federal Treasury for various enterprises to have them financed by bond issues, when the condition of the Treasury will not permit their flotation in other ways.

Mr. Chairman, if the $35,000,000 to be spent upon these railroads be provided from the proceeds of bonds running for 30 years—the maximum time provided in the bill—and if they be issued and be permitted to remain unpaid for the full term of 30 years, with interest rate of 3 per cent, at the expiration of 30 years we will have paid $31,530,000 in interest charges and still owe the principal debt of the bonds. Who can justify such financing on the part of the United States at this time? The condition of the Treasury does not demand it.

In only one notable instance has the Federal Government provided for the conduct of a great enterprise by the issuance of bonds. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the situation as a result of that legislation. When the Panama Canal was first authorized, Congress wisely, in my judgment, provided for its construction out of the current revenues of the United States, and then for fear, perhaps, that the drain would be too great, it authorized an issuance of $135,000,000 in bonds for the reimbursement of the Treasury to that extent, to be made as a result of the expenditures for the construction of the canal. Later, when it was ascertained that, despite the investigations by the many commissions that had been authorized, the estimate of $135,000,000, excluding the $40,000,000 for payment to the French company, $10,000,000 to the Republic of Panama, about $12,000,000 on account of sanitation, and some $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 due to the increase in the size of the cut, the size of the locks, and some other incidental and not considered expenses, that the cost of the work had been missed by $150,000,000, we increase the limit of cost from $135,000,000 to $375,000,000. And then, in the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act the limit on the bond issue was removed and was fixed at $375,000,000. The experience in the estimate of the cost of the canal, in my opinion, will be repeated. Without detailed surveys and estimates costs can not be adequately computed, and I have reason to believe that instead of an expenditure of $35,000,000 this legislation will entail an expenditure of a sum double or treble that suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The limit of cost for the canal is $375,000,000. It was definitely fixed after Col. Goethals was put in charge of the work. There has been expended to date $342,286,745.24 on account of the canal construction. There remains to be appropriated but $32,000,000 additional. For all of the $342,000,000 expended the Treasury could have been reimbursed by the issuance of bonds. Up to date there have been issued but $134,000,000 of bonds, and there are still to be issued and still authorized to reimburse the Treasury for the cost of constructing the canal bonds to the amount of $240,569,000. No necessity has arisen for the issuance of the $203,000,000 that to-day can be issued in order to reimburse the Treasury. If we reimburse the Treasury to the extent of the appropriations to be made from this time on—$32,000,000—there will be still $200,000,000 in bonds that can be issued for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury for expenditures that have been made on account of the canal.

In view of such a situation, how can we justify increasing the bond authorization on the part of the Government when, in addition to this $200,000,000 to be issued some time in the future, ostensibly for the reimbursement of the Treasury on account of the Panama Canal——

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a minute.

The Treasury still has under the law authority to borrow up to $200,000,000 for the period of one year upon 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman expect it will be necessary to use some part of that $200,000,000 to reimburse the Treasury?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not any more than it has been doing in the past. Some bonds have been issued from time to time, but none recently, as I recall.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman expects that that will continue?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; during the current year bonds may be issued as in other years. None have been issued this year, unless I am in error.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] for the purpose of getting his construction of the language of the bill and his views upon it. The gentleman will notice that this bill, in this section under discussion, provides "That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the order of the President, is hereby authorized to borrow, on the credit of the United States, from time to time as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act," and so on. Now, does the gentleman understand that that would go any further than simply to give authority for the issuance of bonds in the event it was necessary to raise money, or in the event that there was not a surplus in the Treasury that might be used? I ask that question now, in order to get the gentleman's views on that proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not certain what is intended. If this language be not stricken out, I propose to offer an amendment that will make it clear that the proceeds of these bonds can not be expended for the construction of the roads, but merely to reimburse the Treasury, as for the Panama Canal, and that no money shall be expended except such as is from time to time specifically appropriated by Congress. Those in control of the construction of the roads should be compelled to come to Congress annually with their detailed estimates, just as those who are constructing the Panama Canal are compelled to do, and obtain appropriations, so that Congress may know and may keep its control upon the expenditures to be made.

But that is not the question now. There is not to-day a situation in the Treasury that necessitates the issuance of bonds. We have already authorized the issuance of bonds for the reimbursement of the Treasury on account of the Panama Canal much beyond what is necessary. When the Panama Canal is finished every indication is that there will be $200,000,000 of unissued bonds in the Treasury which can be issued at some time, ostensibly for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury for these expenditures. But if these bonds are issued at any time after the canal is finished they will be issued under one guise, but for another and a different purpose.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended until his statement is finished.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] moves that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] be extended until he has finished his statement. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an inquiry as to whether or not that comes out of the 30 minutes? Some of us also want to be heard on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will come out of the 30 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] that perhaps it will be wise to extend the time. This is a very important question.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to continue his statement.

Mr. MOORE. That is my request, Mr. Chairman. This is the most important statement that has been made to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. GOOD. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the 30 minutes be extended to 35 minutes or 40 minutes. Make it 40 minutes. That will give the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 40 minutes for the discussion of this amendment, and that 5 minutes of that time be given to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the time may come; it may be near at hand; I can not tell; no one can tell, considering the sentiment of the country, when it will be necessary for the Federal Government to embark upon the policy of issuing bonds for the payment of many things that should be paid for out of our current revenues. I hope the time is far distant. I hope it will not come, at least under a Democratic administration. But regardless of that prospect, considering the situation of the Treasury as it is to-day and as it is likely to be for some time to come, the necessity is not at hand. There will be $200,000,000 of bonds in the Treasury, which can be used to reimburse the Treasury within a year, as a result of the completion of the canal. What necessity or what excuse is there at this time to increase the authorized bond issue of the Government?

I have no sympathy with the suggestion that the question of borrowing money for various governmental purposes should ever be left in the discretion of the administrative officers of the Government. I believe that if the Government is to increase its bonded indebtedness it is a matter of legislative concern. The permanent debt of the country should not be increased merely by act of the Executive. Such questions should be determined by the Congress in the time of necessity. The fiscal policy of the Government should be fixed carefully, wisely, and cautiously by this House, and it should not out of hand provide for large issues of bonds in the discretion of the Executive. If the bonds should be issued, make their issuance imperative; if it be a matter for future determination, then it should be reserved for determination by the Congress when the occasion for decision arises.

I take it that the gentleman is proposing to spend under this bill, by appropriation, a million dollars to commence this work. But, Mr. Chairman, this million dollars will not be an appreciable drain upon the Treasury, considering the rate at which our expenditures are to be made during the next year. We propose to expend more than $1,000,000,000 during the coming fiscal year; so that $1,000,000 appropriated in cash or any other number of million dollars during the period to be taken to construct this railroad up to $35,000,000 will not make an appreciable impression upon the Treasury of the United States. Why, then, authorize the bond issue and pile up in the control of the executive officers of the Government authority to issue bonds?

If the time ever comes when our revenues fall off so as not to provide the necessary money to meet our current expenses, in a time of great political excitement, one political party or another—and one is just as likely to do it as another—instead of facing the situation and revising the revenue laws, so as to produce the revenues necessary to pay the current expenses of the Government, will be resorting to this device of piling up the bonded indebtedness of the Government by reimbursing the Treasury for advances that have been made. Such a situation should not be possible. If it is permitted, it will be because we hand away to others a control of the country's fiscal affairs that should be retained in Congress. Anyone familiar with the tendencies of the times, with the constantly increasing demands for the extension of Federal activities and of Federal expenditures realizes the difficulties that confront us. Initiate this policy, pass up to posterity the burdens which belong to the present and should be borne by current revenues, and the difficulty of obtaining grants from the Federal Treasury will have been solved. I hope, in view of the situation of the Treasury, that this provision will be stricken out, and if an Alaskan railroad is to be constructed it will be constructed as other great works are done and be paid for out of the current revenues of the Treasury.

No one suggested that the $25,000,000 to be expended annually for good roads should be paid out of the proceeds of bonds. It was suggested a short time since, but the suggestion has been dropped, that we should issue $500,000,000 of bonds to enable appropriations of $50,000,000 a year to be expended in the improvement of our rivers and harbors. Do we desire to revitalize that suggestion? It has been proposed that public buildings should be paid for out of the proceeds of bonds. Is that evil not sufficiently great under the present system? Start this policy. Let it be known that we can put upon posterity the expense of these great public works that are considered of such a benefit to the Nation, and the bond issues of the Federal Government and the requirements of the sinking fund to pay the interest and to amortize the principal will become the hideous nightmare that men in control of Government finances will be facing day and night. I hope we will not start now. Let us defer the initiation of such a policy while we may. If these roads are to be authorized and to be built, let them be paid for from the current revenues of the Government. The Treasury is better able to stand the drain proposed to be placed upon it by this bill than can the country the adoption of a fiscal policy the effects of which can not be foreseen. [Applause.]

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill, but it has some unsatisfactory provisions that should be changed. The people have been striving for general betterment with little success. Each political party promises to bring about the desired result. In so far as any has been tried it has failed, and it has been tried so often that we should know that it can not be done in that way unless the people themselves do their own thinking, form their own party, make their own plans, and put them into execution.

The object of human life can not be interpreted into one for the mere purpose of existence, but the present methods result in that, because happiness for the most of us is confined to our childhood. The environments that surround us as adults materially control our individual actions. We deal with them sometimes willingly, sometimes gladly, sometimes against our objections, but most of them are so common that we seldom think of them in connection with the plan of government or the way business is done, and some of them some of us never think of in that sense.

The extravagance and waste of the present system has resulted in making the majority of the people industrial slaves. We work to purchase ease, and support in extravagance, the idle families of millionaires. Mothers toil and drudge to rear their children to become the servants of the aristocracy of wealth. That is the result of business as it is now carried on. We need a change. Therefore let us not interpret this bill wholly from the viewpoint of present business demands or methods.

I do not interpret the object of life to be for the purpose of business, but rather that business should be done for the purpose of increasing advantages, and not to burden us as it does now. I do not claim that life gives no pleasure as it now operates. We can be more or less happy even amid the misfortunes that have resulted from diverting the objects of life from the pursuits of the "general welfare" to a purely business or commercial existence. We have the benefit of comparison, and in the diversity of circumstances—the diversity of things that take place—we find actual pleasure in the relief that is offered from the most strained and burdensome things in the more tolerable ones. In a comparative sense, one circumstance measured with another, we really consider the best ones successful because by comparison they are so much better than the worst. In doing so many of us have failed to take into account that there is a prospective condition with which we have made no comparison, and as compared with which, even the most favorable of the present and past experiences, is a dismal failure. I do not wish anyone to brood over past failures, nor to even complain about the present. But since there is an opportunity to make the very best of conditions—better than we have ever had, and to bring about their enjoyment by all—we should proceed to establish them and not waste our time in ceaseless struggle that means "certain failure" for all "but a few." It is to the future that we must look for "real success"—success to all. With the growing intelligence of people generally, there should no longer be danger of the truth being taken as enigma.

A few persons who have seen further ahead than the majority of us have, have taken notice of the enormous waste that has grown out of our old system, and they have organized corporations to overcome some of the most striking disorders of business. But these corporations in most cases are trusts and operate for extremely selfish purposes. The public has derived comparatively little benefit from their existence, but, on the contrary, in some cases has been actually injured.

The trusts have been able to systematize and practice economy in the cost of production and distribution, but since they are monopolies the public has not had a proper advantage from their formation. On the contrary, the trusts have used the monopoly to reduce prices when they buy from the original producers and increase them when they sell to the consumer. Thus they build up colossal fortunes, commonly called vested capital, for the individuals who control them. On these fortunes the public is charged annual compound interest, rent, and dividends. As against these and this system, while in force, there is absolutely no possibility of the general public succeeding. It is a certainty that the public can not succeed.

Experience teaches the managers of the trusts that they may cooperate to their mutual business profit, and therefore there is a community of interest between them, which will not be destroyed by a mere denial of interlocking directorates. But there is not the slightest community of interest between the trusts and the public, except that the trusts wish the people to have at least an existence in order to work for the trusts. It is self-evident that if the trusts can cooperate to support each other at the public expense, the public must, within itself and for itself, profit by making use of the example. The people themselves should and will be compelled to cooperate for the general welfare.

Unfortunately, the most of us have waited for the politicians to correct our present social conditions. We shall soon learn that they fool us every time. The Civil War was the last great act of the American people that has measured up to the grandeur of the people of this Nation. There is not a thing that Congress has done since the Civil War that begins to measure up with the opportunities that have existed. Abraham Lincoln saw the signs and stated them correctly near the close of the war. He then made the following statement:

Yes; we may all congratulate ourselves that this cruel war is nearing its close. It has cost a vast amount of treasure and blood. The best blood of the flower of American youth has been freely offered upon our country's altar that the Nation might live. It has been, indeed, a trying hour for the Republic; but I see in the future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war.

Things have been done by this Congress that within the next six years will be looked upon as an evidence of folly—worse, as positive wrong—yet no one who knows the membership believes that there is any intention to be wrong. It is the intention to be right, but time has not been taken to analyze the conditions so as to come to correct conclusions. Nothing is more plain to an observer than that the public must, before it can profit by the opportunities that are accessible, do its own thinking. Then, and not till then, will we be independent and prosperous in a measure that the material advantages of our country warrants.

Whenever the public is strongly impressed with the necessity of taking a certain course, the professional politicians will not dare to block it. That is why a public knowledge of the conditions is necessary.

Our economic troubles are due to a false economy. I emphasize it as a fact that if farmers and others who work for what they get, and get but a small part of the value of what their work produces, if they would spend half as much time analyzing the economic conditions and planning to properly arrange them as they do in trying to boost the price of their products and wages in dollars, that by giving attention to both instead of to one alone, they would increase their advantages a hundredfold faster.

Do we know that we are not really paid when we receive "money" for our labor or for its products? We really get our pay when we spend the money. It is the party for whom we have worked or who got the products of our labor who has gotten his pay. We get our pay when we spend the money, in the same way that he got his pay in the products of our labor for his money. I make that observation as a basis to show the difference between what our labor produces and what we get for it, because that is what determines the material advantages we obtain if we are not mere parasites.

Do we know that the world's workers pay in advance? They certainly do. The producers, which includes everybody who performs services that are essential, pay by their daily work for its products. Most of us seem not to have taken time to consider that when great buildings, canals, railways, and other construction goes on, which involves expenditures of labor, the workers pay for it at the very time the work is performed. That is why the cost of living is so dear and getting dearer. We are building more and more all the time for speculation and investment instead of regulating the building according to the actual necessities.

The mere fact that a debt is created to be paid in 5, 10, 20, or more years does not do away with the actual payment by labor for the production when the labor is performed. The laboring people pay for it when they do the work. The debt that is contracted is a mere arbitrary burden that the creditors, the industrial slave makers, have devised in order to levy a bounty upon the products of the people's future work. It is this bounty that we are now paying for, namely, the debts that were falsely contracted on the industries of the past. It is being enlarged by the debts that are contracted on industries of the present, and will, until we remove the delusion that debt is a service, be still more enlarged on the industries of the future. What an absurdity that a people producing vastly more than they consume should be irretrievably in debt.

I say, with knowledge of the absolute truth of the assertion, that when the construction is complete the payment is complete, so that when we enter upon any of these great enterprises that employ us to produce for the remote future the cost of production is complete when the work is complete. If the industry of the people of this country was expended on an economic basis and adjusted to the economic needs, there would be no need for a long time to build the railways contemplated by this bill. It is only because of the present false basis on which our industries are expended that it is justified at this time. That is my excuse for voting for the bill. The debt that it is proposed to create on the basis of this enterprise is false. It is as false as the "divine right of kings." The people, for a few years longer, may acquiesce in the debt as they once did in the "divine right of kings," but the delusion will not last much longer.

If we are to have a better living, and have less hours of daily drudgery in order to give us more time to increase our mental, moral, and spiritual understanding, it can best be done by harmonizing and regulating enterprise. Competition is war, and in many cases waste. The time has passed when competition will properly regulate commerce. Those who seek to establish competition merely for the purpose of solving the cost of living are not only wasting time but are doing actual damage in attempting to make us believe that it will remedy existing social evils. Competition as a means of regulating prices is a step in evolution that we have already passed.

It is a good service to raise two measures of food where one has been produced and both are needed, but no good service is performed by constructing two railways where the service required can be economically performed by one. The construction of the second must be paid for in the labor required to build it, and labor is cheated by it. But as long as we have our present hit-and-miss conglomerate "crazy-quilt" system of having a creditor class to dominate and levy a bounty upon the debtor class—nonproducers to encumber and enslave producers—just that long no economy can be worked out that will relieve the people from their present drudgery. While the present system lasts we shall become more and more dependent.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

The "special interests" have carried on a continuous campaign in order to educate the public in opposition to public ownership of the public utilities. The public pays for their construction; why should it not own them? Those opposed to public ownership now "chuckle in their sleeves" because it is proposed that the Government shall embark in the building of railways first in Alaska. Up there the enterprise does not give promise of early success in the sense that success is now commonly figured. On that account the "special interests" believe that it will operate to discourage further Government ownership.

By the time it becomes known that the Alaskan railways will not at first and for a long time pay in the present sense of figuring profits it will also be known that what we now call financial success is not necessarily public success, but, on the contrary, in very many cases is public loss, for whatever profits nonproducers are able to make in excess of the benefits given to the public are a tax upon the public.

If this bill becomes a law, it will establish a policy of Government ownership in a public utility. It is not likely to pay so-called profits immediately. It is likely to incur expenses beyond those contemplated by this bill. I would prefer that the Government's first act would be to own a line of railway extending from the source of the Mississippi southerly to the Gulf of Mexico or some other line or lines extending through well-populated sections of the country. But since the public is first aroused to the point of ownership of Alaskan railways, I welcome that as the beginning of Government ownership. Public ownership of all the public utilities can not be accomplished at one time, but we are rapidly approaching the time for its accomplishment. With each succeeding year the speed will be accelerated. When that is accomplished only such works of public utility will be extended as the demands require. None will be undertaken for the purpose of exploiting the people. The distribution of labor will be such that all will be employed in economic production, for it would be wasteful not to give as much employment as is necessary to make everybody contented.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that there should be no bond issue on which to tax the people for interest. The provision in the bill for a $35,000,000 bond issue is unnecessary and objectionable. It will cost the people $1,050,000 annually if we leave it in. It is based on a false assumption. We have now outstanding $346,681,016 of United States notes, currency. That is the only absolutely honest money we have to-day. It is supported by the credit of all the people, and they do not and should not pay interest upon it. Why not issue $35,000,000 more honest money of the same character of the $346,681,016 now outstanding? My proposition is right unless the $346,681,016 is wrong. The amendment that I shall offer is that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon order of the President, shall issue new United States currency, which shall be in the form of public-service certificates, substantially the same kind of notes as the $346,681,016 to which I referred. These would be legal tender and redeemed in the same way as those now outstanding, but ultimately paid out of the proceeds realized from the Alaska resources.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I do not quite get the gentleman's idea. Does he propose to issue certificates like the greenbacks?

Mr. LINDBERGH. My amendment defines what I propose. I propose to issue United States public-service certificates, to be placed in circulation by being earned. They will be the liability of the United States the same as the $346,681,016 now outstanding. You can call them what you please. If you will refer to the daily report of the United States Treasury for February 14, 1914, you will observe that the $346,681,016 is not even included as a liability of the United States; and, strange to say, contrary to the liability idea, on the asset side of the page, $7,801,999 of these same notes are figured as an asset in favor of the United States. There is a gold reserve of $150,000,000, with which the Government is pledged to redeem $476,824,000 silver certificates outstanding and $2,528,000 Treasury notes outstanding. Therefore the gold reserve of $150,000,000 is not only serving as a reserve for the silver certificates, the Treasury notes, and the United States notes, the three amounting to $856,033,016, but also reenforces over seven hundred millions of bank notes. I do not stand committed to the gold standard, but the $35,000,000 which my amendment offers would as long as that system stands be reenforced by the same gold reserve. It is not the gold reserve that makes all money secure, but it is the credit of the United States. You will get the idea of my purpose by reading my amendment. It reads as follows:

Strike out section 3 as the same now reads and in place thereof insert the following as section 3:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue United States currency on the credit of the United States, from time to time as the same may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act, the sum of $35,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which currency shall be in the form of public-service certificates, and these shall state upon their face in substance that the bearer has performed a public service of the value stated in the certificate; that each separately is issued and circulated for value received under the provisions of this act, and the same shall be the lawful money of the United States and shall be receivable at par for all debts, dues, and demands, public and private, within the jurisdiction of the United States, created after the passage of this act; that the same shall be printed and engraved by the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, from plates and dies devised by the fiscal department, and shall, after returning to the Government, be canceled, but in lieu thereof certificates of the same amount in the same form may be reissued from time to time and placed in circulation by being earned in any public service of the United States."

In my discussion of the currency bill I stated, and I now repeat the statement, that it is an absurdity for the Government to borrow money to defray its operating expenses, because they are a tax upon the people, and therefore, if the Government issues United States notes—currency, if you prefer that name—in payment of such expenses, they will be in demand for the payment of taxes and canceled when paid in for that purpose. There would be no redundancy, because they would be destroyed as fast as the taxes were paid. Neither will there be any danger of an overissue, because the people would know that every dollar paid out by the Government would be drawn back in taxes. They would not tolerate an issue for unnecessary things. They would be the currency of the people for current business—not for hoarding. Of course, they would be the liability of the Government. There would be no use of their issue if they were not. The bonds are a liability and they carry interest, which interest when paid is something for which the people get no return. They do get value in full for the principal, the same as they would for United States notes, if there is no fraud or cheat.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If these notes are assets, why not issue a billion of them instead of $35,000,000?

Mr. LINDBERGH. You can not postpone the physical payment for building by the issue of bonds. You simply force an arbitrary debt that is paid by labor and otherwise, when the work is complete, and repaid in the future. I have shown how that is in another part of my remarks. We shall keep going deeper and deeper in debt by the issue of bonds. If there is an actual necessity for a billion dollars to defray the expenses of the Government of the United States, the people of necessity are to be taxed for that amount, and there is the best of reason for the issue of certificates in payment of the expenses which would be returnable in payment of the taxes and canceled. It is a rank absurdity, as well as a fraud upon the people, to extend the credit of the United States to the money loaners, and then pay an annual premium interest to buy it back. The credit is all supported by the people themselves, and no one else adds any value to it. Why should they buy what they already own? It is because of that principle, which I have detailed more fully in another part of my remarks, that I have offered the amendment.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I thought the gentleman suggested that we build this railroad by certificates issued by the Government, which would, like those we have already issued, prove to be an asset instead of a liability.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I have not said that these certificates would be an asset. Nothwithstanding that the Treasury statement places $7,801,999 of United States notes in the asset column and fails to note as a liability the $346,681,016, I, of course, know that these notes, as well as the ones that I propose if they were issued, is, and the ones I suggest would be, a liability of the United States. But we can not get rid of such a liability by issuing bonds, because the bonds are not payment, but simply another promise to pay a still larger sum; and if the Government is not good for the principal, I do not see how it can be good for the principal plus interest.

Ten years ago a proposition for the United States to construct a railway would have been considered a crazy proposition. The Government ought to own all the roads, and will. I am absolutely certain that in less than a decade the people of this country will realize that it is an absurdity for the Government of the United States to issue the bonds of the United States for any executory enterprise. Debt and the impossibility of the general public ever paying, under our present system, will soon get through to the understanding of the people. Until it does, we shall have a mighty lot of people who barely exist on the remnants left after wealth gets its interest, dividend, and rent toll.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But if we can issue certificates, and they are an asset, why should we stop issuing at $35,000,000? Why not build the Alaska railroad, dig the Panama Canal, improve the roads of the country, and do other things by issuing certificates to pay for them?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I repeat, I do not claim they are an asset. On the contrary, they are a liability; but I said this statement of the Treasury of the United States places them as an asset.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Oh, then the gentleman claims that the Treasury statement is a farce?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do claim that it is a farce, so far as it places the $7,801,999 of United States notes as an asset and makes no liability account of the $346,681,016; and that is why I called attention to that part of the statement as being a farce.

I repeat, we are going deeper and deeper in the hole all the time under this system of ours. I pointed out four years ago that the cost of living would get higher because of that system, and I then pointed out the reasons; and I repeat now, while the same system is in operation, my former prediction having come true, that the cost of living is going to be still higher. There may be temporary let up occasionally, but that will be only temporary, for things will grow worse and worse for the plain people as long as we keep piling on the interest. When people understand that they pay for the construction of a thing when it is constructed, and again when they go in debt for it, they will construct only what is reasonably required to keep up an efficient system. Then we shall have no more complaint, nor will we think of building a railroad until it is needed in an economic system. Now, I vote for this Alaska railway because I think it is needed, because of our lack of an economic system.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I would be in favor of it if there was the slightest probability that the current revenues of this Government would be sufficient to take care of the appropriations to be made by Congress, including this $35,000,000, but it is absolutely certain that that is not so. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] admits, very properly, that it will be necessary to issue Panama bonds, which the President now is authorized to issue, not for this purpose, but to reimburse the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said probably in the same ratio that they have been issued in the past. We have already issued $138,000,000, and still have over $200,000,000 unissued.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand; we have been issuing them in the past, Mr. Chairman, and have been compelled to issue them to reimburse the Treasury, and it is morally certain that under present conditions we will have to continue to issue them in the future.

So, Mr. Chairman, it resolves itself simply into this question, Shall we issue Panama bonds to build this Alaska railroad, or shall we issue Alaskan bonds to do so? So far as the Treasury is concerned, I admit that it will make no difference whether we issue Panama bonds or Alaskan bonds for this purpose; but it does make a difference when it comes to paying the interest and principal of this $35,000,000, in my judgment, because if we issue Alaskan bonds we can, and we ought, and I am satisfied we will, pay not only the interest but the principal out of the proceeds of our resources in Alaska. On the other hand, if we take the money out of the Treasury, take it out of the proceeds of Panama bonds issued to reimburse the Treasury, then this $35,000,000 will be gone. It will not be considered an indebtedness of Alaska at all, and in the making of coal-land leases, which will soon be done under legislation that we will pass, we will not take into consideration this $35,000,000 as it will be considered if we issue Alaskan bonds.

In other words, if this $35,000,000 be outstanding as an Alaskan indebtedness it will be taken care of by Alaskan resources, while if it is taken care of by the issue of Panama bonds or is taken care of out of the current revenues of the Treasury it will not, in all probability, be taken care of by the proceeds of the sales of land and other things in Alaska.

Now, it may be said that it makes no difference if the money we get in Alaska goes into the General Treasury, whether we put it into a fund or not, but it does make a difference in making the coal-land leases, for instance, whether we consider only the development of Alaska and receive what would be a reasonable price, or whether when the Secretary of the Treasury makes his coal-land leases he has in mind that it is his business and his duty to obtain such royalities as will take care of this Alaskan indebtedness. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. If there is any practice prevalent of late, and fraught with danger to the people of America, it is that of constantly postponing the payment for things we authorize to be done. One of the striking things in connection with the public finances in America has been the tremendous increase in municipal, county, and State indebtedness, an increase that has become so great as to imperil the credit of many of the Commonwealths of this country.

Now it is proposed, on the theory that we may have to borrow money, to make provision in advance of the need. The amount of money carried in this bill for the building of railroads in Alaska, which will necessarily take several years and can be distributed over that period of time, can be carried in the sundry civil bill without any appreciable effect on the budget of the country.

When we spend nearly $1,100,000,000 annually to carry over a period of three or five or six years forty or fifty million dollars is no great burden. But, as pointed out by the gentleman from New York, the authorization of these bonds is simply embarking upon the road so frequently traveled with disastrous results by municipalities and States, of postponing for others to pay the debts we incur. It is a standing invitation to extravagance, and breeds the worst sort of public finances. This is the only country on the globe that to-day makes appropriations without the slightest regard to income. Every other country has a system whereby it can measure the income and the outgo, but we have been so rich that, like a youth, we can get drunk without a headache the next day, and think that nothing matters so long as it is postponed until the next day.

There is no reason why now we should burden the Government with additional bonded indebtedness and invite a continuation of the policy. The gentleman says that we must have the money. There is nothing in the present statement of the finances of the Government that shows that we will need to borrow this sum in order to meet expenses. There is no reason, except his own assumption, for believing that it will be necessary to sell any great proportion of the Panama bonds in order to finance the expenses of the Government. The whole purpose of it is to blind ourselves and try to cheat ourselves and cheat the ledger with obligations that we, by our votes, are imposing upon the people of America. Five millions, six millions, or even ten millions, add to the annual expense no insupportable burden, and it certainly would not require more than that annually to take care of these expenses in Alaska, and, I repeat, it will be no appreciable burden on the Government.

Why, the gentleman says, we must not do it, because it will change the program of getting the money out of Alaska to reimburse the United States. There is nothing in that. Whatever revenues come from Alaska can be covered into the Treasury. Oh, but, he says, it makes a difference in regard to the leasing condition of the coal lands. How? Does the gentleman want to burden this coal that he proposes to open up for the people of America, not only with the cost of the railroad but with 30 years' interest? Because in the building of these railroads by bond issue you are nearly doubling the amount that will have to be taken care of in the royalties you get on the coal properties that are mined. If we were faced with a condition where we could not pay our debts, we might be warranted in borrowing. But there is no advantage to the Government in borrowing with its ability to tax and with an income sufficient to take care of its legitimate expenses. I hope the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I fear that this amendment of our friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that we are asked to adopt is a Trojan horse about to be brought into the camp of the friends of this bill. The argument made by the gentleman from New York appeals to many of us. But I want to say that it seemed to me he gave himself away when he was opposing the issuance of bonds for building this road and intimated that the Panama bonds might be availed of in case of necessity, or that we have Panama bonds issued for the Panama Railroad that we might use to supply deficiencies in the general revenues after we had used the general revenues to build this road. It does not make any difference how the bonds were issued, whether as Panama or Alaskan bonds. His general argument, then, against bond issuing is abandoned by his proposal to issue and use Panama bonds, practically, to build the Alaska road.

I want to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. He says we are the only country in the world that contracts indebtedness without reference to our revenue or the source from whence we are going to get the money to pay for it. Then he advocates, in this matter, a policy that would saddle the Government of the United States with an indebtedness of $35,000,000 over and above our ordinary current expenses without having made any arrangement to pay the indebtedness.

Mr. SHERLEY. And you only make provision by postponing the payment.

Mr. HARDY. We make provision for it by providing a mortgage which shall be paid out of the proceeds of the sale or lease of the Alaskan land. When you change that policy you have on the back of the bill men who have been criticizing it from the beginning, because they said it was an effort to saddle the people of the whole country with a debt and take out of the General Treasury $35,000,000 for the benefit of one locality. We have replied that that is not so; that we are going to issue bonds on that particular property; and that property, the lands of Alaska, will be used to pay the indebtedness. [Applause.] We are covering the condition cited by the gentleman from Kentucky; we are providing a source of revenue to meet the expenditure; we are meeting the criticism made so frequently here on this floor that we are burdening the whole people for the benefit of one locality. When you strike out this provision in this bill you will add 40 enemies to the bill on its final passage.

The gentleman from Kentucky says we must not create a debt for future generations to pay. Is it not wise when you build a courthouse for future generations to issue county bonds in order that the present generation may not be required to pay all the expenditures for the benefit of future generations?

Mr. SHERLEY. In my country that has bankrupted many a county.

Mr. HARDY. Yes; and the gentleman says this railroad will probably not pay for a while. It may not. What equity is there in this generation bearing the expenditure for a future generation's improvement and benefit, and for a future development of a country, when you can by the established process of creating a mortgage upon the assets of that country make it bear its own expenses?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. If I can get more time I will be very glad to submit to an interruption; otherwise the gentleman will have to excuse me. I do not doubt for one moment that the proceeds of the sales of the Alaskan lands and the coal and gold leases will pay this indebtedness, both interest and principal, within the 30 years the bonds run, and I do not believe it would be right to improve that locality up there wholly at the expense of the present generation. It has been said that you are spending all of this money for the benefit of 30,000 white people up there. We are taking the property of the Government and providing a means to meet this expenditure of the Government by placing a mortgage upon this property of the Government so it will bear its own improvement expenses and pay its way into an improved condition, where it will benefit all of the people of the United States, and no more insidious amendment has been offered to this bill than the one to strike out this clause. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the adoption of this amendment would be about the same thing as to allow the section to remain as it now stands, so far as the ultimate effect is concerned. This bill is predicated and framed upon the idea that we want to make Alaska pay for this railroad, and we propose to collect the money there to pay for it. We might do this without issuing the bonds just the same as though we were to issue the bonds; but by issuing the bonds and providing for their payment by Alaska, we provide a means of liquidation without cost to the people of the States, but by the Territory of Alaska. I for one firmly believe that we can collect that money there and that Alaska will pay for this railroad, and for that reason I think it better that this section remain as it is.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yi

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not much time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the Treasury is able to bear this expenditure, as it will be demanded year after year, what objection would there be to allowing the Treasury to do this without a specific character of bonds issued for that purpose, and so providing that whatever returns come from Alaska because of the building of this railroad shall be turned into the Federal Treasury; and if it amounts, as the claimants——

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will have to put his question in a shorter way, or he will consume all of my time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If it amounts, as the claimants of this railroad claim it will, to ten times what it costs to make the railroad, then let it all go into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that in this way. Although this bill was predicated on the idea that we would hypothecate the resources of Alaska for the payment of this debt, yet when you come to consider the real language of the bill it does not go further than to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the order of the President, shall issue bonds as it may become necessary to raise funds to defray this expenditure. I think that is a fair and legitimate construction of this language just as it now stands, and there is no need to issue $35,000,000 of bonds on the start to commence paying interest on and to pay, as the gentleman from New York says, interest on $35,000,000 for 31 years and double the amount. Not at all. There would be but a small proportion of this amount needed at first to issue bonds for, and perhaps none, and in that event the trouble of interest can be avoided, and we will still have this in such shape that Alaska will pay for this railroad. That is principally why I favor the bond issue. Let it stand intact. Let us have the object lesson demonstrated. The advocates of this bill believe that the resources there will justify this expenditure. We believe that the revenue that will be produced there will pay the money required to make this outlay, and we would like to have it in such shape as to make the object lesson plain, and let the people of the country understand that we have just stood Alaska on her feet to enable her to pay for this improvement herself, which I firmly believe she will do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 61, noes 74.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HOUSTON, were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 73.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I have made a mistake in the announcement. I should have said that the negative was 76, and then one more would make it 77.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know, I can not recall, but I do not think the gentleman has the right to reverse his count.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any question about the vote, it should be taken over again, and the Chair will so direct.

The committee again divided.

Mr. ANSBERRY (before the announcement of the vote). Mr. Chairman, I voted under a misapprehension, and I desire to change my vote. I voted "aye," and I desire to vote "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The vote of the gentleman from Ohio will be so recorded. He changes his vote from aye to no.

The tellers then announced the vote—ayes 88, noes 87.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing to amend.

Mr. GOOD. After the word "appropriated," in line 6, page 15, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 15, by inserting at the end of line 6, after the word "appropriated," the following: "That there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,000,000, to be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, including the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the bonds herein authorized, to continue available until expended."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that that language has been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered is entirely different from the provision which was stricken out by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. While it contains some of the same language, it does not contain all the language that was stricken out. The language that was stricken out related to the issuance of bonds by the Government, and in striking that out there was also stricken out the $1,000,000 to be appropriated which is provided for in the section. For that million dollars the Treasury was to be reimbursed from the proceeds of a sale of Government bonds, and the provision I have offered does not provide for any reimbursement, but for a plain payment by the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will change his amendment so as to eliminate the cost of preparing and issuing bonds, I have no objection to it.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think the Clerk read that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; he read that. I have no objection to the million-dollar appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. If the Clerk did so, I think he inadvertently read more than I intended in my amendment. I did not intend to have in the provision in regard to the cost in issuing the bonds. I thought I had crossed that part out. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment in that particular.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Stop at the word "act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there shall be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury——

Mr. HOUSTON. Where does that come in?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 15, by adding, at the end of line 6, the following:
"That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, to continue available until expended."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman from Iowa I have an amendment I desire to offer which will take the place of the last three lines of this section, and then the gentleman's amendment would be more in order and would follow in natural sequence; and I would be glad if the gentleman will allow me to offer my amendment at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. This section has all been stricken out down to line 3, page 15, including the word "however," and the balance of the section is left in. Now, I desire to strike out that and insert the following, which is in better form and a decided improvement: "That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate the United States to expend more than the sum of $35,000,000."

Mr. GOOD. I withhold my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 3, after the word "bonds," strike out the proviso down to and including line 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That in executing the authority granted by this act the President"——

Mr. HOUSTON. The word "provided" is stricken out. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified so as to exclude the word "provided."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate the United States to expend more than the sum of $35,000,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of this amendment. I do not believe any gentleman could object to it, as that makes a specific limitation——

Mr. MANN. I question whether it does.

Mr. HOUSTON. What is the question of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I somewhat question whether it is an explicit limitation, whatever the intent, and I have understood all the time that the limit of authority to appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act was put at $35,000,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. But that limitation does not do that.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I think it does. I would like to have the gentleman point out wherein it does not.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, the limitation of authority to appropriate is only important because of the rules of the House. If it were not for the rules of the House, no limitation would amount to anything one way or the other. Now, that provision would not, under the rules of the House, permit a proposition to appropriate a much larger sum than $35,000,000, and if appropriated, the appropriation would take the place of the limitation which the gentleman has proposed, and the President would have authority to expend the money. Morally, it might have that effect, although I do not doubt before we are through the proposition would come up to spend a larger sum of money without additional legislation. I do not see why the gentleman can not combine both propositions.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that the amendment I offered be amended by adding the following just before:

That the cost of the work authorized by this act shall be $35,000,000, and that the President, in executing the authority granted him, shall not expend or obligate—

And so on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. We will prepare the modification if you will give us a moment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make his amendment to read:

That the total amount authorized by this act to be appropriated shall not exceed the sum of $35,000,000; nor shall the President obligate the United States in any event to pay more than that sum under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what I have just done. I am perfectly willing to accept the language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I thought possibly the Clerk had taken it down. I was reading from the bill most of the time.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, "That the cost of the work authorized by this act shall not exceed $35,000,000; and that in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend or obligate the United States to expend a sum of more than $35,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his former amendment and offer the following in lieu thereof, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I would be perfectly willing to include the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] at the end of that and put it all in one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report first the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 3, after the word "bonds," strike out the proviso down to and including line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate the United States to expend more than the sum of $35,000,000."

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the Clerk left off the first part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first part of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the cost of the work authorized by this act shall not exceed $35,000,000, and that in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate the United States to expend more than the sum of $35,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] to the fact that the word "Provided" now will not be in the bill?

Mr. MANN. It does not belong in the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is left out of the bill properly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that since the word "Provided" has gone out of the amendment that the word "That" should be left out.

Mr. MANN. This is a new section—a section by itself. The word "That" is either in or out. In the rest of the bill every section usually begins with the word "That."

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] be added at the close of that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The Clerk read as follows:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, to continue available until expended.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the word "That" in this case ought to be stricken out and the word "and" be substituted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that would be an improvement on the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that the amendment be modified as suggested by him. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] be adopted as an amendment to his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON]. The Clerk will read the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk is not reading the amendment. He is reading only a part of it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I think it would be wise to wait for a minute and get the amendment properly drafted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the cost of the work authorized by this act shall not exceed $35,000,000, and that in executing the authority granted by this act the President shall not expend nor obligate the United States to expend more than the sum of $35,000,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend it right there by not repeating "$35,000,000" but by inserting in lieu thereof the words "said sum."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent to amend as signified by him. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The Clerk read as follows:

And there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be used for carrying out the provisions of this act, to continue available until expended.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, as the Clerk read the amendment, it appeared to be "thirty-five million of dollars," and I think the word "of" ought to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent that the word "of" be stricken out. Is there objection? The Clerk states that it is not there. [Laughter.] The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TOWNER moves to amend by striking out, on page 14, line 5, the amount therein stated, to wit, "$35,000,000," and insert in lieu thereof the amount "$20,000,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that is already out.

Mr. TOWNER. I think not.

Mr. HOUSTON. That part is out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That language is not in the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Where does the amendment commence?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the latter part of the amendment may be read, and that the amendment should be applied to the amendment adopted where the limit of expenditure is placed at $35,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No amendment to that is in order. The committee has just adopted an amendment fixing the limit of cost at $35,000,000. No amendment to that is in order.

Mr. MANN. It is in order for the House to add something more to it. It is not in order for the House to change the language.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. We have not had the entire amendment reported yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the remainder of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Also to strike out, on page 15, line 5, the amount therein stated, to wit, "$35,000,000," and insert in lieu thereof the amount "$20,000,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. The House has just adopted that amendment, and the gentleman now proposes to change that amendment and to strike out "$35,000,000" as the limit of cost and insert "$20,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 3 as the same now reads and in place thereof insert the following as section 3——

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that has just been passed upon and determined and the amendment is out of order.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Will not the gentleman wait to see whether it is or not? It has not been reported yet. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman let it be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Is not the gentleman willing to have it reported?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; let it be reported, then, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 3 as the same now reads and in place thereof insert the following as section 3:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue United States currency on the credit of the United States, from time to time as the same may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act, the sum of $35,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which currency shall be in the form of public-service certificates, and these shall state upon their face in substance that the bearer has performed a public service of the value stated in the certificate; that each separately is issued and circulated for value received under the provisions of this act, and the same shall be the lawful money of the United States and shall be receivable at par for all debts, dues, and demands, public and private, within the jurisdiction of the United States, created after the passage of this act; that the same shall be printed and engraved by the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, from plates and dies devised by the fiscal department, and shall, after returning to the Government, be canceled, but in lieu thereof certificates of the same amount in the same form may be reissued from time to time and placed in circulation by being earned in any public service of the United States."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the House having already stricken out and inserted, it is not now in order to strike out a provision and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do not care to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That there is hereby created a redemption fund in the United States Treasury to be known as "The Alaska Railway Redemption Fund," into which shall be paid 50 per cent of all moneys derived from the sale or disposal of any of the public lands, including town sites in Alaska or the coal or mineral therein contained, or the timber thereon, and into which fund shall be paid the net earnings of said railroad or railroads above maintenance charges and operating expenses; the said redemption fund, or any part thereof, shall be used from time to time, upon the order of the President, to pay the interest on the bonds authorized and issued under the provisions of this act, and to redeem, cancel, and retire said bonds under such rules and regulations as the President may establish in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15 strike out section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. That all moneys derived from the sale or disposal of any of the public lands, including town sites, in Alaska, or the coal or mineral therein contained, or the timber thereon, and the net earnings of said railroad or railroads above maintenance charges and operating expenses, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as other miscellaneous receipts are paid, and a separate account thereof shall be kept and annually reported to Congress."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential amendment. I desire to perfect the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] offers an amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I think has the preference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A motion to strike out and insert does not preclude a subsequent amendment; but, having been recognized and having offered my amendment, I am entitled to discuss it.

Mr. LENROOT. But the gentleman's amendment is a substitute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A motion to strike out and insert is in the nature of an amendment. No gentleman has a preferential right over that. If the matter is stricken out and new matter is inserted, that ends the other matter. If the matter is not stricken out, it does not preclude, under the rule, another motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report for information.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit that my amendment be reported?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] have amendments that they desire to have considered as pending.

Mr. MANN. Let it be reported for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 4, page 15, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 4. That for the purpose of defraying the construction cost of the railway or railways hereinbefore authorized, the Secretary of the Treasury, under regulations to be approved by the President, shall cause to be assessed every two years the value accruing as benefits to any land in Alaska by reason of the construction of said railway or railways, and shall cause to be levied thereon and collected from the owners thereof an annual tax, not exceeding 5 per cent of the value of such benefits as assessed from time to time; and the proceeds of said tax, together with the net earnings of said railway or railways, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 16, strike out the paragraph after the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To reimburse the Treasury for disbursements made under the authority of this act."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment in the language of the bill as reported by the committee provides that the receipts from the sale of public lands, including town sites, coal or minerals contained therein, or timber thereon, and the net earnings of the railroad or railroads above maintenance charges and operating expenses shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and it is required that a separate account shall be kept of those moneys, and an annual report thereof made to Congress. The result will be that all of the moneys obtained from the sale or disposal of the public lands, town sites, minerals, and timber will be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, which is the manner in which most of the revenues, outside of certain special funds, are turned into the Treasury. Then, in order that Congress may have easily accessible a statement showing what are the receipts, and what moneys are obtained from the transactions of the Government in its property in Alaska, the Treasury Department is required to keep a separate account and to report annually to Congress.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], in the amendment which he offers, proposes a plan which, I believe, is unwise. His suggestion is that these moneys be paid into the Treasury and kept as a separate fund, and that from time to time the Treasury be reimbursed for the expenditures made on account of the construction of the railroad. That is unwise, because one of the arguments frequently urged for public improvements in various places is that the governmental receipts from that particular locality amount to a certain sum, and it is urged and believed in many places that there is never any legitimate objection to governmental expenses for a particular purpose equaling the receipts obtained from that source. Under the bill as it now is the cost of these railroads is to be paid out of the Federal Treasury, regardless of the receipts from Alaska. If it be determined that these railroads shall be built, they should not be dependent upon the receipts obtained from the sale of Alaskan public lands, or minerals, or coal, or town sites, because it is just possible that the first cost of contruction and the cost of operation of the railroads may for many years be much in excess of the receipts from the development of the Territory; and yet those who are best informed and most earnest in the advocacy of this bill do not look to full returns from the building of these railroads in the first few years, but they are looking to the future, and they believe that the development will be gradual, and that in time these receipts will be very great. There is no reason, though, that the receipts from these public lands and the sales of timber and town sites should be set aside and dedicated forever to the development and improvement of Alaska.

If Alaska is to be developed, if we are to obtain the returns from the wonderful resources pictured so graphically by many gentlemen, I believe Alaska should be a great source of revenue and benefit to the United States, and that the Government of the United States should have the benefit of the moneys derived from it, and that it is a wrong and unwise policy to embark upon this enterprise with any suggestion or any plan that will segregate the receipts, and so make them the basis of an argument in the future in favor of dedicating them to that one portion of the United States, regardless of the needs of the rest of the country.

Mr. Chairman, our true fiscal policy should be to have one general fund in the Treasury of the United States, against which will be charged the cost of conducting all governmental operations. Whenever it is deemed wise to embark on any enterprise let the Treasury stand the burden, regardless of the source of the receipts. There should not be any intimation or belief that the enterprise has a prior right or a mortgage or a claim upon the receipts derived from the enterprise.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is one which proposes to apply to the development of Alaska the very familiar principle which has been in operation in this country——

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Which amendment is pending before the committee now?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York. The other two amendments were read for the information of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was the pending amendment, and that the others had been read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. It is true that they were read for the information of Members. There is only one amendment really pending.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask unanimous consent that debate on all the amendments now pending and the paragraph itself close in 20 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Reserving the right to object, I respectfully suggest that this topic now under consideration, involving, as I believe, the whole subject of conservation, can not be adequately treated, nor can the views of Members be adequately presented, in 20 minutes. I myself would like 10 minutes. I have used no time in the Alaska discussion so far.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I amend my request and make it 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Why not have all these amendments offered, so that they will all be in order?

Mr. HOUSTON. Three amendments have been read. I do not know that there are any other amendments that are desired to be offered to this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] that he offer his amendment as an amendment to that of the gentleman from New York, and that the gentleman from Wisconsin offer his as a substitute, so that they may all be pending.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] an amendment?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No. I merely desire recognition.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Maryland has no amendment to offer.

Mr. MANN. I thought he was going to offer an amendment.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I am going to speak on the Bailey amendment, and I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] whether he will yield me time for its discussion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will include in my request that 10 minutes of the time be allowed to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's request does not touch the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] ask unanimous consent that all the amendments be pending?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] asks unanimous consent that all the amendments that have been read be now pending. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object, suppose the House adopts the Fitzgerald amendment, will it be in order to vote on the Bailey amendment? Will not the adoption of the Fitzgerald amendment render unnecessary a vote on the Bailey amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I do not think they are irreconcilable; they might be made complementary.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] are not pending. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Wisconsin may be pending and voted upon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, by inserting the word "lease," with a comma, before the word "sale."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. What became of the request of the gentleman from Tennessee to limit debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to put the question. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment I offered pending?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I am opposed to the spirit of it. I believe the resources of Alaska ought to be used for the benefit and development of Alaska. That is the principle for which I stand, and I submit that the amendment now pending is against that principle. I believe if these railways are built they will create values which ought properly to be appropriated for the carrying on of the expenses of the building.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman understand that 99 per cent of all the property in Alaska belongs to the United States?

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that quite well, and I hope that condition will rapidly pass away.

Mr. OGLESBY. Of whom would you collect the assessment?

Mr. BAILEY. Of those to whom the property belongs after it is created. That is the position I assume, and I think it is absolutely defensible. I hope that the amendment now pending will be voted down and an opportunity be given to support the amendment I have offered, one that I believe should appeal to every man, one providing that the cost of the improvements shall be taken out of the benefits thereby created.

Now, there is nothing new or strange in that proposal. It is one that we have followed in the redemption of swamp lands, it is one that we have followed in the irrigation of arid lands——

Mr. SHERLEY. And that is one of the reasons why the Reclamation Service is subject to all the protests that are made.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that there have been administrative errors in the matter of the irrigation of arid land.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why? Because they had control of the money instead of Congress having control of it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is mere detail; that does not affect the principle. I stand for the principle and not for any misconception of it. I believe that there will be values created by this proposed improvement. If I did not believe that, I would oppose the bill with all my might. I favor the bill with the amendment that I have proposed, an amendment that I believe will lead to the development of Alaska.

Now, we know what will happen if the plan embodied in the bill is allowed to stand as at present. The resources will be sold at a low price, sold to those who get there first, will be grabbed up by forestallers, and then the people when they come will have to pay a royal tribute to those who got there first. That is what happened in Oklahoma; that is what has happened everywhere that development has been made under the old system. The system proposed in my amendment will largely discourage forestallers. I hope there will be an opportunity given for discussion of this amendment, and I protest with all my might against the proposition offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the House to what I conceive to be a matter of principle and the most important feature of this Alaskan legislation. There are many of us here to-day who realize that we are putting the hard-earned money of our workers here temporarily into a hole in Alaska. But I feel that the conservation policy, the purpose, and the determination of our people to prevent plutocratic ownership in Alaska requires this sacrifice on our part.

There are many here, including myself, who would not consent to build a railroad in that bleak region, with its insufficient promises of traffic to pay returns. But in this connection I want to make this proposition to the House. There probably never has been builded a railroad anywhere that, incidentally, has not created values in the surrounding land greater than its own cost of construction. If we put $35,000,000 into a railway in Alaska, we are practically sure of creating $35,000,000 of values in the environing land.

Now, the proposition embraced in the Bailey amendment is that these values are like street openings—benefits, so to speak. The building of this railroad through Alaska differs not in principle from the opening of a street in this city, in which case there would be levied on the adjoining owners the benefits accruing to their properties. This amendment merely means that we will treat the property of Alaska as we would treat the property owners of the city of Washington. It is suggested that the land is not yet sold. No; there is the trouble with this matter. As soon as the railroad is assured of being built the Government will open up these lands for sale, and speculators with a few dollars in their pockets will go to Alaska and capture all of the lands of prime value, it may be at a small per cent of their real ultimate value.

Now, when these sales take place, and they must take place, they should be coupled with the condition that the values created by the Government through this railway should be an asset from which might be recovered, so far as possible, the cost of this construction. And the amendment proposes to reach that object by providing for, first, an assessment of what those benefits amount to from time to time, and then a levy on the assessments not exceeding 5 per cent per annum. If we are simply to throw the $35,000,000 into Alaska without any protective measure of this character to bring the resulting land-increment values back to the Treasury that made them, we will be subsidizing Alaska, not for the benefit of its people but for the benefit of a lot of schemers, not settlers, who will go there to capture these values.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, are we not in the situation of a man who owns a tract of land and who runs a street through it to develop it, and then gets the benefit of the street by the increased value of the lots that he sells?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No. He is a private owner and knows the value of every lot, and usually holds that lot until he gets its real value. The Government is impersonal and is not in Alaska in such a personal way, and will not know what the value of the lands may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, this conservation is not an irrational sentiment, springing merely from emotional persons and without logic and sound philosophy to support it. We have acted on it well enough to conserve our waterfalls, to conserve territory within the domain of the Republic proper, and we should take proper measures to realize it as well in Alaska. We should realize that when building a railroad through Alaska we are producing a result in value creation comparable with those tremendous deposits of coal, and there is not any more reason why we should endeavor to conserve those coal values for the people than that we should try to conserve the value springing directly from the construction of this proposed railroad. If you add this amendment to this measure, your conservation policy will be complete. You undertake this perilous investment because you feel we should keep faith with the conservation sentiment of the country. That is one step; but the consequential and objective essential is that the values you make by this construction shall, at least in part, be conserved to the taxpayers of the country, whose money goes into this railroad.

I thank the committee for its patient attention.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand it, the gentleman is in favor of conserving the coal supply of Alaska. Is that his position?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Surely.

Mr. WINGO. I thought the object of this bill was to open up and exploit the gold supply of Alaska?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Oh, well, I mean conserving the values of the coal for the public, because the coal has no value in the mountains. It is only when it is used and burned that it is of value.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is a conservationist. Does he not think that the same rule would apply to the 889,000 acres of the richest land in the country in my district that has been bottled up to conserve its value?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. That is another subject which I would like to hear the gentleman discuss in his own time. This is a distinct subject that is before us to-day. We are taking this money from the taxpayers, who have earned it, and when we see it is going to produce some money on its own account, as an incident, perhaps enough ultimately to repay the whole investment, it is our duty, as a matter of loyalty to our paymasters, to conserve it for them instead of letting it drift into the hands of the schemers of this country.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the point, and I want to get the gentleman's view upon it. I do not understand the conservationists, of which the gentleman is one, when they contend that they want to build a railroad in Alaska to open up the natural resources of Alaska, and yet want to bottle up the natural resources of my district by withdrawing them from entry. What is the distinction?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman is mistaken and will have to guess again. I never before heard about the lands in his district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the position taken by the two gentlemen who have just spoken seems to my mind to be predicated upon two errors. One is that the Government of the United States of necessity is going to be a fool, and the other is that there is no way of getting values from the improvement made except by an assessment on the property. What is the fact? The fact is that the Government of the United States owns Alaska, for the amount it does not own is so small as to be negligible. It is in the exact position of a private landowner who undertakes to open up his property by development, by building streets and sewers, and bringing light and water there for the prospective owners of the land. The value immediately goes into the land and can be reflected in the price for which the land is sold. There is another proposition that I desire to suggest to some of my extreme conservationist friends, and that is that the most valuable asset in America is not the value of the mineral land or of the timberland, but the value of self-supporting individuals who create and maintain American homes and raise American families. [Applause.] That has been the thing that has made America great—the fact that we have used the public domain, sometimes loosely, sometimes with error, but always with the main proposition of making it the basis for homes for American citizens. We are developing Alaska with the ultimate purpose of making there homes for the people of this Republic. What I want to see is this railroad built, and then the lands sold for a proper value, and sold so as to bring them to the use of individuals rather than to the corporate and extreme use of monopoly.

If we do that, we do not need to worry so much as to whether we get every dollar of value into the Treasury of the United States or not. The program that the gentleman suggests, to my mind, is totally impracticable. We are undertaking to mortgage the future in a way that can not be worked out. Let the improvement come to the lands, and then in the disposition of them safeguard them so that they can go to the individual citizens of America. Ask a fair price, not a prohibitive one, and make it the medium for more American homes for Americans. [Loud applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I did not have opportunity to offer an amendment which seems to me to be important. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] has suggested a part of it, but his amendment does not reach what I conceive to be a serious defect in this particular paragraph. I say this because of my understanding, from reading the public press, that it is the policy of the present administration hereafter to lease coal and mineral lands as other great nations do, and not to transfer the absolute title in fee in such lands to private ownership. But the pending paragraph plainly implies that Government coal and mineral lands in Alaska are to be sold outright. This is clearly so, because, in line 9, page 15, it provides for a redemption fund "into which shall be paid 50 per cent of all moneys derived from the sale or disposal of any of the public lands." That expression, "any of the public lands," includes, of course, coal and mineral lands; and therefore here is a provision expressly declaring what shall be done with 50 per cent of moneys derived from the sale of Alaskan coal and mineral lands.

The word "disposal" does not include lease or leasing. "Disposal" of land means some sort of transfer or conveyance. So that, as I have said, this provision inferentially is for the transfer of Government coal and mineral lands in Alaska to private ownership.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois suggested the word "lease."

Mr. COOPER. I understood that, and referred to his amendment a moment ago; but it is not broad enough to cover this defect. In order to make the language of the bill accurate, it should, after the words "50 per cent," in line 10, page 15, read as follows, "50 per cent of all moneys derived from the lease of coal or mineral lands in Alaska and from the lease, sale, or disposal of any other public lands therein, or the timber thereon, including town sites." The administration may want to lease public lands in Alaska that are not coal and mineral lands, or to sell such lands outright, but it does not, we are informed, want to do but one thing with the coal and mineral lands in that Territory. It wants to do as all the countries of continental Europe do, lease coal and mineral lands—the royalty may be small—but to retain the title in the Government. But this bill directs what shall be done with moneys derived from the sale of coal and mineral lands, and ought to be amended.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I will add that I was cut off from offering an amendment by the motion which was put and carried to limit debate.

Mr. LENROOT. I have a similar amendment, and the gentleman will have an opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. COOPER. I understood that debate was closed on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Then I will offer an amendment later.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York and the one proposed by myself. There is only one difference between his amendment and my amendment, and that is if my amendment be adopted it will, in so far as we can do so, place a mortgage upon the resources of Alaska for the payment of the cost of this railroad. If his amendment be adopted, it will be treated as a general expenditure of the Treasury to be paid by all the people of the United States. Now, my amendment provides for an Alaskan fund into which shall be paid these moneys, and upon the order of the President from time to time they may be transferred into the general fund of the Treasury and reimburse it for expenditures that have been made under the authority of this act. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is to be done with the receipts of this fund if it should be sufficient to reimburse the Treasury up to the $35,000,000 and there happens to be a surplus?

Mr. LENROOT. I frankly admit that so far as that is concerned it would require additional legislation thereafter to take the moneys out of that fund and place them in the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the provision I offer it would be in the Treasury.

Mr. LENROOT. And yet the gentleman knows it would be a great many years before the fund would equal the amount of the expenditure, and whenever it does equal it the gentleman knows there will be no difficulty whatever in appropriating the money and doing away with that special fund when this expenditure is made. But with the gentleman's amendment we will pay no regard to the resources of Alaska, so far as paying for this work is concerned. With my amendment we will treat the resources of Alaska as something to reimburse this Government for the expenditures which it makes under this act. And every gentleman who is not in favor of the country as a whole paying for this expenditure ought to vote for my amendment and against the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Bailey amendment will be adopted by this House. As the author of it suggested, there is nothing extraordinary or new about the proposition. We try it out almost every day in the municipalities of the United States. The amendment provides that the values created by the construction of this railroad shall be assessed to the extent of 5 per cent per year for the creation of a fund with which to meet the expenses of constructing this railroad. As a matter of fact, in a great many of our cities, when we create civic centers and park districts and similar public improvements, we assess the cost of the improvement on the property benefited. The method adopted is not always the method suggested in the pending amendment, but the principle is the same.

Now, our friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] imagines that this would retard development. He says that the Government of the United States will not throw away its Alaskan lands; that it will sell the lands for a reasonable price. What does the gentleman propose to do? Does he propose to amend the land laws of the United States? There is no proposition before this House looking to such an amendment. The lands of Alaska will be settled as the lands in the United States have been settled, under the general land law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Under the present situation there are to be taken out of the area public lands for settlement. We do propose to pass laws just for the purpose of opening them.

Mr. KEATING. This amendment would not interfere with that.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the gentleman was going to provide it, what kind of machinery would he provide in order to determine the value of land as affected by the railroads?

Mr. KEATING. Any intelligent county assessor down in the State of Texas could perform the task.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I can not imagine how it would be possible.

Mr. KEATING. It is being done every day.

Mr. CALLAWAY. This proposition is to assess on all of the property affected by the railroad 5 per cent of the increased value each year, which shall be turned into the Federal Treasury to pay for this proposition.

Mr. KEATING. Just so. The assessor is expected to determine how much the value of each piece of land is increased by the construction of this road, and the Government will take 5 per cent of that value each year. If the Government—in other words, the people—creates the value, why should not it take a part, in order that it may be reimbursed for building the road?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say that, so far as the proposition involved in the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is concerned, I do not think either one of those amendments especially change the general purpose of the bill, inasmuch as the former section has been stricken out. Individually, I believe I prefer the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. So far as the other amendment is concerned, to tax the values that have been created by the building of this road, to say nothing of any other feature of it, it seems to me the impracticability of it is enough to deter us from anything of that sort. The levying of a tax at 5 per cent on the values that are created by the building of these roads is an impossible one to determine. It is like dropping a stone into the ocean. The waves extend clear across it. Where does the boundary line lie where benefits will accrue from this? I think it is impracticable.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. How does the proposition differ from the benefits arising to adjoining owners by the opening of a street?

Mr. HOUSTON. Because there it is definite. You can levy a tax on adjacent property just as you can levy a tax on abutting property for certain improvements. But here it is not definite, it is vague, and you can not tell where it extends.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that it is absolutely impossible, and no municipality ever attempted, to assess 5 per cent, or any per cent, on increased value, and that we only assess the property so much to build the improvement?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Oh, no.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman is correct. It would be impossible to put that in operation.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Some values are improved to a certain extent, and others to another extent. It is a very complex subject, but any man who is competent to assess the value of lands here can assess the value of those lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSTON. What is the amendment pending for a vote before the House first?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment pending for a vote, and that is the one offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The other amendment was offered for information.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. Will it be in order now to offer an amendment? Will there be an opportunity afforded to offer an amendment before the debate closes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] by adding the word "lease," with a comma, before the word "sale."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that ought to be in, Mr. Chairman. I will modify my amendment to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by him be amended as he suggests. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, is not the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in order for a vote now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is unless there are some amendments offered to it. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how his amendment is offered?

Mr. COOPER. I offer it as an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] offers his amendment as an amendment to the paragraph. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "the" in line 10——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That amendment, Mr. Chairman, is not in order now, pending a motion to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is not in order. The Chair sustains it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 4, page 15, and insert the following in lieu thereof.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that is not an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania intended?

Mr. BAILEY. It is to be added to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] says he adds it to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] as an amendment to the amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the Fitzgerald amendment, after the word "Congress," in the last line, the following: "The Secretary of the Treasury, under regulations to be approved by the President, shall cause to be assessed every two years the value accruing as benefits to any land in Alaska by reason of the construction of said railway or railways, and shall cause to be levied thereon and collected from the owners thereof an annual tax, not exceeding 5 per cent of the value of such benefits as assessed from time to time, and the proceeds of said tax shall be covered into the general revenues."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is not germane to the pending motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that it is not germane. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Oh, it is germane. It deals with the same subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It deals with the same subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not the same subject.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It is the same subject, to wit, the lands affected by this railroad, and the sales of the lands and the values attaching to those lands; and it provides that the tax shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. It relates to the subject matter, and relates to it in a supplementary way, and not in an irreconcilable way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman wishes to obtain a vote on the proposition I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws the point of order.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have a ruling from the Chair on the priority of my amendment, and I would like to say a word in reference to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman offered his amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. I will offer it now as a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 16, strike out the paragraph after the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "To reimburse the Treasury for disbursements made under the authority of this act."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not preferential.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for a moment on that?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The general rule is, of course, that it is within the right of the committee to perfect the original text before a motion to strike out an entire section or an entire bill and substitute another is in order. That, in effect, is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], to strike out an entire section and insert another. My amendment merely perfects the original text, strikes out certain words of it and inserts other words, and therefore I insist that my amendment has priority over the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is easy to get the rule of parliamentary procedure accurately before the committee. The customary practice is that when a motion to strike a paragraph out is offered it is in order to perfect the paragraph in order that the committee may determine whether the paragraph as finally perfected shall remain in the bill or go out of it. But there is an express provision in the rules that a motion to strike out a paragraph or certain language and to insert something in its place is not divisible. It is treated in its entirety, and if the motion fail it does not preclude an amendment of the text or a motion to strike out the text without suggesting that something be inserted. So that it becomes merely a question not of priority because of the privilege of the amendment but of priority of recognition. The amendment offered by me to strike out and insert is the one first to be submitted to the committee. If that amendment be adopted, it is immaterial whether the text be perfected. The committee would determine to insert something in lieu of the text. If that motion fails, however, then it is in order to perfect the text. Rule XVI, paragraph 7, specially provides that—

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert.

Without that particular rule making the motion to strike out and insert indivisible, the motion could be divided.

If the question were whether the language should be stricken out, an amendment to perfect that language would then first be in order; but as we have this special rule to facilitate the transaction of business, the question on a motion to strike out and insert is, Does the committee wish to insert the particular matter suggested? If it does, it saves considerable time to insert it without wasting the time of the committee in perfecting the matter that is to go out eventually. So that unless gentlemen can show some decision or rule, it seems to me clear, from an examination of the rules and practice, that the question is one of priority of recognition.

Mr. LENROOT. Neither the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] nor myself has been able, I think, to find any decision touching this question; but the same principle that the gentleman urges with reference to perfecting the text prior to a motion to strike out applies, I insist, with reference to a motion to strike out and insert, because the committee has a right to get the original text in as perfect form as possible, to enable it to decide whether it will agree to the motion to strike out and insert. So the reasoning applies equally to both cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that if this was a motion merely to strike out, then the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin would have priority, under paragraph 449 of the Manual, which says:

Another exception to the rule of priority is when a motion has been made to strike out or agree to a paragraph. Motions to amend it are to be put to the question before a vote is taken on striking out or agreeing to the whole paragraph.

But in this instance the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is a motion to strike out and insert, and, under paragraph 776—

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert.

The Chair thinks that in view of the fact that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is a motion to strike out and insert, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has no priority. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is already pending an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] is now pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 27, noes 126.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "the," in line 10, on page 15, down to and including the word "thereon," in line 12, on the same page, and insert the following:

"Lease of coal and mineral lands in Alaska, and from the sale, lease, or disposal of any other public lands therein, or the timber thereon, including town sites."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, so that the amendment may be in proper form, I ask the Clerk to modify it so as to describe accurately the language in the amendment submitted by me. The gentleman refers to a line and page of the bill, while I have submitted an amendment to which his proposition is an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be so modified as to conform to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOPER. So as to have it correspond with the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to modify it in such a way that it will come in at the proper place in the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the purpose of this amendment is so to modify the language as to make it clear that the proceeds of leases as well as sales shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. COOPER. Not only that, but——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say to the gentleman that the amendment provides only that the proceeds of leases of coal and mineral lands shall be covered into the Treasury. Suppose some of these coal or mineral lands are released, so that they become subject to entry under the homestead laws. Then, under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], such proceeds would not be covered by this amendment, unless the amendment provides that coal and mineral lands can only be leased and not otherwise disposed of. Is that correct?

Mr. LENROOT. Under the gentleman's amendment it already goes into the Treasury, anyway. There is no other place for it to go.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman from New York will turn to line 7, on page 13, he will see there this unusual language:

That it is the intent and purpose of Congress through this act to authorize and empower the President of the United States, and he is hereby fully authorized and empowered, through such officers, agents, or agencies as he may appoint or employ, to do all lawful acts and things in addition to those specially authorized in this act necessary to enable him to accomplish the purposes and objects of this act.

Then, turning to section 4, he will observe that it establishes a redemption fund, and then goes on to provide that 50 per cent of all moneys derived from the sale or disposal of any of the public lands in Alaska shall be paid into that redemption fund, which, inferentially at least, would convey the impression——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment offered by myself provides that all of the proceeds from the sale or disposal of the public lands, including town sites and coal and mineral lands, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. It makes no difference whether those proceeds be from sales or leases.

Mr. COOPER. But the gentleman does not catch my point——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. COOPER. I ask unanimous consent that we have five minutes, which I will divide with the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the point I make is that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] does provide for or impliedly permits the sale of coal and mineral lands, because the bill directs what shall be done with the proceeds of the "sale of all lands"; and the "sale of all lands" would include mineral lands, gold lands, copper lands, and everything else.

The turning of the proceeds into the Treasury has nothing to do with the sale and transfer of title in fee in lands to private ownership. As I understand, it is to be the policy of this administration not hereafter to convey indiscriminately to private corporations or individuals the title in fee to mineral lands, but retain such lands for lease as other countries do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the amendment I have offered no authority is conferred on anyone to sell or to lease the lands. The only thing it does is to provide that all revenue shall go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. It does not change the law as it exists. If it is the purpose of the gentleman to make it impossible to sell mineral lands, the way to do it is to offer an express provision to that effect in the nature of an amendment. His amendment provides that the proceeds of leasing of the coal and mineral lands only shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and accounted for and reported as provided in the amendment which I have proposed, and if coal and mineral lands should be sold and not leased the proceeds would not be accounted for.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman proposes inferentially to give our consent to the sale of coal lands to private ownership.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment proposed by me does not authorize any sale. It does not modify the law as it now exists. It is designed only to affect receipts under the law as now existing or as hereafter changed. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to take the proceeds, if coal or mineral lands are sold, from out the provisions of the section and keep them out of the account which it is designed shall be kept for the information of Congress.

Mr. COOPER. But the paragraph under discussion directs what shall be done with moneys derived from the sale of coal and mineral lands in Alaska, although, under the present law, such lands in Alaska are not permitted to be sold.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there is nothing in the amendment which I have offered that authorizes their sale. The only thing it provides is that the money, however it comes, shall be turned into the Treasury and an account kept of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOPER) there were—ayes 35, noes 95.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LENROOT) there were—ayes 111, noes 57.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the officers, agents, or agencies placed in charge of the work by the President shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required by the President or by either House of Congress, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all moneys received and expended in the construction of said work and in the operation of said work or works and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith. The annual reports herein provided for shall be by the President transmitted to Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new section, to be known and numbered as section 8, which shall read as follows:

"That the jurisdiction of the District Court of Alaska shall extend to any and all controversies which may arise between the United States and any person, association, or corporation growing out of any acts done or threatened, or contracts entered into under or pursuant to this act. All causes against the United States brought and tried under the provisions of this section shall be tried in the same manner and under the same rules as controversies between citizens. The venue in any case involving such a controversy shall be in the division in which the cause of action arose, if it arose in Alaska. If it arose elsewhere than in Alaska, the venue shall be within the division in which is the capital of the Territory. Process in any such case against the United States may be served upon the district attorney assigned to the division in which the action is brought: Provided, That in actions for the personal injury or death of employees the liability of the Government shall be determined by the rules and subject to the limitations respecting defenses that are provided in the case of common carriers by the act of April 22, 1908, entitled 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases.' "

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take any time on this amendment other than to say that its purpose is to extend the jurisdiction of the Federal Court in Alaska to controversies against the Government arising out of the construction of this railroad. For instance, an employee is injured in the operation of this road; he ought to have the same right to go into the courts of Alaska in an action against the Government that an employee of any other railroad would have, and that anyone who has a grievance or a legal right to enforce against the Government in the construction of this railroad ought to have a forum near at hand in which to enforce it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would this give an employee a right to bring an action for a personal injury against the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. It would.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think that in building these railroads employees should be put on a plane different from that of the employees engaged in the construction of the Panama Canal?

Mr. LENROOT. I think they should be placed on the same basis, so far as the Government is concerned, with any private employee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe we should differentiate between the employees in the construction of these railroads and the employees in the construction of the Panama Canal?

Mr. LENROOT. If we have not gone far enough in the construction of the Panama Canal, that is no reason why we should not do justice to the employees in the construction of a railroad in Alaska.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that we have not gone far enough with the empoyees of the Panama Canal.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Territories did not think it wise to include this provision embraced in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. There was not much objection to some features of it, but it was considered that it would be best not to encumber the bill with a provision of this kind; we thought it ought to stand on the clean proposition to construct the railroad and not be encumbered with these matters.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the pending measure I desire to include a bill introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, December 16, 1850, providing for the location and construction of a central national highway from the Mississippi River, at St. Louis, to the Bay of San Francisco, on the Pacific Ocean.

I invite the careful attention of the Members of the House to the provisions of the bill, and especially I commend it to those of the Democratic faith who are so badly frightened at the ghost of Government ownership of railroads.

Senator Benton was a great statesman and a great Democrat, and none of that political faith will go far astray in following closely his ideas of the powers of the Government to build railroads and own and operate them. My own opinion is that many worse evils can inflict this country than Government ownership of public utilities, but that question is not now before us for consideration.

When the people's representatives shall be called upon to determine that question, I have no doubt of their ability and patriotism to settle it and settle it right.

Let us pass the pending measure—keep all our party pledges and aid in the development of the great natural resources of Alaska and provide homes for Americans on American soil.

The bill introduced by Senator Benton in the United States Senate on December 16, 1850, is as follows:

A bill to provide for the location and construction of a central national highway from the Mississippi River at St. Louis to the Bay of San Francisco on the Pacific Ocean.

Be it enacted, etc., That a district of territory 100 miles wide and extending from the western frontier of Missouri to the Pacific Ocean and corresponding as nearly as may be to the central latitudes of the United States, together with the revenue from the lands and customs in California, Oregon, New Mexico, and Arizona, so far as not required for expenditures therein, shall be set apart and reserved for opening communications with California, Oregon, New Mexico, and Utah by means of a central national highway from St. Louis to the Bay of San Francisco, to connect with ocean navigation in that bay; with a branch of said highway to Sante Fe, in New Mexico; and a branch to the tidewater region of the Columbia River, so as to connect with ocean navigation at that point; and also a branch to the city of the Great Salt Lake, if said central highway should not in its purpose course pass that city; and a branch of 50 miles shall be set apart and reserved for the location and construction of said branch roads, respectively.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said central national highway shall consist of a system of parallel roads adapted to different modes of travel and transportation and a margin for lines of electro-telegraph wires, whereof one common road and one iron railroad shall be immediately opened and constructed; and such other roads shall be hereafter opened and constructed as Congress from time to time may authorize. And in order that the said national central highway may be constructed on a scale commensurate to its importance and adapted to the wants of present and future time, and in order to allow convenient space for all parallel lines of road which commerce and travel may require thereon, a breadth of 1 mile shall be allowed through the reserve of 100 miles; and the said branch road shall equally consist of a common road and a railway and such other roads as Congress may from time to time authorize and direct, with a margin for a line of electrotelegraph wires; and a breadth of 1,000 feet shall be allowed through the reserve of 50 miles for such branch roads each, respectively, and each track of road shall be entitled to a space of 100 feet wide, and the telegraph line to a space of 100 feet wide; and when finished the said iron railway or ways shall never be subjected to any toll or tax beyond that which may be necessary to provide repairs; and the said common roads shall be forever free from any toll or tax, and shall be kept in traveling order by the care and expense of the Federal Government.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized and requested to cause all the authentic information in possession of the Government, or in its power to procure, necessary to show the practicability of a route for said central highway, to be collected and digested into brief memoirs, illustrated by topographical and profile maps, to be laid before Congress as soon as possible; also that he be authorized and requested to cause surveys and examinations to be made and the results to be laid before Congress as soon as possible, and for that purpose to employ as many citizen civil engineers as may be necessary.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That as soon as Congress shall fix upon the route for said central highway and branches the President shall be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to cause the Indian title to be extinguished upon a breadth of 100 miles to cover the route of said central highway; and also to extinguish the Indian title upon suitable breadths of 50 miles each, covering the said branch roads; and the location and construction of the central highway shall immediately be commenced, both for the common road and the railway, and with a force calculated to finish the common road in 1 year, so as to be passable for wagons and carriages, and the railway in 10 years.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That as soon as the said common road is finished the same shall be a post road, and a daily mail carried thereon in wagons or coaches or sleighs, when necessary, at the rate of at least 100 miles in 24 hours; and a daily horse mail for light letters and printed slips at the rate of at least 200 miles in 24 hours.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That as soon as said railway, or any sufficient part thereof, shall be completed and fit for use, the use thereof shall be granted for a limited time to such individuals or companies as shall, by contract with the Government, agree to transport persons, mails, munitions of war, and freight of all kinds, public and private, in vehicles furnished by themselves, over the same at such reasonable rates as shall be agreed upon: Provided, That if other roads shall hereafter be constructed on the ground reserved for roads by this act, the same company or persons shall not be allowed to have the contract for transportation or any interest in more than one road at the same time.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That military stations shall be established on the line of the central highway and its branches, at such places as the President shall direct.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That donations of land, to the extent of 160 acres, shall be made to each head of a family, widow, or single man over 18 years of age, who shall be settled on the line of said central highway and branches, and within the bounds of the extinguished Indian claims, within 12 months after the time of such extinction of title, and preemption rights to the same extent shall be allowed to all similar settlers after 12 months, and the residue of said reserve districts, except gold mines and placers and private claims, or donations or preemption rights, shall be sold, and the proceeds applied to the construction of the roads.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $300,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, shall be, and the same is hereby, appropriated and placed at the disposition of the President to defray the expenses of carrying into effect the third and fourth sections of this act, for the collection and preparation of information and the extinction of Indian titles necessary to the selection and location of the route for the said central national highway and branches.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the President of the United States to contract with the Mississippi & Pacific Railroad Co. for their interest in so much of said road as shall be within the State of Missouri, and to purchase the same at a price not exceeding their actual expenditures, the said purchase to be subject to the ratification of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin proposes a distinct step backward in the progressiveness of the country. Everyone agrees that instead of putting an employee in any enterprise at his peril by requiring him to enter the courts in order to obtain redress because of personal injury, or in case of his death for the relief of his relatives, some certain and sure provision should be made for him under the provisions of a wise employers' liability act. Yet it is proposed in the construction of this Alaskan railway that employees shall not be placed on the same plane as the employees of the Panama Canal, who are entitled to definite compensation in case of injury, and certain payments to relatives in case of death, but that they shall be relegated to the courts in case of injury or death.

Without having time to examine the amendment carefully, it seems to me that it puts everybody that does business with the Government in connection with the Alaskan railway upon an entirely different footing than persons enjoy doing business in other enterprises.

The Court of Claims exists with certain well-defined jurisdiction. We have certain other restrictions and regulations to protect the Government, but under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin all the safeguards to protect the Federal Treasury, the result of years of experience, are cast aside, and the Government is placed in the same category as a plivate citizen and relegated to the jurisdiction of a single court in Alaska.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the gentleman state what relief any employee of this railroad would have under this law without this amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Without referring to the statute, I am unable to say. If he does not have it under the statute, which should give him the same relief that every other employee of the Government—every artisan and mechanic—has, then this bill should be amended, or, as soon as that question is ascertained, the law should be extended to the employees to be engaged in Alaska. These men will not be employed in the field within the immediate future. There will be ample time to make provision, and adequate provision, for them; but to adopt an amendment like the one proposed, and to put the Government in a position where anyone with a grievance in connection with the construction of this railroad can take it into the district court of Alaska, regardless of what the situation may be, would be to put the Government in a situation in which its interest will not be adequately safeguarded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the Panama Canal bill was before the House in the last Congress I offered an amendment, which was agreed to, authorizing the President to make regulations and provisions for payment on behalf of all employees who were injured or killed upon the work down there. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is in the Senate bill. It will go into conference if this bill passes the House, I assume. I believe that in the conference the House conferees might do well to take that provision which was in the Panama Canal law providing that the President may make provision for the payment for the loss by death of employees or for the injury of employees. The President has not yet made those regulations upon the Panama Canal, although I was informed a short time ago by the Secretary of War that it was expected they would be made soon. I assume, in my ignorance, that when the President gets time, apart from trying to repudiate the Democratic platform on the toll question, he will take up the question of making compensation to the injured employees on the Panama Canal, which is of vital importance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

(By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. FARR, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. REILLY of Connecticut, Mr. MAHAN, Mr. FITZHENRY, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. LINTHICUM to extend their remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 48, the Alaska railroad bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I move that further consideration of this bill be postponed until next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is that motion in order, the previous question having been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage, and the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma is out of order.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the House should adjourn now, would this bill, the previous question having been ordered, come up the first thing to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It would not come up until next Calendar Wednesday. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House do now adjourn, and on that motion he demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Fitzgerald amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the Fitzgerald amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Fitzgerald amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories, with instructions to report it back with the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITE moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories with instructions to report it back with the following amendments:

"That the authority of the President be limited to the construction of a railroad to the Bering or the Matanuska coal fields and the construction of highways leading into the interior from the railroad so authorized.

"That the limit of cost for the construction of the railroad referred to be, and is hereby, fixed at $8,000,000, and the cost of the highways at $2,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it, the ayes have it——

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 232, nays 86, answered "present" 7, not voting 106, as follows:

Mr. BRADY. I present resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club and the Idaho-Washington Development League, of Lewiston, Idaho, November 22, 1913, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions relative to appropriation by the United States Government for construction of highways on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation, within the boundaries of Nez Perce County, State of Idaho, adopted by Lewiston Commercial Club and Idaho-Washington Development League, of Lewiston, Idaho, November 22, 1913.

Whereas the building of modern highways serving the natural lines of interstate travel bisecting the proposed great national highways now under construction or proposed is a pressing need; and

Whereas the disposition of the State and county governments in the Pacific Northwest is favorable at the present time to the construction of the trunk lines forming necessary links in the general system of good roads; and

Whereas Nez Perce County, Idaho, by reason of its topography, is vitally related to the north and south highway systems proposed by the States of Idaho, Oregon, and Washington; and

Whereas one-half of the total area of Nez Perce County is embraced in the Nez Perce Indian Reservation, 78,400 acres of which, valued at $2,900,000, belongs to the Indians and is held in trust by the United States Government, and therefore not subject to taxation; and in view of the fact that 167,000 acres on this reservation, valued at $3,300,000, belongs to whites and is subject to taxation; and

Whereas these white settlers, in connection with the citizens residing in those portions of Nez Perce County outside the reservation, have hitherto provided the funds by taxation for all road building throughout the reservation, approximating during the past 10 years $300,000; and

Whereas it is now important that a general system of good highways throughout the county should be constructed in order to merge practically with the extensive highway development above mentioned: Therefore

Resolved, That we urge upon the National Government, through the Interior Department, the appropriation of the sum of $300,000 for the construction of a highway system on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation in Nez Perce County, Idaho, conditional upon the appropriation by Nez Perce County of not less than $500,000, for the development of a general and permanent highway system in said county, routes and methods of construction to be determined by agreement between the proper Government and county officials.

Resolved, That we believe the construction of such proposed highways in the territory named, by reason of its topography, will provide direct wagon routes from rich productive regions to the water transportation lines of the Snake River and tributaries, which water transportation lines the Government has made possible through large appropriations hitherto made for the construction of the Celilo Canal and the improvement of the Columbia and Snake Rivers.

Further, that we believe said independent highway systems will be a perpetual guaranty to Indians and whites upon said reservation of reasonable freight rates by virtue of the connection afforded by such highways with the open river boats.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I notice that on yesterday during my absence the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] introduced a bill (S. 4514) to authorize the President of the United States to mine coal in Alaska, to reserve from private appropriation or lease certain lands and coal deposits in Alaska owned by the United States, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which I have the honor to be chairman.

The propriety of that reference having been questioned by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], a discussion ensued in which was brought out the fact that a bill in relation to the disposition of coal lands in Alaska had been referred to that committee. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] then signified that when I should appear in the Chamber he would move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of that bill and that it be turned over to the Committee on Public Lands.

I feel quite certain that the Senator from Arizona would not be moved to take that action if he understood the conditions. That bill was prepared as the result of repeated conferences, participated in by the Secretary of the Interior, the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House, the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Territories of the House, and the chairman of the Committee on Territories of the Senate. My colleague, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, himself asked in the last conference so held that the bill be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

That committee has likewise before it under consideration a bill creating a commission to revise and codify the laws in relation to the mineral lands. It is and has been holding hearings upon a bill for the disposition of lands containing radium bearing ores. It has given consideration to all three of those bills, and it will report the bill in relation to the disposition of coal lands in Alaska within the present week. It has a session this afternoon for the purpose of considering that measure. It has been considering both the other measures and is all but ready to report upon them.

Mr. President, I trust the action suggested will not be taken. There is no justification for it at all. Whatever may have been the course in the past, the Committee on Mines and Mining was constituted apparently by the Senate for the purpose of dealing with exactly such questions as these.

The Committee on Public Lands is a committee of 18 members. It deals with all the public lands of every character; at least it has done so in the past. It has a tremendous amount of work to do. The chairman of the committee indicated to us that they are overburdened with labors and asked that the Committee on Mines and Mining be permitted to take charge of this particular bill.

Mr. President, every member of the Committee on Mines and Mining save one comes from mineral-land States. There is only one other member, and he is not an active member of any committee, laboring under some infirmities of sickness and age. So you may say that every working member of that committee comes from a mineral-land State.

Not only that, Mr. President, but, without any reference to the chairman, the committee numbers among its members men of eminence as lawyers having experience in the trial of causes arising under the mining laws. It is true there are likwise some members of the Committee on Public Lands who have been called upon to deal in actual practice with these laws; but I submit, Mr. President, that the proper disposition of the bill has been made. We are practically ready to report upon the bill, and I appeal to the Senator from Utah not to press his objection to the reference. We will have the report here in just a little while, and I am sure the whole matter can be expedited by allowing the report to come in and having the merits of the various bills dealing with the question discussed upon the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, upon investigation before the Committee on Public Lands it was learned that this particular bill touching the disposition by lease or otherwise of coal lands in Alaska was before the Committee on Public Lands for probably a couple of years.

Mr. SMOOT. For six years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. For six or seven years it has been under consideration and a vast amount of testimony taken. We have the position here of one committee taking up the coal lands and the other taking up exactly the same question, and the two committees probably making different reports to this body. So there is a conflict of jurisdiction.

Though the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and the chairman of every other committee in the Senate should have consented or requested that the bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, it nevertheless confers no jurisdiction by such consent or request,

The Committee on Public Lands have always had jurisdiction of the coal lands of the country. The Committee on Mines and Mining, on which I served for many years in the other House, never once had referred to it a bill touching coal lands. I expect it is the first time in the history of this body that the great question of coal lands, not considered strictly mineral lands, has gone to the Committee on Mines and Mining. On account of this coflict of jurisdiction the Committee on Public Lands requested at its last meeting that a motion be made to refer the bill to that committee.

It was not of my own seeking that the motion was made or the notice given on yesterday. It was by order of the committee, so as to avoid confusion of jurisdiction, that the request was made of me to make the motion to have this bill transferred to the Committee on Public Lands, which for five or six years has had these questions under close investigation. The bill ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands, or else, as I have said, we shall get the jurisdiction so mixed that the Senate will have neither committee on which to rely.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had hoped that when this matter was called to the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, he would readily consent to the request of the Public Lands Committee that the Mines and Mining Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. President, bills of this character have been under the jurisdiction of the Public Lands Committee ever since the Public Lands Committee was created in this body, and I want to emphasize the statement made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] that this same subject has been before the Committee on Public Lands for six years. That committee has had hearing after hearing upon it and report after report from not only the Interior Department, but the War Department and the Department of Agriculture as well. There is before that committee this very day reports from all of those departments upon a bill which was introduced and referred to that committee upon this identical subject. When the Public Lands Committee asked the Secretary of the Interior to make a report upon the bill it is true that the Secretary did refer to this bill and said that it was before the Mines and Mining Committee, and that the department had considered the measure and recommended that the provisions of the measure be enacted into law; but, Mr. President, the Public Lands Committee was ready to make a report a week ago Wednesday last upon the bill that was referred to them. They have, I repeat, considered this matter. There is not a single member of that committee who does not thoroughly understand it, having heard the testimony that has been given upon this measure for the last five or six years.

The Public Lands Committee consists of 15 members, and every member of the committee, with the exception of two, comes from a public-land State. The only two members who are on that committee who do not come from a public-land State are Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, of Louisiana, and Hon. WILLIAM HUGHES, of New Jersey.

Mr. President, I do not favor the change of reference because I object to the members of the Committee on Mines and Mining or because I would expect an adverse report from that committee. That is not the question involved. I would have just as much confidence in their report or the investigation they make as I would if the investigation were made and the report presented to this body by the Committee on Public Lands, but the subject, I repeat, comes under the jurisdiction of the Public Lands Commtitee, and the bill should have been referred to that committee.

Only the day before yesterday the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the Public Lands Committee of the other House, when the very bill that was referred to the Mines and Mining Committee of this body was being considered by that committee. It is recognized in the other House that the Public Lands Committee of that body has jurisdiction of this subject. I believe that, if Senators here would consider the matter, there would not be an objection on the part of Senators to the bill being referred to the Public Lands Committee of the Senate.

I hope the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], since this question has been brought to his attention, as it has been this morning, will not now object to the action requested by the senior Senator from Arizona. It is a just request, and it is pursuing a course which should have been pursued in this body in the beginning.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana has no personal desire in this matter; he has no desire at all regarding it except to expedite the disposition of this very vexed question. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] tells you that his committee has been laboring with this subject for six years. Meanwhile the lands of Alaska have been tied up. It is necessary to have something done about them now. We have prepared a bill, which has met with the approbation of the chairmen of the Committee on Mines and Mining, of the Public Lands Committee, and of the Territories Committee of both Houses of Congress. It is simply a matter of arranging the details of the bill, of getting the approbation of the other members of the committee, and of getting the bill into this body. I submit to the Senator from Utah that it will expedite the disposition of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that this proposed legislation would have been enacted into law long ago if it had depended upon the Senate of the United States alone. It has already been reported from the Public Lands Committee and once passed this body, but failed of passage in the other House.

I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that a favorable report was made upon this bill three years ago by all three of the executive departments I have named, and that there has not been a Secretary of the Interior for the last six years who has not been in favor of this class of legislation. I repeat that we could have passed this legislation in this body at almost any time, but when passed here it failed in the other House.

Mr. President, the Public Lands Committee will report the bill at the very next meeting, and it will then be on the calendar for early consideration. There is no further hearing to be had. The Public Lands Committee has jurisdiction of the subject; and, I repeat, that the bill ought to have been referred to that committee in the first place. I hope the Senate will agree to the request of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, this bill belongs properly to the Committee on Public Lands. It is not a question of the personal desires of members of the committee. It is a rather singular condition of things that the chairmen of the various committees of the Senate should assemble themselves together with the heads of certain departments of the Government and determine in advance to what committee a bill should be referred, thereby interfering with the due course of the proceedings of this body. Why that has been done, of course, I do not know, but it is an irregular proceeding; and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands had no right or jurisdiction to determine that question in advance for either his committee or for the Senate.

This is an exceedingly important matter to be determined by Congress. I know since I have been a Member of the Senate and also a member of the Committee on Public Lands this whole question has received the most careful and conscientious consideration. There has been no lack of diligence on the part of the committee, and there is no reason that I can conceive of why this particular legislation should be taken out of the hands of that committee and turned over to some other committee.

For that reason, if for no other, Mr. President, I think this bill ought to take its regular course and be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and I am sorry that I am not able to agree with my colleagues on that committee with regard to the reference of this bill. I feel that it ought to be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining as has been suggested here.

The argument which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] makes for a reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands is really an argument against its reference to that committee. For five years during my term in the Senate, I believe, we have been wrestling with this coal-leasing proposition, but nothing has been accomplished.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, much testimony has been taken——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, the testimony that has been taken before the Committee on Public Lands is accessible to the Committee on Mines and Mining. I am not criticizing the Committee on Public Lands—I am a member of it—but I have a right, I think, to suggest that that committee has been dilatory about this business. They have taken testimony, a good deal of it during the incumbency of Mr. Fisher as Secretary of the Interior, who favored some such bill as this; but I believe if Congress is going to do anything in the way of legislating in regard to coal lands, this measure ought to go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, which, I am sure, will avail itself of the information which the Committee on Public Lands has and will report a bill so that it may be acted upon. It is all the more essential now, because a railroad is likely to be constructed into Alaska in the very near future. I received this morning a letter on this subject from Valdez, Alaska, showing the renewed interest that is already being taken in Alaska, stating that people are going into that country with the expectation that the road will be constructed, and prophesying immediate development. The coal-leasing bill now being discussed here is one of the steps that will aid in the rapid development of Alaska; and I am sure that if the bill goes to the Committee on Mines and Mining it will be reported out quite promptly.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator by what process of reasoning or on what information he bases his conclusion that the bill will be more rapidly reported out for action by the Committee on Mines and Mining than by the Committee on Public Lands? I happen to be a member of both committees, and therefore I will have an equal chance to consider the matter, to whichever committee the bill may be referred; but we are assured by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands has cooperated with the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining in the preparation of this bill, so that it seems the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, at least, has the information that the other members of either committee may not have equally with the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining. It seems to me for the Senator to say, unless he has some good reason for it, that in the interest of hastening the consideration of this necessary legislation the bill should be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining rather than to the Committee on Public Lands is a singular statement, and I think he should give the Senate some reason for it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can give the Senator a reason.

Mr. FALL. I should like to hear it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I judge of the future by the past in reference to this particular legislation; and if the Senator wants me to tell some tales out of school, I will say that it has been almost a physical impossibility to get the Public Lands Committee together. It is a very large committee, and we never have a full committee meeting. At the last meeting we barely had a quorum, and I do not believe, Mr. President, that it will be possible to get the committee together to take up this matter systematically and urge it promptly.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Committee on Public Lands of this body has met more regularly than any other committee of this body?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That may be true; but I am sorry to say, Mr. President, that none of these committees are doing their duty to the people of this country or to the Senate.

Mr. FALL. That may be; but why does the Senator, who is not a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, insist that the Public Lands Committee is dilatory and that the Committee on Mines and Mining would hasten the legislation? I have no personal objection to the reference to either of these committees. As I have said, I have an equal opportunity, as a member of both, to consider the matter in committee.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest a broadening of the question that has been put? I observe that Senators are broadening it from the question regarding the Public Lands Committee to a question regarding the committees generally of this body; and it is but one step to this question which I propose—whether our methods of transacting the public business are not breaking down——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I think he is right.

Mr. ROOT. Whether our arrangement for the discharge of our duties does not imperatively demand revision; whether the business of the country is not becoming so vast and complicated that we must have new parliamentary institutions within these bodies of Congress for the performance of our duty?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly; I yield the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to say to the Senator that I am in entire accord with the sentiment he expresses. With reference to the Military Affairs Committee, of which I am chairman, with very much important legislation awaiting the attention of the committee, I can not get a quorum. For months it was impossible to get a quorum, either at a regular meeting or a special meeting.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator, then, if upon a matter properly cognizable by the Military Affairs Committee he would suggest a reference to the Interstate Commerce Committee or to the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have suggested that this bill ought to go to the Mines and Mining Committee, because that is a smaller committee, and I have every reason to believe, from the membership of that committee, that they will consider the measure and report it out.

Mr. FALL. I have the same reason to believe that the Public Lands Committee will do its duty, and I am a member of each committee. I am perfectly willing to agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] that possibly the entire methods of legislation should be reorganized, but I do not go so far as to agree that all the methods heretofore followed should be disorganized.

I am in perfect agreement with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is a member of the Public Lands Committee, that the committee does not always meet and attend to business as it should, but I can say the same thing of other committees of the Senate, and I can say the same thing of the Committee on Mines and Mining. They are at present engaged on a very important matter. The chairman is urging members of the committee and doing everything in the world that he can to facilitate the consideration and reporting out of that committee of legislation which is now receiving serious consideration. I think that the Public Lands Committee are, however, equally earnest, honest, and sincere in their desire to facilitate legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will permit me, in order to have something before the Senate, I move that the Committee on Mines and Mining be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 4425, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. On that question I desire to say just a word. There is no just complaint before this body or elsewhere of the Committee on Public Lands, and I do not think complaint lies against any one of the committees of this body, for the reason——

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just a second. Am I taking the Senator from the floor?

Mr. FALL. No; I was just going to suggest that the rules had not been observed; but I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I thought the Senator had yielded, or I would not have proceeded. Senators have to serve on too many committees. There is the whole folly of the present organization. I am a member of six or seven committees, of which, to me, the two most important are the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Public Lands, and both of them meet on the same day.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has only gotten halfway down to the foundation. The reason Senators are on so many committees is that the committees are altogether too large.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is also true.

Mr. CLAPP. There is a growing tendency to accommodate Senators by constantly increasing the size of the committees.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true.

Mr. CLAPP. In that way Senators come to be on a number of committees, and then, of course, you can not get a quorum. The vice is in the inordinate size of the committees.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is true, and that is the very point I was making in defense of these committees. There has not been a meeting of the Public Lands Committee at which I was present since I have been a Member of this body when I was not called to another committee meeting on the some day to make a quorum. The same thing is true of most of the members of that committee, I have no doubt, and it is true of most of the committees of the Senate.

I listened with very slight patience to the suggestion that the Public Lands Committee, or any other committee on which I am serving, is intentionally failing to do its duty, or that we are not paying proper attention to our public duties. From the very fact of the organization of so many committees here, of such unnecessary size, to accommodate so many Senators, we have gotten into a condition where we find ourselves in disagreement on the question of the jurisdiction of a committee in a matter so plain as the disposition of the coal lands of the United States.

I venture the assertion that never before in the history of this country, up to this hour, has a bill of this character in either body been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. It was never part of the jurisdiction and organization of that committee in either House. Coal lands have been considered a part of the public lands of the United States. As was said by the Senator from Utah, we have had this matter under discussion for five or six years, and there has been no delay on the part of that committee in taking testimony or in bringing out a report or even in passing the bill before the Senate, as has been actually done. Now, after all that work has been done by the Committee on Public Lands, the consent of individual Senators, chairmen of other committees, has been obtained, and that consent is urged to change the jurisdiction of the committees.

I feel the charge of nonperformance of public duty thrown on the Committee on Public Lands, and resent it; but there is no personal feeling in the matter on my part, for all I have done in this motion has been done by direction of the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the motion? If there is, under the rule it must go over for one day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the motion goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. Under what rule, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under Rule XXVI:

> All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of the subject, and all subjects from which a committee shall be discharged, shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

The motion goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before that is done I wish to say a word in regard to the method of carrying on the business affairs of the Government by committee work and to indorse the position taken by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

In my opinion the present method is cumbersome, and will have to be changed, and ought to be changed. I see that it has a great deal of respect and veneration on the part of this body, and it may be entitled to it; but to me it looks a good deal like the sacred bull of India, which goes about eating up all the cabbages of the poor people, and it ought to be kicked on the nose and jarred loose. The method is cumbersome, and, in my opinion, is such that it would bankrupt a barber shop, and it costs the people of this country not less than fifty cents on every dollar that is expended.

I wish to go on record as saying this, and I thank the Chair for the opportunity of doing so.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer a Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 277) was read, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the Department of Justice has entered, or is contemplating entering, into any contract, agreement, or understanding with the officials or other persons representing the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. regarding the reorganization of said company or the settlement of any of its financial or other difficulties, and if any such contract, understanding, or agreement has been entered into, or is contemplated, then to inform the Senate specifically whether said contract, agreement, or understanding either directly or indirectly contemplates:
> 1. The giving of immunity from prosecution to any person or persons connected with said railroad company or any of its subsidiaries, any of its fiscal or financial agents, or any other person or persons.
> 2. Whether such contract, agreement, or understanding either directly or indirectly contemplates the surrender by said railroad company or any of its stockholders of any right to begin and maintain an action for the recovery of money or damages on account of the misappropriation of the money, funds, or property of said company by its officers, agents, employees, fiscal agents, or other person or persons.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I do not believe I have any objection whatever to the substance of the resolution. I gave notice yesterday, however, that at the close of morning business to-day I should move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, for the purpose of taking up a number of treaties that are on the Executive Calendar. If this matter is to lead to any discussion whatever, I shall feel constrained to object, and to insist that it take its regular course by reference to the proper committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to suggest to the Senator that if there be no objection, I presume the resolution will pass without consuming any time. I have no desire to debate it unless some one else wishes to go into the subject. If the Senator does not object, I presume the resolution will pass as a matter of form.

Mr. SHIVELY. No; the question never arises upon an objection to the passage of a resoluion. It arises upon the question of its present consideration. After its present consideration shall have been agreed to there may be unlimited discussion. That is what I am trying to avoid, because I wish to get the treaties before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it if any Senator is opposed to the resolution he will object to its consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the resolution had better go to the appropriate committee. I make that motion.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be debatable, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution goes over until to-morrow, under the rule.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 hours and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 20, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 19, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for this moment in the day's proceedings, since the human heart is like that of a musical instrument touched by a master hand; it brings forth sweet melodies, rich, deep harmonies. Touch our hearts, we beseech Thee, with Thy skillful hand, that they may respond to the deep harmonies of life's far-reaching purposes, unperturbed by the discordant sounds around us; that we may fulfill our appointed destiny. In the spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ERADICATING HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to find out first what it is. May be it is privileged.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Possibly so.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 425.

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 25,000 copies of "Report on the plan of work, the results secured, and the money expended by the Department of Agriculture in demonstrating the best method of preventing and eradicating hog cholera," the same to be distributed through the House folding room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I see the chairman of the Committee on Printing is here.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; I am here.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman is very quiet.

Mr. MANN. Does this mean that the resolution has the gentleman's approval?

Mr. BARNHART. It does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing why he permits this to go through without having it referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I think it is a mistake on the part of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. I told him that the committee, I thought, would be favorable to such a proceeding, and arranged for him a resolution; and I take it that he understood from that that it was to be offered as a resolution for unanimous consent, whereas I intended really to have him introduce it as an original resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Printing. It is a commendable piece of printing, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman received an estimate of the cost?

Mr. BARNHART. I have not; but I think the gentleman from North Carolina has.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The cost would be $30 for the first thousand and $2.75 for each additional thousand, which would make it $96.

Mr. COX. Do these copies go through the folding room?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Rhode Island rise?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I rise to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to have printed in the RECORD an address by the Hon. SIMEON D. FESS at Brown University on the 28th day of January, 1914.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech delivered by the Hon. SIMEON D. FESS at Brown University. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire the nature of the address.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is on education.

Mr. BARNHART. Was the orator ever a Member of the House?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. He is now a Member of the House.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, I thought the gentleman said "Feltz." I beg the gentleman's pardon, I have no objection whatever.

The SPEAKER. That name is Simeon, not Simon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 3, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"For the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River on the road between Cass Lake, Minn., and the Cass Lake Indian School, in said State, at a point on Government lot numbered 3, in section 29, township 146, range 31, to a point on Government lot numbered 4, in said section, in said State of Minnesota, or at such point and in such manner as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if it is a navigable stream and whether the general law relative to navigable streams is applicable?

Mr. LINDBERGH. It is a navigable stream for canoes and small boats and launches, but it is not generally navigable for large boats. The building of a bridge will not prevent the use of the river for such use the same as it is now used.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire further to ask the gentleman if this is the bridge authorized by the last Congress on the Indian appropriation bill, where the authorization carried $1,000 for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of a bridge at this point, as I remember it?

Mr. LINDBERGH. This is the same bridge.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What report has been made to Congress?

Mr. LINDBERGH. A favorable report has been made, but I do not know that that report has been submitted to Congress. I was called away from Washington on account of the illness of my mother, and I have not had opportunity to look after it as early as I otherwise would have done.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that this bridge item was not presented to the committee in making up the bill as estimated for by the department?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I think it was overlooked by the department. I have a letter here, written by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I went down there to see him about it this morning. The commissioner considers the bridge very necessary to the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman have the letter read?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I will send the letter to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 19, 1914.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LINDBERGH: By your informal reference, I have considered your proposed amendment for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between Cass Lake, Minn., and the Cass Lake Indian School.

In preparing the estimates for the Indian Service for the next fiscal year there was included an item requesting an appropriation of $1,000 to make an investigation and prepare plans and surveys regarding the proposed bridge in question. This bridge is urgently needed by the Indian Service, as is shown by the records now in your possession.

I shall be glad to see the item proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the construction of this bridge incorporated in the Indian bill.

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire further to ask the gentleman if this bridge is located on an Indian reservation?

Mr. LINDBERGH. It is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the school on one side of the river and are the Indians on the other, so that they have to cross this bridge? Will it be for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. LINDBERGH. About half are on one side of the river and about half on the other, and the half on the opposite side from the school find it necessary to cross this river at the point where this bridge is proposed to be constructed, and those living on the side on which the school is located find it necessary to cross to Cass Lake village for supplies.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman personally know the surroundings?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I have been on the ground myself. Besides that, there is an engineer's report showing it to be the case. I know from my own observation that it is true, because I have been there a number of times.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do the Indians request this?

Mr. LINDBERGH. All the Indians in the locality do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this payable out of Indian funds?

Mr. LINDBERGH. It is. This whole matter will be better understood if I quote a few paragraphs from a letter written by Mr. Charles H. Allender, superintendent of the Indian School at Cass Lake. They are as follows:

This bridge is almost an absolute necessity, and I hope the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs will do all in his power to cause this small additional amount to be included in the Indian bill.

We have to ford the Mississippi River every time we go to town and also in going to a great many other places. About 15 Indian families have to cross this ford also to do their trading, and as many Indian families on the other side have to cross here to attend church and to visit the school. All supplies for the school have to be freighted across this place if they come during warm weather. The school team must be forced into this water in fall and spring when the ice is forming and when it is so cold that the water freezes on the horses and on the harness and wagon. A part of the year the ford can not be used at all. Some two years ago an Indian girl, a pupil of this school, was drowned while attempting to cross this place.

At the deepest place this ford is about 4 feet deep the year around. Owing to large swamp on the one side, it is necessary to keep in the water for about 30 rods. At this part of the ford the water is from 1 to 2 feet deep. Nothing perishable can be hauled across here unless it is placed above the lower box.

While this bridge would be used to a certain extent by the public, there are but one or two settlers in this section. Most of the land is allotted land, and the bridge would be used principally by Indians for many years. It is badly needed for the school alone.

I took this matter up with the War Department some months ago and received a permit to construct a bridge there at the point mention provided that the span over the channel was 24 feet wide and 14 feet high at low water.

The river is 100 feet wide, and an appropriation of $5,000 will be sufficient to construct an iron bridge and do the grading at both ends.

E. J. Dugan, engineer for the War Department, has informed me that the water in this river is to be raised from 2 to 4 feet by his department. This will make the river too deep to be forded.

A point that I have not mentioned is that strangers sometimes attempt to cross this ford, and not knowing the road drive into a place where the water is 12 or 15 feet deep. On different occasions lives have almost been lost in this way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to an item on page 18, under "Idaho," for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In what line?

Mr. MILLER. To be inserted after the figures "$20,000," on the top of page 18. I simply want to make that reimbursable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] asks unanimous consent to return to the first paragraph on page 18. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 2, page 18, by inserting, after the figures "$20,000,'" the following:

Said sum to be reimbursable out of any funds of the Indians occupying the Fort Hall Reservation, now or hereafter available.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send the amendment to the desk? The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 2, after the figures "$20,000," insert the following: "reimbursable to the United States out of any funds of the Indians occupying the Fort Hall Reservation, now or hereafter available."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amendment. I think it is a wise one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation, including repairs, of the Milk River irrigation system on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the reason for making the appropriation for maintenance available until expended.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the reason given by the department. You will find it set forth in the hearings: That the appropriation is made for plans and specifications, which are so extensive in some instances that it will require two or three years to complete the proposed project; and under a recent law we require the projects, if they carry more than $25,000, to be approved by Congress. In the event that the amount appropriated lapses before the completion of the project, then it is necessary to have the money to carry it forward.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not understand my question. Probably I did not make it plain enough. I asked what was the reason for making available until expended an appropriation for maintenance of an irrigation plant.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think it would be necessary for maintenance only.

Mr. MANN. That is what is done in this case.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think it is necessary to make the appropriation for maintenance available until expended. That was intended to apply to repairs, and so forth, I suppose.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, repairs are current repairs, and maintenance is current maintenance.

Mr. CARTER. I should not think it necessary to be in there. I think it would be a very good thing to knock it out.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order against——

Mr. CAMPBELL. One moment. The department, in asking for this, on page 446 of the hearings, put the item under No. 1, and they said:

1. Current expenses: The item for current expenses is presented to cover operation and maintenance costs and stream gauging. Operation and maintenance will return to the Government all, or a large part, of the expenditure on that account. The total for all expenditures takes this into account in that it exceeds the minimum appropriation of $500,000 asked for by $22,000.

That was the reason given by the bureau when asking for this appropriation. They included not only maintenance but other work, although I see no necessity for making it a continuing appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I did not quite catch what the other work was, besides maintenance and operation and current repairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Gauging.

Mr. MANN. That is not covered by the appropriation, unless it is included in the appropriation for maintenance.

Mr. CARTER. Most of the appropriation is to be used for the betterment of the work. In the original construction of the work some wooden structures were put in. They have decayed and rotted out, and it is necessary to put in quite extensive new work. For that reason the appropriation was increased, and I suppose that accounts for the language—

To remain available until expended—because it is not all strictly maintenance.

Mr. MANN. How long has this irrigation plant been in operation, may I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. It has not been very long. I should have to look to see the exact time.

Mr. MANN. And they have already started to reconstruct it?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; they put in wooden structures instead of concrete.

Mr. MANN. They have to reconstruct it before they begin to get the cost of operating.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is a very serious reflection upon some official somewhere.

Mr. CARTER. The difficulty comes about because of the work they had to do and the limited amount of money they had to do the work with. In the dams, ditches, and flumes there was a great deal of wooden material used, and no concrete work at all. That is usually the case in putting in irrigation plants for Indians.

If the gentleman could see these irrigation plants of the white man and the Indians side by side, he would see the difference between the Indian's project and the white man's project. The white man's is usually all in concrete, put up in good shape, while the Indians' irrigation projects are more or less of a temporary character, constructed of temporary material.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that these irrigation projects are under the supervision, as to plans and specifications, of the Reclamation Service?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; and that accounts for the way the work is done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that there is a studied effort on the part of the Reclamation Service to put inferior material into the Indian projects?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; I would not call it a "studied effort," but the white man is on the job all the time and gets what is coming to him.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not more likely that this character of material is used because of the size of the appropriation?

Mr. CARTER. I think so.

Mr. MILLER. In reference to the projects of the white man, that is done without specific appropriation by the use of a revolving fund in the hands of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says "a revolving fund." He means theoretically.

Mr. MILLER. It is likely that they have more ample funds for the construction of the white man's project, and consequently in the Indian project it is necessary that they keep themselves within the appropriation, and hence the character of the material used.

Mr. CARTER. I did not go quite so much in detail as did the gentleman from Minnesota, but I stated that it was on account of the lack of funds.

Mr. STAFFORD. Am I right in my reading of the report that the funds of the Indians go into a common fund for general irrigation purposes?

Mr. CARTER. No; in some instances the Indian irrigation projects are constructed entirely separate and distinct from that of the white man. For instance, the Indian reservation will be on one side of the river and the other side will be public land. The side that the public land is on will be the white man's project, and on the other side upon which is the reservation will be the Indian project.

Mr. STAFFORD. But so far as the construction is concerned they are under the irrigation service?

Mr. MILLER. They are, practically.

Mr. STAFFORD. I gather that from reading the report. There was some criticism expressed of the way in which the money was expended; that it was not right to have the money taken out of the Indian funds to contribute toward appropriation for the white man's projects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask that all debate on this matter be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order, in order to get some information. As I recall, possibly being refreshed by the statement of gentlemen, the limit of cost on this irrigation plant was a half a million dollars.

Mr. CARTER. I think so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will now give to the gentleman the reason why they want this made a continuing appropriation. I read from the hearings, page 443:

> In addition to the new construction, the present systems must be maintained and operated. An extraordinarily quick growth of willows in this locality makes maintenance a serious proposition. All canals and laterals here should be cleaned every fall after irrigation in order to keep them in operating condition at a minimum cost, as first-year willows can be easily disposed of, while if let run for two or more years they become tough and rooted to such an extent as to make them exceedingly difficult of extraction.

They want to carry the appropriation forward to the next year for the purpose of cleaning out the willows from this canal. The gentleman is aware that in this mountainous country the willows spring up rapidly, and the canal catches all the débris that flows down, which clogs up and destroys the canal. That is the reason for giving them this continuing appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Here is a case where we appropriate half a million dollars for the construction of an irrigation plant, and before there are receipts enough coming in from those who use the water to pay the cost of maintenance it is proposed to make an appropriation, good until expended, to in part rebuild the plant. Is not that rather an extraordinary condition of affairs?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They seem to think that unless they have the money to maintain it and keep it up the dam and ditches and canal will be swept away and become worthless.

Mr. MANN. Do not the Indians use the water? Do they not get enough out of it to pay the cost of maintenance?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think nothing was reported so far on this reservation. I have no objection to the language going out, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. MANN. Under this provision for an Indian irrigation plant, under operation, do not the persons who use the land or the water pay anything at all on account of the use?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will refer the gentleman to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who can answer it. Most of it is reimbursable from the Indian lands.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, heretofore it has been the universal practice to make these appropriations reimbursable out of the Indian funds, without regard to the individual benefits received by the allottees. This year we inaugurated a policy to the contrary, and the expenses are designed to be distributed pro rata among the allottees who will receive the benefits. It seems to me this is extremely desirable where possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is that provision?

Mr. MILLER. In the general provision in an earlier part of the bill, where we put that into the general law.

Mr. MANN. I would like to see that paragraph.

Mr. MILLER. I do not mean that it applies to this project. It applies to the expenditures provided for in that paragraph. I am not saying that we have extended this principle throughout the irrigation projects among the Indians. We have started it at a point where we can, and I am quite certain that as far as practicable in the future that principle will be made to apply to all reservations.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman refer to this language on page 3:

> And for lands irrigable under any such system or project the Secretary of the Interior may fix maintenance charges, which shall be paid as he may direct, such payments to be available for use in maintaining the project or system for which collected.

Mr. CARTER. The next proviso deals more directly with it, I think.

Mr. MILLER. The second proviso, on page 4, which is as follows:

> Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to apportion the cost of any irrigation project constructed for Indians and made reimbursable out of tribal funds of said Indians in accordance with the benefits received by each individual Indian, so far as practicable, from said irrigation project, said cost to be apportioned against such individual Indian under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. That apparently does not provide for maintenance and operation.

Mr. MILLER. I would not say it did at all. It applies to the original cost of construction.

Mr. MANN. How is the cost of maintenance and operation provided on these projects?

Mr. MILLER. Those that are reimbursable are reimbursable from the funds belonging to the Indians in the hands of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Is that a fair proposition? If irrigated land is allotted to Indians and they make use of it and get the benefit of it, why should somebody else, some other Indians, pay for its operation?

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that this individual case illustrates the situation precisely. This land has not been allotted. It is held in common by all of the Indians of the tribe. There have been expended not half of a million dollars, but about $218,000, on this project. The land is held in common by all of the Indians; and while my information does not extend in detail, I assume the benefits will be enjoyed by the Indians generally throughout the tribe. In any case where the lands have already been allotted the principle that is contained on page 4, just read, can easily be made to apply.

Mr. MANN. How do they make use of this irrigated land where it is not allotted?

Mr. MILLER. Of course in all these regions there are certain tribal methods of cultivating the soil under tribal customs and rules and regulations, if I may use that term. They are obeyed and carefully observed, the same as the white man observes the law of his country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the language, on page 22, line 18, "and to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the language referred to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I see that we are providing for reimbursing the Treasury for these various expenditures. At this particular agency has there been any money ever returned into the Treasury to reimburse the outlay that is made?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. So far there has not, but in the future we expect there will be, when the land is placed in a suitable condition for cultivation.

Mr. GOULDEN. To what extent do Indians avail themselves of the opportunities of these various irrigation schemes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A great many of them are being induced to become farmers, and some are making money and others are improvident, along the same line as the white man.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman believe that eventually the money will be returned to the Treasury, at all events, some time in the distant future?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think there is any question about that. As soon as they are capable of cultivating the farms and making a living, I think there will be sufficient funds to reimburse the Government.

Mr. GOULDEN. And these irrigation projects of the Government now in operation are producing good results among the Indian tribes in the estimation of my friend from Texas, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The very best results. These Indians can make a living only by stock raising or by agriculture, and we have not the money to set them up in stock raising, and think it much better to make farmers of them.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with this statement, and withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be or which have been heretofore disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $100,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Flathead Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso just read, that it is new legislation and changes existing law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there are three provisions of that kind following each other in succession, and the department was very much in favor of this language, and I will read the reasons for it as given by the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withhold his point of order for the present?

Mr. MONDELL. I withhold it for the moment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to give the reasons for this language. It is found on page 379 of the hearings, and is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you add this provision which materially modifies the law which has existed heretofore?

Mr. MERITT. We are asking that this proviso clause be incorporated in the bill in connection with a number of irrigation projects for the reason that we find it necessary if the water rights of the Indians are to be protected. Congress has appropriated in a number of cases a large amount of money for irrigation projects on various reservations and has required that those appropriations be made reimbursable out of the funds of Indians. States have passed certain laws which make it desirable, in certain cases, that the water be made beneficial use of by the Indians; otherwise the Indians stand a chance of losing their water rights or else taking their water rights status to the courts for determination. This item, we believe, will protect the water rights of Indians on a number of reservations where large appropriations have been made, and where, if they lose their water rights, they will receive no benefit from the irrigation projects heretofore constructed.

I will state in addition to that that these irrigation projects are being constructed out of Indian funds, and if on account of the State laws interfering with the rights of the Indians to obtain the rights to the water, after it has been furnished by their own funds, those rights are extinguished and given to the white people, it will be doing the Indians a great amount of damage. For that reason the department insists and I insist that this language should remain in these bills. I admit that the language is subject to a point of order. It is certainly legislation, but I hope the gentleman will not make it, for the benefit of the Indians and for the benefit of the States that are interested. It will require legislation outside of an appropriation bill, and I think there is no question but that if a bill were presented to this House, outside of an appropriation bill, containing this language, this House would pass it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the reason for this provision, is to protect the rights of the Indians to the water from these irrigation projects, so that no rights of private citizens will be acquired as against the rights of the Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; for this reason: That the Indians are our wards, and the Indians are furnishing the money to build these irrigation plants, ditches, reservoirs, and so forth; and because of the fact that they are not provident enough to take advantage of putting water upon their land for their own use, that then their rights lapse under the State laws, and the white men are more provident than they and are able to take advantage of the State laws and will deprive the Indians of the use of the waters of these reservoirs, dams, ditches, and therefore there is an element of justice in this.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because they have failed originally to use water by reason of negligence or indifference, for the time being other persons lower down may have acquired rights which were obtained originally by the Indians for irrigation use.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the exact situation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the committee for a moment. This item and other like items are unquestionably subject to the point of order. There is no doubt about that, the chairman of the committee admits it; and not only is that true, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is interested in this I know; not only is it true that this provision is subject to the point of order, but it is also true that it would be exceedingly unfortunate for the Indians if such legislation as this should be written on the statute books. For this reason: In the arid States there is a code of water laws and a complete State organization for the management and control of water rights, and the constitution and laws of Montana, like those of Wyoming—whose constitution and laws are a little clearer relative to water rights than those of any other State, and whose legislation is a little better than that of other States in the Union—the constitution and laws of Montana make it the duty of certain officials to pass upon all applications for water rights, to record applications in due course of time and require all users of water for irrigation purposes to prove their rights and thereafter to maintain them by reasonable use. Now, I assume this is the condition in Montana on this reservation. The United States, acting for the Indians, has made an application for a water right. It is recognized under the law and the usages of the State of Montana. It is protected by the law and the administrative force of the State of Montana, and the only danger that confronts the Indian is the danger that confronts every white man, that if he shall allow his right to lapse for a series of years by absolute nonuse the right reverts to the State and can be then secured from the State by another.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me to finish this statement. Now, it is the duty of the Indian Service as the guardian of the rights of the Indians to see to it that Indian water rights do not lapse by nonuse, and that they are seeing to it that those rights do not lapse and that there is not at this time any danger of the lapsing of any Indian water rights is clearly proven by the statement which you will find on page 35 of the hearings. The first paragraph at about the seventh or eighth line contains this statement. It is a statement in support of a request for an appropriation for an officer who shall have charge of water rights—to look after water rights. This is the statement:

There appears to be no danger of immediate loss of water rights—

And so forth.

Now, of course, it is possible that the Indian, like the white man, may lose his water right by nonuse. For a long time the Indian Service has neglected to perform its duty in taking out water rights. I think the service is now endeavoring to perform its duty in this regard. So far as my own State is concerned, the Indian Office some years ago took out water rights for the Indian lands. The State protects with its administrative machinery those water rights, just as it protects the water rights of the white man. Now, I said a moment ago those rights can be lost by nonuse, but they are not likely to be lost by nonuse, first, because in the State of Wyoming and in most of the States there must be nonuse for five years before a water right is subject to loss, and there is no reason on earth why the Indian Service can not see to it that the amount of irrigation necessary in order to maintain the water rights is provided.

Now, this is what will happen if we adopt this sort of a position. For instance, take the great Indian reservation in my State. Our people took as much of an interest in seeing that those water rights were secured, and a greater interest, I think, than the Indian Office itself did for a time. Those water rights are secured under applications, and some of them are, I believe, secured by certificate. If we shall write into the law that so far as the Indian land is concerned—and in my State there are 150,000 acres in one body of such land under ditch—that the Indian need not apply that water to his land now or at any time in the future, we shall have this condition of affairs, namely, a great stream in an arid region the waters of which are needed for the irrigation of lands running unused to the sea and great arid areas that ought to be irrigated barren and unirrigated. Of course in the course of time others farther up or down the stream would apply to the State authorities for the right to divert the waters of the stream. The State engineer measures the water of the stream, and has done so for years, several times during the season. He would in such case find a large amount of water unused.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. The gentleman from Texas withheld the point of order, as I understand?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is going to make a point of order, I would like to have him do so, in order that we may proceed with the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I withheld the point of order at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas, and he insisted on this matter being discussed. I am taking just as little time as I can in which to present it to the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me to finish my statement, he can then ask it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that this matter be concluded in five minutes, before the ruling is made. Will the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. MONDELL. I will answer the gentleman's question now, if he desires.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the question: Lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, on page 23, explain the reason for this amendment. It says:

The failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

It is usually held in trust for a certain period, beginning at a certain time. During that time the Indian can not dispose of the land, and the United States holds it for him. That is, for an individual Indian, and not a band or tribe. Suppose an Indian is trying to farm, and he dies and leaves a helpless wife and children, unable to take the benefit of that water, then while these children are wards of the Government and these lands are in the hands of the Government, do you think the State law should run against them and deprive them of their purpose?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman states a condition that will not happen. All that is necessary for the Indian to do to maintain his water right is to open the gates and let the water run. It is not asking much of him to ask him to continue to let water run over his land. I started to explain to the gentleman how harmful it would be to the Indians themselves; how impossible it would be for them to dispose of their lands finally if the department, as a guardian of the Indian, fails to exercise that supervision which may be necessary in order so see to it that the Indian does not allow his water right to lapse.

A water right does not easily lapse. In my State there must be a complete nonusage for five years before a proceeding can be instituted to cancel a water right.

Now, it is not in the interest of anybody, it is not in the interest of anyone in that country that these rights shall lapse, and the department will have no difficulty at all in insisting upon such use as shall maintain the rights of the Indian. If we provide legislation of this character, we are simply encouraging the department in its failure to provide for the irrigation of the Indian land. We are encouraging the Indian to neglect the irrigation of his land by assuring him that at any time in the coming years that he may desire to use the water, although he has allowed it to flow unused for years, he may take it up, without regard to the right of others. There are people lower down on these streams who utilize these waters, and it is to their interest that these lands at the headwaters of the streams shall be utilized for irrigation purposes. So far as domestic and stock water is concerned, that provision is entirely unnecessary, because under the usages of the arid States sufficient water is allowed to run through them for stock and domestic purposes. But as to matters of irrigation, there is no danger of water rights lapsing, so they inform us, and it is certainly our duty to insist that the department shall perform those very simple duties which are required of them in order to keep the Indian water rights in full force and effect.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the point of order is well taken, and I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] makes a point of order against the language that appears in the language of the proviso on page 23. The Chair thinks it is clearly legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 22, by striking out, after the word "estimates," in line 24, the figures "$100,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$300,000."

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, there was appropriated in the last general Indian appropriation bill for this purpose the sum of $325,000. The Reclamation Service, which now has in charge this work on the various Indian reservations of the West, or particularly on the three of Montana, estimates that in order to proceed with the work to the very best advantage there should be appropriated this year the sum of $500,000. However, I have attempted in this amendment to strike a sort of happy medium between the amount which the Reclamation Service asked for and the amount which the committee has seen fit to incorporate in this bill.

I think it is apparent to anyone who is acquainted with the situation out there that the sum specified in the bill, $100,000, will in no manner be adequate to continue the work upon this irrigation project upon that particular reservation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman aware that the department estimated for only $100,000, the full amount allowed by the committee?

Mr. STOUT. I am perfectly aware of that.

Mr. MILLER. As I understand, the $300,000 which the gentleman speaks of is the sum desired by the Reclamation Service.

Mr. STOUT. The Reclamation Service desires $500,000, but, as I say, in this amendment I have attempted to strike a happy medium.

Mr. MILLER. Have they made a definite recommendation for $500,000?

Mr. STOUT. I think so. In fact, I am sure they have.

Mr. MILLER. I know that the gentleman is right when he says they have stated it will take $500,000 each year for several years to complete it, but I doubt if they have requested $500,000.

Mr. STOUT. It will take better than $4,000,000 to complete the project.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; add two millions more and that makes it six millions.

Mr. STOUT. The figures of the Reclamation Service do not coincide with those of the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. At first it was $3,000,000 and then it was $4,000,000 and now it is $6,000,000.

Mr. STOUT. The gentleman may be correct, but I am taking the figures of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. MILLER. I am speaking of the figures that come in from year to year. This is one of those growing projects.

Mr. STOUT. Well, most of the projects on which the Government enters are growing projects, so far as appropriations are concerned, according to my observation. I certainly think that this amount should be increased to such a sum as would enable them to proceed with this work with some degree of effectiveness.

This matter is now being handled by the Reclamation Service. There may justly be some question as to the wisdom, in the first place, of taking this irrigation work out of the hands of the Indian Service and placing it in the hands of the Reclamation Service. I am prepared to admit that perhaps some mistake might have been made at that time. But since it is now in the hands of the Reclamation Service, and since they are doing the work, I certainly feel that they should have sufficient money to enable them to go ahead in the most advantageous manner.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman give us any information as to why the department did not estimate for more than $100,000?

Mr. STOUT. I will say to the gentleman that it is my opinion that the department is endeavoring to bring about a new status in the manner of conducting this reclamation work on the Indian projects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. STOUT. Gladly.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gentleman proposes to increase the amount available for the next fiscal year from $100,000 to $300,000?

Mr. STOUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the latter amount could be used?

Mr. STOUT. That it could be used?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STOUT. Yes. That is my information.

Mr. MANN. Well, I take it that in constructing these plants the sooner the money is used and the plant completed the better it is.

Mr. STOUT. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. And if they can use more money than has been estimated for, the estimate of cost having been made last summer and the gentleman having additional information now, if they can use more money, that will hasten the project, and probably cheapen the cost if they can make use of it?

Mr. STOUT. Unquestionably.

Mr. CARTER. The hearings show, if the gentleman will permit, that they used only $167,000 last year.

Mr. MANN. That was when they were probably only getting started.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, what is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. That the time of the gentleman from Montana be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in offering this amendment is to expedite this work and get this land under water at the soonest possible date. We are endeavoring here to irrigate 75,000 acres of Indian land. The project also calls for the irrigation of 75,000 acres of land which has been settled upon by the white people. Now, the Government undertook the project to irrigate the land not only of the Indians but also those 75,000 acres which have been filed upon by the whites. These white settlers naturally assumed that the project would be pushed forward to completion with all possible expedition. I have but recently had letters from hundreds of those settlers who had taken up homesteads on this project in the firm belief that they would be given water, but they have been waiting there, unable to get the water, and have been compelled to move off and to abandon the improvements, in many cases amounting to two or three thousand dollars, and forfeit their homestead rights. Not very many have moved, but hundreds of them, I may say, have written me that if provision is not made whereby some sections of this project may be completed and water given them during the forthcoming year they will have to move away.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we not only owe it to the Indians themselves, but in view of what has already taken place, in view of the implied promise of the Government to put water upon that land, we should certainly be derelict in our duty if we failed to make adequate provision for carrying on this work.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. We have here a proposition which is being financed entirely out of Indian funds.

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. One-half for the white men and one-half for the Indians.

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. For the year ended June 13, 1913, there was an appropriation of $200,000 and a balance of $85,000 left from the previous year; but during that year only $167,000 was used.

Mr. STOUT. The last appropriation was $325,000.

Mr. CARTER. That is for the current fiscal year. Of course, we can not predicate anything on that, because it has not been finished. I am talking of something about which we can get definite information. Of that amount only $167,573.52 was used, leaving a balance of $117,000. I presume that unexpended balance can be used, and it is available. Now, in addition to that they have the $100,000 we have appropriated, which would be more than $30,000 in excess of what they used last year.

Mr. STOUT. The gentleman will understand that as these projects are carried forward, in order to complete them to such an extent that the water may become available, increasingly large sums are constantly required.

Mr. CARTER. I do appreciate that; and I appreciate what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, that the quicker you finish a project the more cheaply it can be finished. But what is the use of giving the department more money than they will expend? Two years ago we gave them all they asked, and they spent only a little more than half of it. We have already given them all they have asked again, and now if they spend only half of that there is no necessity for appropriating $300,000. I sympathize with the gentleman, and would like to see his project finished as quickly as possible.

Mr. STOUT. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that the Reclamation Service have estimated that they would require $500,000, and I have taken into consideration the fact that there is a small unexpended balance from the last appropriation in submitting my amendment for only $300,000.

Mr. CARTER. There is an unexpended balance of $117,000.

Mr. STOUT. Yes; which, added to the $300,000, would leave something like $83,000 less than the Reclamation Service actually think is needed.

Mr. CARTER. The point I emphasize against the gentleman's amendment is this, that it is useless for us to carry money in an appropriation bill that will not be used if appropriated. As I have just stated, we have already given almost twice as much money as was used during the last fiscal year. Now, why increase this amount to three times its present size and turn that money over to the department, when they do not seem inclined to use even as much as they ask for? I sympathize with the gentleman, and I sympathize with the proposition that the quicker you complete an irrigation project the cheaper it will be; but there is no use to make an appropriation of money when there does not seem to be any likelihood at all of the department using it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as a friend of the Indians, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT]. We have just seen here an instance of the rapacity of western people. I make no criticism of their conduct, but we have seen an instance of their wishing to have large irrigation projects erected out of the tribal funds of these Indians, and when those projects are erected, refusing to allow the Indians to use them, but claiming that those farther down, on the white man's lands, have rights which are superior to those of the Indians, because the Indians have failed through laches to use them. Now, what is the proposition before the committee?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I made no such statement, and made no statement that could properly be construed to mean that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The position of the gentleman from Wyoming was that when the Government goes ahead and erects these irrigation projects out of the tribal funds on the Indian reservation lands, if the Indians fail through nonuser to use them for five years, and those farther down, on the white man's land, have used the water and have acquired so-called rights, thereafter the Indians shall be barred from the use of that water for irrigation purposes; thus having the Indians pay for the entire project and then depriving them of the use of it, just because they have failed, for some reason or other, to utilize it within five years.

Now, what is the proposition here? It is that the Indians ought to contribute more money to the building of this irrigation project, increasing it to the amount of $200,000 more than can be needed, and not have the General Government provide this money in conjunction with the Indians in the building of this irrigation project on the Flathead Reservation. In the hearings before the Indian Affairs Committee, which were of sufficient importance to be made a part of the report, attention was called to the fact of this imposition placed upon the Indian tribal funds, requiring them to pay the money in advance, whereas the white men who have no title to the land originally are given the privilege of returning the payment in 15 years.

Mr. STOUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STOUT. Does the gentleman understand that it will be possible to irrigate just simply the Indian allotments without also taking in some lands which have not been allotted to the Indians?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that it is a joint affair, in which not only those outside the reservation but those on the reservation should be considered. But the gentleman will agree that it is a wrong plan to provide that the entire expense be paid at the start from the Indian funds, whereas to those on the nonreservation lands outside you give the privilege of paying for the construction in 15 years.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, this project is going to cost upward of $6,000,000 to complete it. We have spent already over $1,000,000. That is a much greater sum than the United States holds for these Indians. These sums appropriated are reimbursable out of the future funds of the Indians. In the meantime Uncle Sam is paying for it, and while it is proper, perhaps, to say that it is advanced on the part of the Indians for this whole project, as a matter of fact Uncle Sam is really advancing the money in the name of the Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. My attention has been heretofore called to other altruistic projects where Indian tribal funds have been appropriated until they are almost appropriated to depletion, under the guise of being for the benefit of the Indians, and then the Indian is left without any money at all. I say that the Indian is entitled to equal consideration with the white man.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is both a mathematician and a prophet. If a project is to cost $6,000,000, how long will it take to finish it at the rate of a hundred thousand dollars a year, and what Indians will get the benefit of it?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is all-wise in legislation and knows that this is not the only amount being contributed to the erection of this project, and that under the estimates there are hundreds of thousands of dollars provided for to be paid out of the general fund and not from the Indian fund. The National Government provides for a part of the cost from the general irrigation fund.

I am protesting against the appropriation of Indian funds and tribal funds on a different plan than that followed on the nonreservation land.

Mr. MANN. How much is the total Indian appropriation on this plan?

Mr. STAFFORD. I should hope the amount would be less and less as time goes by.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state the reasons of the department for reducing this amount to $100,000. Mr. Meritt, the assistant commissioner, was before the committee and made this statement, which will be found on page 551 of the hearings, relative to the appropriation for the irrigation work on the Flathead Reservation, Mont.:

Amount of appropriation requested by the United States Reclamation Service for irrigation work on the Flathead Reservation during the fiscal year 1915, $500,000.

Amount of appropriation requested by the United States Indian Service for field work on the Flathead Reservation during said period, $100,000.

Referring to the above reduction in the requested appropriation for irrigation work on the Flathead Reservation in Montana, it should be stated that as it was expressly understood that the estimates for irrigation appropriations for the United States Indian Service during the fiscal year 1915 must be materially reduced, it was considered best, as far as the interests of the Indians are concerned, to make this reduction apply principally to the estimates for work upon the reservations where the Indians are less benefited than the white settlers by the system or project now under construction, where the largest reimbursable amounts have already been expended by the Indians for irrigation purposes, and where there is no immediate necessity of expediting the work for the purpose of protecting the Indian water rights thereunder.

It will be noted that we are asking for only $100,000 for this project this year, as compared with an appropriation of $325,000 last year.

Mr. STOUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. STOUT. Is it not probable that the Reclamation Service, which is actually doing this work, is in a better position to judge as to the amount of money needed than is the Indian Service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the main objection; the Indians are paying for this work and the whites are getting the benefit of it, and that is the reason why we are asking that our engineers take charge; and in the event they do, the Indians pay a pro rata part and not all of it. We want to have done with putting up all the money and paying for the project.

Mr. STOUT. The Indians get as much benefit from it as the white men.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; and the Indians are paying for the whole of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will read the rest of this statement by Mr. Meritt:

The CHAIRMAN. You will find that it will not be necessary to ask for more than $100,000 for the purpose of carrying on this work next year.

Mr. MERITT. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that I am not prepared, personally, to justify the manner in which this project has been financed heretofore. This project, as now estimated by the Reclamation Service, will cost about $6,000,000. It will irrigate about 150,000 acres of land, and only about 75,000 acres of that land belongs to the Indians. The funds of the Indians are being used to construct a great irrigation project, and, in my judgment, the method of financing this project is wrong. It should be conducted as a reclamation project, and the Indians should pay their proportionate cost for this project rather than pay all the cost and have the white people gradually reimburse them.

Mr. Reed, who is at the head of the Irrigation Service, made a statement, and I asked him this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Reed, we will be glad to have your statement at this point.

Mr. REED. In view of the fact that only about 50 per cent of the entire land is Indian land, it does not seem right and just that Indian resources should be hypothecated for the repayment of the charges. Had these three projects been entirely Indian projects, they would not have been undertaken on the scale that they have, and the cost undoubtedly would have been less. The Indians would not have had so much of their resources hypothecated in order to build them, and it seems nothing more than fair that the Indian, as long as he has given up his land by the opening process of the reservation, should stand in the same light on these large projects as the white man. His funds should not be drawn upon for the purpose of financing, but should be drawn upon for the purpose of making repayments, the same as the white man would make repayments. We can not understand why—at least I can not—he should be called upon to make all the payments in advance, while the white man is given 15 years after the completion of the job to make his payments; and we believe that since these projects have been advanced so far, since they have been laid out on such a large scheme, it would be impossible to curtail them without a great loss. We believe that they should become irrigation projects, built in conformity with the laws under which they act and under which they are built, and that the Indians' interests should be represented as that of any other member of the water-users' association.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you take the position that the Indian is putting up all the security for all the money that goes into the whole project and only gets half of the benefit; is that correct?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir; and puts it up in advance, while in the case of the white men they do not put it up until 15 years after completion.

Mr. CARTER. These projects are being carried out under your supervision, Mr. Reed?

Mr. REED. No, sir; they are not. The present agreement or regulation under which the two departments are supposed to cooperate eliminates the engineering force of the Indian Office, and, if I am right in my understanding, very nearly eliminates the Indian Office entirely—not only the irrigation officers but the commissioner and the executive officers as well.

Mr. CARTER. Then we are appropriating money here to be used by the Reclamation Service?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $50,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or their right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the proviso beginning on line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana makes a point of order to the proviso beginning on line 17.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We concede that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 14, after the word "estimates," strike out the figures "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$150,000."

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think any debate is necessary. There is about the same state of facts existing here as exists on the Flathead Reservation. I certainly think that this amount should be appropriated in order to continue uninterruptedly the work. This is an estimate of the department actually doing the work, the Reclamation Service, and it is reimbursable. I want to say, also, that these Indians are employed largely on the work, and so it is a sort of double benefit to them. The appropriation of $50,000 will not last long and will simply leave the Indians that much longer in idleness.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing construction of irrigation systems to irrigate allotted lands of the Indians of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana, including necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $50,000, the same to be reimbursable, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Peck Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or their right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso beginning on line 5.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. However, I do not see present the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who recently made such a rapacious speech, and in his absence I shall withhold my remarks for the present.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 4, after the word "estimates," strike out the figures "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$150,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, for the purpose of purchasing cattle for the use of said Indians to enable them to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment and placed into the Treasury to the credit of the said tribe on or before June 30, 1925, and all payments prior to that date are hereby reappropriated for this same purpose as the original fund and shall remain available until June 30, 1924, when all of said amount shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed statement as to the expenditure of this fund.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment in which the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is interested.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in a prior portion of the bill we struck out the provision in reference to these revolving payments being returned to the fund. I thought I would make the point of order on the provision commencing on line 14, after the word "twenty-five," as follows:

And all payments prior to that date are hereby reappropriated for this same purpose as the original fund and shall remain available until June 30, 1924, when all of said amount shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians.

I take it that this is likely to be an annual appropriation.

Mr. MILLER. No; this is for a special situation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no great objection to striking out that provision. I wish to say in this connection that this is an amendment which I offered in the committee on my own initiative and had added to this bill. Being personally acquainted with some of the conditions on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in North Dakota, I have thought that something along the line of encouraging the Indians on this reservation in the raising of more cattle ought to be done by the Secretary of the Interior and authorized by the Congress. The land included in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in North Dakota contains some of the best grazing lands in the world. Soil and climatic conditions on this reservation are near ideal for stock raising. Fifty years ago this particular territory was the home and the feeding grounds of vast herds of bison. It is well known that cattle shipped from this range bring on the leading markets of this country the highest price paid for any grass-fed cattle. Frequently cattle shipped from this section, which among cattle men is known as the "Missouri slope cow country," bring on the Chicago market a price equal to that paid for Iowa corn-fed cattle.

Mr. MANN. We would have to have affidavits for that.

Mr. NORTON. The records of the Chicago stockyards will show that statement to be true. I am advised by the Bureau of Indian Affairs that a few years ago there were about 40,000 head of cattle on this reservation owned by the Indians on the reservation. At the present time there are only about 4,000 head of cattle on the reservation owned by the Indians. The fact that the number of cattle owned by these Indians has been so greatly reduced seems to me to be due in part to the poor management or mismanagement of affairs on the reservation by the Government, and in part, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has stated, to the neglect, carelessness, and lack of foresight of the Indians, and in part to the poor crops, due to unusual drought conditions in that section of the country the last three years.

There are a large number of cattle now on this reservation owned by white citizens and large corporations that have leased thousands of acres of the reservation land for grazing purposes. It occurs to me that it would be much better and more profitable for the Indians to have grazing on this reservation more of their own cattle and fewer cattle owned by white citizens and corporations.

Cattle raising is, in my judgment, the most profitable business that can be carried on in that section of the country. As a straight out and out business proposition I know of nothing better that can be done for the best interest of these Indians than to assist and encourage them in the raising of cattle. Believing as I do, I offered and have urged that this legislation be enacted. The point of order made to the particular wording of the paragraph by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is, I know, well taken. I have no great objection to that going out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the language in line 14, all after the word "twenty-five" down to and including the word "Indians" in line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have another point of order that I desire to make to this paragraph, and for that purpose I reserve the point of order on the last proviso. I would ask the gentleman how it will be possible for the Secretary of the Interior in December next to make a detailed statement of the expenditure of this money which is available for the fiscal year that does not end for seven months after December 1?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why the Secretary should not be able and be in a position to make a detailed report of the expenditure of this fund made from July 1 to December 1, 1914.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suggest to my colleague that the Secretary of the Interior will probably proceed to carry out this provision immediately, beginning on July 1 next, in which event he will have five months in which to purchase cattle and carry out the provisions of this paragraph, and therefore a report in December might contain very valuable information.

Mr. NORTON. I think there is not any question but that the expenditure should be made just as soon as possible.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I make this pro forma motion for the purpose of making one or two observations on this particular item. I am heartily in accord with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] in respect to the advisability of this provision, but I do not think it ought to be included in the bill and passed without a word of comment. When we have an Indian reservation with the fertility of soil and the matchless climate such as the gentleman from North Dakota has described, and which I personally know to exist there, and when we have an instrumentality of this Government exercising supervision over the activities and industries of the Indians on that reservation, and we find that in four years their stock has decreased from 40,000 head of cattle to 4,000, there is something wrong in Israel. What that error is I do not presume to state. I suggest, however, it is very likely due to this situation: There has been a very marked advance in the price of live stock in the last three or four years at certain periods of the year, and I have no doubt that when those advanced prices are enjoyed they have marketed the kind of cattle they ought to have retained on this reservation for the purpose of continuing their herd in its then present condition; and I make this observation in the hope that the superintendent of that reservation will in some way get word and information that he ought to recognize that situation and take steps to prevent its recurrence, in which event there will be no further need for a continuance of this appropriation.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I notice in this paragraph that the money appropriated is to be taken from sums of money on deposit in the Treasury. Perhaps I am confessing my ignorance in rising for information, but I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I notice in the previous paragraph sums of money are appropriated, but no mention is made as to where they come from. Where does this money come from? Does it come from the general fund? We have very few Indians in Maine; those we have are self-supporting, industrious, and so far as necessary, cared for by the State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That matter is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MILLER. If the chairman of the committee will yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I will answer the gentleman by saying, not at all. The matter is entirely in control of the Congress. Most of the provisions to which the gentleman has alluded are provisions for carrying out treaty stipulations entered into between the United States and the several bands of Indians. We must, of course, make those payments in accordance with the treaties for all time, or at least until the treaty provisions are complied with.

Now, this particular item is made reimbursable because the Indians on that reservation have a large sum of money on deposit with the Treasury of the United States. It is the policy of the committee and of the Congress to make these payments to Indians reimbursable out of their funds in every instance where they have funds and it will not put too great a hardship upon them. Now, we have appropriated specifically from the Treasury of the United States many sums of money in this bill for the welfare of Indians. The system of schools, special schools—that all comes from the funds of the United States. We have in some instances made appropriations to take care of the homeless and destitute Indians, and the gentleman, I am sure, will agree with me that New England for a long period of time has amply taken care of all Indians which exist within her own borders, the same as scattered communities throughout the United States take care of isolated Indians of Indian blood that do not belong to any particular tribe. Indians are found in many States and communities that have Indian blood and are citizens, like the whites, and live much the same way, and they are not objects of charity or gratuity on the part of the United States.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Then I understand in many instances the appropriations are made from the general fund for the support of some of the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. That is entirely true; yes.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report the bill (H. R. 13612) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the year ending 1914, and for prior years, and for other purposes. (H. Rept. 288.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reports the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is without objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Without objection, I will say, the committee having risen informally.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will not make any objection, although I think it is a vicious practice. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill, and it is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The committee will resume its sitting.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the gentleman from Maine involves a great deal in this appropriation bill, and in the hope I may be of some little service to the gentleman from Maine in taking a little more money out of the Treasury I am going to make a suggestion to him. A few years ago some enterprising gentleman, having heard there were some Seminole Indians in Florida, got an item of $10,000 for their support and education. The appropriation was made three years ago. No portion of it, I think, has ever yet been expended for either the support, maintenance, or education of those Indians. Some of it has been expended by officials of the Indian Office taking winter trips to Florida [laughter], but they have found no Indians who wanted—I will not say have not found any Indians who wanted the money—but they have not found any Indians to whom they have paid money, and along this year——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would the gentleman expect those officers of the Indian Office to make trips to Florida in the summer time?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, having been a resident of Florida in a way, that the climate in Florida in the summer time is much more equitable than it is in Washington.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. When that appropriation was passed, which you say was three years ago, was the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois present?

Mr. MANN. I was present and made a point of order on it, and, having been defeated on the point of order, I fought the appropriation, and a misguided House put it in the bill. [Laughter.] And if the gentleman from North Dakota had been here, being controlled and influenced by the Committee on Indian Affairs, as most of the gentlemen who are in the Chamber are, he would have stuck to what the committee said.

Mr. NORTON. I simply want to ask whether these trips made by the department officials are not made for the purpose of civilizing these lost tribes of Seminole Indians? I thought they might justify their trip and the expenditure of money in that way.

Mr. MANN. The department was asked to see if there was any possible way in which they could expend this money, and the only way they could find out was by making trips to Florida. They are not to be criticized for that.

Now, this year there comes along our distinguished friend from Montana, who had put a fine-tooth comb at work, and had scraped over the whole of Montana and found some Indians who were not already cared for in the Indian appropriation bill. So for the first time we have in the bill an item of $10,000, just agreed to, for the support and civilization of Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas and other indigent and homeless Indians in the State of Montana.

Now, if my friend from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY] would just get a little busy and find some Indians in his State, he can get an appropriation of $10,000 if he can get any Indians to take the money. [Laughter.] The only people in the way of Indians who were left out in the cold by the Committee on Indian Affairs are the Indians of Tammany Hall, who are now getting it cold in every direction, and even the Committee on Indian Affairs will not take care of them.

Mr. GOULDEN. They do not require any appropriation. They are abundantly able to take care of themselves. They have done so satisfactorily to the people for 125 years and will do it for the next 125 years.

Mr. MANN. With the President against them, with the collector of customs against them, with the governor of the State against them, and the new mayor against them, they are in a very unenviable position.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman should inform himself by reading the papers, getting the facts, and he will find that the governor is not against them. He is a Democrat and fully realizes and appreciates the work done by the magnificent Democratic organization of New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it is not my object to secure any money for Maine Indians. I would like, however, to stop the flow of money from the New England States, Maine included, to the South and West which, it seems to me, is being facilitated by this bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's position is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and pay out the same for the benefit of the members of said tribes for their maintenance and support, and improvement of their homesteads, for the ensuing year, in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what would happen to this appropriation if it were not all expended before the first Monday in December next?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This appropriation runs for the year beginning the 1st of July, 1914, and ending the 1st day of June, 1915. I think the word "fourteen" ought to be stricken out and the word "fifteen" inserted here.

Mr. MANN. The proviso says:

A detailed statement as to all moneys expended under this appropriation shall be made to Congress on the first Monday in December.

And it is manifest that under that language the Secretary can not expend any money after that date out of this appropriation, because it would not be possible to report on the first Monday in December money expended thereafter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is evidently a mistake. I ask that "fourteen" be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MILLER. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Illinois will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve it.

Mr. MILLER. I think there is very great need for that provision. We have found it advisable—and I think the House has generally agreed to the program—to distribute among the Indians where it can be done, funds that they can use for the development of their allotments, purchasing horses, cattle, and houses, and so on, especially where they have a large fund in the hands of the United States. Now, when you give the Secretary of the Interior authority to expend these sums of money in this general way, you give him a very large power. It seems to me we ought to be advised at stated intervals as to the way in which those expenditures are made and that fund used. I can see no other way by which it can be reached excepting through reports to Congress. Now, if it is the duty of the Secretary to make this report the members of the Indian Committee, at least, and the distinguished leader of the minority, certainly will have copies of the report and will read them, and thereby become advised as to the wisdom or unwisdom of the expenditures and businesslike arrangements the Secretary of the Interior carries on. It seems to me extremely advisable, and I think the gentleman ought not to insist on the point of order, although "fourteen" should be stricken out and "fifteen" substituted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We need this for the committee, in order to be informed how the money has been spent during the past year, when we are making up our budget for the present year.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] how many of these detailed reports are now made by the Secretary of the Interior, of this character?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are 10 or 12 of them. I do not know how many.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman did not know how many. Every one of these reports is laid on my desk when it is printed, and I examine them, and I guarantee that no member of the Committee on Indian Affairs does. There are a great many more than a dozen.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that when this bill is made up we go through those reports.

Mr. MANN. There is no information in the report that is worth having. Nobody reads them except myself, and I am green to do it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will say that he will find in the hearings before the subcommittee that those reports were used and referred to quite frequently by the members in interrogating officials of the Indian Bureau. You will find cases from time to time where the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] had occasion to refer to them, and where the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and myself had occasion to refer to them.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have somebody show me that.

Mr. CARTER. You will find those matters in the hearings.

Mr. DYER. But the hearings, I will say to the gentleman, are not indexed, and you can not find anything in them.

Mr. MANN. The department has to make reports of the expenditure of this money in any event.

Mr. MILLER. But not in such form as to be available for our purposes.

Mr. MANN. They are not doing it now in such form as to convey any information.

Mr. MILLER. That may be true, but ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs my constant struggle has been to try to get at the facts, and the gentleman from Illinois certainly, from his long experience and his excellent industry, knows that to get at the facts in relation to Indian affairs is a very difficult thing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my point of order in the hope that, when made, this report will be examined by somebody.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "fourteen," in line 21, of page 29, and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 29, line 21, by striking out the word "fourteen" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma: Page 29, line 22, after the word "herein," insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to loan to bona fide farmers, residing in the State of Oklahoma, all the funds or moneys now in, or which may hereafter be in, the Treasury of the United States, belonging to the several Indian tribes of said State, or to individual members thereof, held in trust or otherwise, which will not be required under any law or treaty, for a period of two years from date of loan, to pay any debt or obligation due any Indian tribe or member thereof, and all of such funds not subject to be loaned under the foregoing provision to farmers shall be deposited in the National and State banks of the State of Oklahoma under such conditions, for such time, and with such interest and security as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the interest accruing under such loans and deposits shall be placed to the credit of the various Indian tribes and members thereof as their interests shall appear.

"That said loans shall be secured by first mortgage upon improved farm land or lands situate within the said State, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually. No loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land mortgaged to secure said loan, ascertained by appraisers appointed or designated by the Secretary of the Interior. Loans may be made for a period of not less than one year and for not to exceed a period of five years. Payments on principal of not less than $100 may be made at the time of any interest payment. The amounts loaned in the various counties, so far as may be practicable, shall be equitably distributed according to the number of farmers residing in the respective counties of said State.

"That the loans and deposits herein provided for shall be made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations for the safeguarding of the interests of the United States and the Indian tribes or members thereof and for the carrying out of all the provisions of this act, and is authorized to extend the time for the payment of any loan: Provided, That all deposits of such funds in the banks of the State of Oklahoma heretofore made under existing law may be continued at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order now?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but of course he will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to withhold his point of order so that I can be heard.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he reserve his point of order for five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will reserve it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves his point of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this amendment that I have offered embraces a House bill which I have introduced in this House and which I tried to present a few days ago to the Members of the House. I know it will strike some people as not being the proper thing, and yet I want to assure this House that I can see no objection to it from any standpoint whatever.

There is something like $28,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States, according to the best information I have had, belonging to the several Indian tribes of Oklahoma. There is probably $18,000,000 of this fund that is composed of trust funds that will be in the Treasury no doubt for many years, a quarter of a century, probably a half a century. In addition to that, other lands will be sold, and there will be other large amounts of funds in the Treasury.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes; for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Suppose it would be necessary to foreclose one of the mortgages provided for here. Who would own the land, and what would be done with it in that case?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The United States Government would own it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What would the Government do with it?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The Government would sell it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And open it up to actual settlement to the man who was near by under the homestead laws?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. That would be a question entirely for the Government to decide.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to present a few facts. The Government of the United States paid out last year $1,700,000 in interest from the Treasury of the United States on these trust funds. That was a total loss to the Government of $1,700,000. Of that sum $700,000 was paid to the Oklahoma Indians, so that on these trust funds the United States is losing $700,000 a year.

Now, then, I can not see how that is a good business proposition for the Government of the United States to follow. These funds are there. The Government of the United States can loan them to the farmers of Oklahoma, where the Government would make an appraisement of the lands on which the money was loaned, and the Government would have entire control and could be trusted to do a safe business for itself. The Government would save that $700,000 a year.

Now, then, the farmers of Oklahoma, according to the Census of 1910, owed $28,000,000 of farm mortgages, paying thereon about 8 per cent annual interest. If you reduced that interest to the farmers of Oklahoma to 5 per cent, you would save to them $600,000 a year. The Government would save $700,000 a year in being recouped for the interest that is now paid to the Indians on their trust funds.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that the Indians should pay their just debts before this money is loaned out?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I have no objections to the Indians paying their just debts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that those Indians, the Kiowas and Comanches and Apaches, who have stolen millions of dollars' worth of property from the homestead settlers in my State, should be required to pay back damages for the destruction of that property?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I believe that the citizens of every State should be paid what is justly due them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the gentleman aware that under the laws of the United States all funds going into the Treasury from bands of Indians are subject to damages for the destruction by those Indians of property belonging to the white people?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. That is off the line of my argument, and I do not want to discuss that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that we should be just before we are generous?

Mr. MANN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma, would it not be better to do what has been proposed to be done here—to loan to all the farmers of the country all the money they want at 2 per cent interest?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I have great respect for the gentleman from Illinois, and he is always fair when he is in earnest. But I believe the gentleman from Illinois, if he were conducting a business for this Government, would not have the Government pay out $700,000 a year when the Government could by a safe business process be recouped for that loss.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Kansas Indians, Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $1,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting a little information. This item includes the words—

Including pay of employees.

I think those words are carried in the current law. The expression—occurs in so many items in the bill as a new provision that I should like to ask the gentleman whether that includes the pay of any employees in the city of Washington.

Including pay of employees—

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not, because this specifies what tribe of Indians this money is payable to, and they are all within the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. I take it this money has been used heretofore for the pay of employees, and I suppose there has been a decision of some officer that some employee could not be paid out of it unless the language was changed. Has the gentleman a statement of the reason there?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; I have not; but I know it has been the practice for a good many years to have this language in the bill, and it has been found sufficient.

Mr. MANN. I can show the gentleman more than a dozen places in this bill where the words occur as a new provision.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think any decision has been made, but the fear that a decision might be made was the reason of the department, as stated to us, for putting this language into the bill. It was feared that the comptroller might rule that they could not pay the employees at that agency under that provision without this language.

Mr. MANN. It was not intended, then, to get around any decision which forbade them to pay any employees in the city of Washington.

Mr. CARTER. No; it was not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is what appears in the hearings with reference to this item:

For support and civilization of the Kansas Indians, Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $1,500.

That is the same amount and the same language as in last year's act. We offer in support of that item the following justification:

Support of Kansas Indians, Oklahoma.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, amount appropriated	$1,500
Fiscal year ended June 30, 1913:
Amount appropriated	1,500
Amount expended	1,175
Unexpended balance	325

ANALYSIS OF EXPENDITURES.

Salaries, wages, etc	1,175

Amount asked for, $1,500.

This appropriation is used for the benefit of 158 Kansas (or Kansa) Indians, under the jurisdiction of Ponca Agency, and is expended for general agency purposes, including the pay of one physician at $600 per annum.

The reservation comprised originally about 100,000 acres, of which 99,644 acres were allotted or deeded in severalty to 247 Indians in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 636), 260 acres being reserved for cemetery, school, and administrative purposes. No surplus land remains at this point.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the chairman of the committee, or the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], a question in reference to this expenditure of $1,500 for the Kansas Indians? There are 158 of these Kansas Indians in the State of Oklahoma, taken care of under the Ponca Agency. I find there was expended last year out of this appropriation of $1,500 the sum of $600 for a physician. Does not the gentleman think that in the reorganization down there it can very likely be arranged that one physician will not be required to attend 158 people, in the salubrious and beautiful climate for which Oklahoma is so justly famed, and for which she will in the future become more famous still?

Mr. MANN. The Claims Committee have just reported a bill to pay nearly that much for one service to a naval officer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is stated in the hearings that the reservation comprised originally about 100,000 acres——

Mr. MILLER. I have read the hearings, and I do think it is outrageous to pay $600 to take care of 158 Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are 247 allotments, so that there must be more Indians than the gentleman thinks.

Mr. MILLER. I have a suspicion that if the facts were known it would appear that this $600 for the physician goes to pay him not only for his services in caring for the 158 Indians, but for a large number of other Indians, payment for which ought to be made out of some other fund.

Mr. MANN. And some whites.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps that may be true. I can not give the gentleman the information he desires. This is one of the agencies in Oklahoma with which I am not at all familiar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the fourteenth paragraph of section 18 of the Indian appropriation act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., pp. 533, 534), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to cause to be delivered to the persons entitled thereto, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, checks payable to the order of individual Indians who are members of the band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians residing in the Republic of Mexico, covering individual Indian moneys now on deposit to the credit of such Indians, or in any manner under the control of the superintendent of the Shawnee Indian School and other officers of the Interior Department or which may hereafter be deposited with or come under the control of the Department of the Interior or its representatives, except such moneys as may belong to members of said band who are under 18 years of age and the feeble-minded Indian known as Paw-kaw-kah, in which cases such moneys shall be paid to the proper custodians of the members of said band who are under 18 years of age, and the said Paw-kaw-kah."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I do not know just what is the object of this provision. The original appropriation was improperly made for the benefit of some claim agents; but what is this for?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These Mexican Kickapoo Indians live on a reservation in Mexico, but they own lands in Oklahoma; and this money is due them from the leasing of their lands in Oklahoma. It is a trust fund, to be paid to these Indians annually. It seems that heretofore the checks were made payable through the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., that being the nearest point in the United States to the reservation in Mexico where the Kickapoos are located. For some reason there seems to be trouble in getting the money to them from that point, which is a hundred miles or more from the place down in Mexico where they are located, and this change was requested by the department so that the money could be more readily paid to the Indians.

Mr. MANN. I remember when this was considered in the House before; and while I may have been in error, I believed, from the information I received, that they were endeavoring to fix it so that some agent down there could get a rake-off on the payment of these claims.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that there is nothing of that kind at all, because this money is going directly to the Indians owning the land in Oklahoma for which the rent is due.

Mr. MANN. I know we had quite a contest over it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The matter that the gentleman refers to has all been settled.

Mr. MANN. What is the change here? The gentleman has not given us any information on that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The change is the manner of reaching the Indians with the checks. The money is to be carried to them in a different way than that provided for in the first law.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to make this suggestion: We did have quite a lot of talk over this amendment, I think, in 1912. The Senate inserted an amendment in the Indian appropriation bill, which was modified and agreed to in conference, directing that the money be paid through a certain Indian or council. It was charged on the floor and otherwise that this council was completely under the control of a certain fellow in whom a great many Members had very little confidence, and that to turn the money over in that way would be tantamount to giving it to the fellow himself to let him pay it out, and the conference report was rejected.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. CARTER. Another provision was brought in directing that the money be paid to the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz. In connection with that I will state that before we agreed to that we called into conference the gentleman about whose intentions we had some doubt, and we found that he had title to all of the land that belonged to these people.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] required him to deed to these Indians the title which he held in trust for them before we would take any action on the amendment. Then provision was made that the money should be paid through the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz.; but in the meantime so much noise had been made about the proposition that the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., did not seem to want to have anything to do with it, and the department was unable to pay the money to the Indians under that law. The purpose of this provision, as stated by bureau officials, is to enable them to pay the money out to the Indians, which they are unable to do under existing law.

Mr. MANN. I do not know where the Indians are at present, and I do not suppose that anybody else knows.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can tell the gentleman where they are.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Texas knows where anybody is in Mexico, he knows what nobody else knows.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are at the head of the Yaqui River, Montezuma district, Sonora, Mexico.

Mr. MANN. Most of them have been driven out of Mexico, and I did not suppose that anybody knew where they were situated. There was a white man in connection with this matter who held a title to the Indian lands. He had proposed, or somebody had recommended—I do not know whether it was the department or the committee—that the checks be turned over to that man. He was represented to be the great and good father of these people, but it was perfectly evident to those who studied the subject that he was undertaking to get a big rake-off on these payments. Now, I want to know under the legislation which we did enact, he having failed to get his rake-off, whether the amendment that is now proposed will result in giving him control over these checks before they are paid?

Mr. CARTER. The bureau officials assured us that he would not. We asked him that question.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the language of the paragraph where it provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to cause to be delivered to the persons entitled thereto, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, checks payable to the order of individual Indians.

I do not imagine that the Secretary of the Interior would give them to John Doe, or anybody else, excepting the one to whom the check was payable. If he did, he would be subject to a right of action on the part of the Indian parties.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any difficulty about that; all this man has to do is to present an order from the Indians and get the check.

Mr. MILLER. The Secretary of the Interior would not, if he had a grain of common sense, which I assume he has, deliver these checks except to the persons who are rightly entitled to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The man that the gentleman from Illinois refers to has no longer any connection with the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. This seemed to be the only way to get out of a bad situation and relieve the condition that had to be relieved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Could not these Indians make application to the Secretary of the Interior and obtain their portion of the fund?

Mr. MILLER. They might, but when you put upon an Indian the duty of making an application, you put upon him the additional duty of going to a white man and the probability of getting into the power of the white man.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it would be a burden now that they are resident in Mexico.

Mr. MILLER. I do not imagine these checks can be paid out immediately, perhaps not for a long time, because the Indians can not be located.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not possible for some Government official to make the payments?

Mr. MILLER. The Secretary of the Interior might send a man from his department to make physical delivery of the checks.

Mr. MANN. The bank at Douglas, Ariz., has delivered them.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the bank declines to have anything more to do with it.

Mr. MANN. I expect the banks are willing to have the money if you do not put too many burdens upon them.

Mr. MILLER. From the many statements about fraud and possible graft connected with the payment, the bank, by reason thereof, said it would have nothing to do with these payments.

Mr. MANN. The bank did not want to take any chances of paying checks with forged indorsements.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bank did not handle the money, but merely transferred to the proper payee the Government checks payable to the respective Indians.

Mr. MANN. The bank did not want to pass upon the genuineness of orders for these checks. The bank has the good sense not to do it; the Government has not the good sense not to do it. We are going to do the very thing a sensible man would not do. We let some man go down to the Indians, pick up the orders, and have the checks turned over to him. Well, perhaps the Indians will not be any worse off than they are now. But, upon the statement made by the members of the committee, I shall withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the money heretofore appropriated by the act of June 30, 1913, for the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, on lands in Oklahoma to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, is hereby reappropriated and shall remain available until expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Is there any special reason why this money should continue available until expended?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This money was appropriated for the purpose of buying homes for Indians in Oklahoma who did not go to Mexico. They were part of the prisoners who had the right to remain or go to New Mexico. This fund was appropriated to permit the Secretary of the Interior to purchase for these Indians remaining in Oklahoma certain lands in the vicinity of the original reservation. There seems to be only a part of the amount expended. The rest of it necessary to be expended for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to a reappropriation of them, although I was not in favor of the original item, but the Government has adopted the policy. Why should it remain available until expended, cumbering up possibly the books of the Government for 50 years from now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Our opinion is that these lands will all be purchased in a year or so. It takes some time to go into the market and get the Indians settled on the land.

Mr. MANN. Congress is in session every year.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I really think this language would be in the interest of good administration, because in the purchase of lands it would be necessary to know certainly that the funds were available to pay for the land when the title could be procured, and it is necessary to have the title straightened out before the money can be paid. It might be that just on the claims of one fiscal year they were dickering for some considerable land, and the titles might not be straightened out until the following year.

Mr. MANN. I think there is force in what the gentleman says. Does the gentleman know what the highest price is that has been paid for any of these lands?

Mr. CARTER. I do not think I do.

Mr. MILLER. They have not bought any yet.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; they have bought some lands.

Mr. MILLER. There is nothing in the statement of the department furnished us that shows that they purchased any land.

Mr. MANN. They have not gone into my State and purchased any $250-an-acre land yet.

Mr. CARTER. I am sure they have not.

Mr. MANN. Have they purchased any of that high-priced land in Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. I do not think they have paid any very high prices for land in that part of the country.

Mr. MILLER. They have expended only a few thousand dollars, and a majority of that went for subsistence, provisions, or incidental items.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so to call the attention of the House to what Congress has done for a band of Indians that for some reason has aroused a great deal of sympathy in some parts of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Maudlin sympathy.

Mr. MILLER. We have heard it repeatedly stated that Uncle Sam has misused and maltreated the Geronimo Band of Indians held on the Fort Sill Indian Reservation, and a great many crocodile tears have been shed over it. As a matter of fact, there has never been a band of Indians within the confines of the United States—there has never been a band of Indians, I will say, on the face of the earth—that has had so much done for them, as a band or as individuals, as the United States Government has done for that same band. Who are they? It is not my purpose to arouse any hatred or dislike for those Indians, but it is proper to call attention to the circumstances under which they came to be prisoners at that place. As the world knows, the great Apache chieftain, Geronimo, was a notorious outlaw, thief, and murderer. He had prevailed upon some of his followers to join with him in these depredations on the frontier, and the situation became so grave that the United States Army captured him. We have, therefore, this chieftain and his band. We did not put them within prison walls; we did not put them behind bars as we place the whites of similar character and conduct; but we put them out in the air and on the broad prairies of Oklahoma, letting them live in homes of their own on a reservation of 53,000 acres.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many were there at the time they were first placed within those confines?

Mr. MILLER. I can not give the gentleman the exact number, but somewhere between thirty and forty. That was more than 40 years ago. In the meantime they have increased in number to two hundred and seventy-five. We not only placed them on this reservation, but we built them homes. We not only built them homes—and I will say on investigation that we built their homes in the most fertile valleys and lovely looking spots in that entire reservation; yes, even in the far-famed Medicine Creek Valley, whose beauties rival the pictures of Eden land—we not only built them homes, but we bought them cattle. We did not buy them simply ordinary scrub cattle, but we purchased the best blooded stock that could be found in the market. We not only did that, but we bought them agricultural implements, and we gave them subsistence. We kept them from day to day and we clothed them and we fed them and equipped them and gave them homes; and now, Mr. Chairman, when the time has come to make a final disposition of these people, of which I said there are some two hundred and seventy-five, not all of them desire to be removed; and so we said: "We will let you elect, and those who do not care to leave this reservation, those of you who have become so much in love with this place that here you prefer to dwell, we will let you stay here, and we will buy you all fine farms and set you up in business." That is exactly what we are doing and what this provision is to carry out.

Those who are willing to go back into New Mexico, where their brethren are located upon a wonderfully fine and large reservation of 450,000 acres of land, we take up and put on the train with a ticket to their new homes; we transport their stock and household furniture—everything in the way of possessions they may have—down to this reservation, their new home, where they are taken in as members of the tribe, permitted to share in the property of the tribe, and become possessed of all benefits incident to tribal affiliations. Not only do we do that, but they had about 10,000 head of blooded cattle, I am informed, at the time this removal was started, a year or so ago, a property we preserved to them. Do you understand what that means? They are worth not less than $75 a head, and that totals $750,000, almost $3,000 for every man, woman, and child of the band. We are not requiring them to reimburse the Government at all for these things we are doing for them. We are letting them sell some of their stock, where it can not be transported conveniently, and we are giving the proceeds to them when they get down into New Mexico. Those who prefer to remain in their old home are being presented with fine farms we are purchasing for them and with a good equipment to start them well launched in life. We have appropriated for this purpose $300,000 out of the Treasury of Uncle Sam; and I make this statement, Mr. Chairman, in the hope that some of the people who have been writing to Members of Congress and who have been preaching sermons on the treatment of that Apache Band of Indians by Uncle Sam will have the facts upon which they may reflect, and shape their ideas accordingly. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the Indian Rights Association or some other association of good people represented to everybody in the country that we had these original prisoners in prison, that we had imprisoned innocent children who have been born since the original capture, and that the Government was a monster because it was retaining in prison children born of prisoners, when the prisoners were much better off than most of the white people and far better off than they had ever been before?

Mr. MILLER. The statement of the gentleman is entirely correct, and the report thus disseminated was the vilest kind of libel against the exact facts of the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we pass the items with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, as Mr. HARRISON is not present, and proceed to read the rest of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to pass the items in relation to the Five Civilized Tribes until the end of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Does that mean from page 32, line 13, to page 36, line 13?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Down to "Oregon."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $102,000; for general repairs, additions to buildings, and improvements, $12,000; in all, $114,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, in line 2, strike out the figures "12,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "27,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of complying with the recommendation made by the superintendent of the school and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that there should be an extension to the present assembly hall at that school. The hall was authorized many years ago, and constructed within the last few years. Prior to this authorization the Alaskan Indians had not been included in the Indians to be educated in this school, and with the coming of 100 or more Indians from Alaska, in addition to the normal increase to the school, the assembly hall has become too small to accommodate the pupils. The value of an assembly hall at an Indian school, especially at one where they are doing as good work as at this school at Chimawa, is, of course, conceded by all who have ever investigated this question. I understand from the hearings that there was no testimony offered contrary to the building of this addition. It will have to be built before long, and it can be built now to accommodate the growing needs of the school in such a way as to meet them for the present and for the future, and it seems to me that it is a good opportunity, in order to continue their work properly and to derive benefits from it, and that it should be built at as early a time as possible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman visited this school?

Mr. HAWLEY. I visited it about a year ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This assembly hall is also used as a gymnasium, where they hold ball games, and so forth.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; for the general purposes of the school. They have a gymnasium made out of an old barn.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At this place?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is only for the purpose of enlarging a building they have at the present time?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; to put in addition to the present assembly hall so they can accommodate the students for assembly and general school purposes in a room at one time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have been there. Is not that situated on the south side of the railroad?

Mr. HAWLEY. On the west side of the railroad. This particular building is on the east side of the railroad; but the buildings generally are on the west side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is across the railroad from the main building?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; from the main building.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I remember, this is rather a new building of brick and only built a few years ago, not over 8 or 10 years ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was authorized some time ago, and it has been built within the last few years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And built for a school of 600 pupils, was it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. It was built on an estimate of what the school had at that time; but Indian pupils from Alaska, who at that time were not allowed by law to attend this school, number over 100 at the present time in attendance at the school and are a very valuable body of students, because they are very anxious to learn, and intelligent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to send some one there and let them investigate and see whether or not it is necessary to add to this building?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman had time when he was there to cross over and look at this building, as I did when I was there a little over a year ago, he would have seen it is plain from the floor space of that room with the gallery that there is not room on that floor space for all the school. If you send 40 people there they would make the same report, that it is absolutely necessary to build this in order to accommodate the needs of the school, that it is absolutely necessary for this building to be enlarged.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I thought that the architects who planned the school and all the school buildings had planned to have this house sufficiently large for the 600 pupils that are there, and we have not permitted it to be enlarged to accommodate 700 pupils, as you state, with reference to having brought a hundred pupils from Alaska. But we have not exceeded the amount. This is a school for some 600 pupils, the buildings were erected for 600 pupils, and this is comparatively a new building, and I do not see why we should enlarge it. This is a nonreservation school.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman knows that the Indians from Alaska have been admitted to this school within the last few years and subsequent to the authorization for this building; and the building, when it was authorized, contemplated the attendance at the school at that time and the natural increase in attendance that would come to the school from the Indian tribes then allowed to send their children to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and the amendment thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, the addition of the Indians from Alaska has been made since that time, and therefore the plans drawn for the building were drawn under one set of conditions and now must be applied under a new set of conditions. And the attendance at the school, according to the report of the superintendent, now runs to about 650 pupils, and will increase steadily.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is a nonreservation school.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a nonreservation school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And an industrial school.

Mr. HAWLEY. Emphatically an industrial school, with excellent literary work also.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Have they not about 240 acres of land in cultivation, or a great deal of it in cultivation, and are they not raising quite an amount of stock and different kinds of farm products amounting to $15,027?

Mr. HAWLEY. The school makes a very good showing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it not be possible to take a part of that sum and apply it to the purpose which the gentleman asks?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is what I am asking now, namely, that Congress authorize the use of the $15,000 for the building.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman get a recommendation of that kind from the department?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is already in the recommendation of the commissioner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Have you any letter to that effect?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not in reference to any special matter. It is already in the report submitted to the committee, on page 611, the third paragraph from the bottom. It says:

Referring to the item for an addition to the school auditorium, it should be said that the present assembly room is much too small to accommodate the entire school, pupils and employees, not to mention a considerable number of visitors who attend at all public functions or at commencement season.

But I am asking this for the purpose of accommodating the school in its daily work, and I hope that the committee will see fit to grant this reasonable increase. It must be made in a very few years in any event, but giving it now will enable the school to do better work.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the committee should grant this increase for the reason indicated by the gentleman. This is a comparatively new school. This building was erected about 8 or 10 years ago for the number of pupils that we find there now and that we are now appropriating for. I was at this school a few years ago and looked into the matter. The superintendent was asking for this enlarged assembly hall at that time. This is a nonreservation school, and it would do away entirely with the policy of the Government if we enlarged such schools as this in order to put more pupils in them. I think we ought to confine our activities to the reservations and to schools on the reservations.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did not the superintendent of the school, when you did it the honor to visit it, tell you that that assembly hall was too small to accommodate the needs of the school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He did.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was there a short time after you were there, and he told me the same thing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have been denying appropriations for this purpose, when the schools were off the reservation. We have increased the schools to about 3,000 students in the past few years, and I think it is time to stop it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and civilization of detached Indians in Utah, including pay of employees, $10,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$10,000" at the end of line 2, page 40, and insert in lieu thereof "$15,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 40, by striking out, in line 2, "$10,000" and inserting "$15,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move this amendment because of information which I have recently received, and which is authentic, that a great many of these Ute Indians have been attacked with a peculiar disease of the eyes, called trachoma; that they are in a lamentable condition, and that the disease is spreading very rapidly among these Indians, and, indeed, is being communicated to some of the white men. It is not only true as to those who are on the reservation, but it is true as to the pupils who come to the public schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will examine page 649 of the hearings, he will see that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, there was an appropriation of $10,000, and the amount expended was only $6,433.50, leaving an unexpended balance of $3,566.50. And it goes on to say how this has all been spent—for salaries, wages, traveling expenses, equipment, construction and repairs, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. I had not intended to ask to have this amended, but within the hour I was called to the door by the governor of the State, who urged me very strongly to secure an additional appropriation for this purpose. This disease is of recent origin. It probably did not exist at the time this matter was before the committee.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER. I have no doubt but that the situation is exactly as the gentleman states, and I am sure we all wish to join with him in getting seasonable relief for those Indians. But I will say that a similar condition exists among many, many other bands of Indians in the United States, and we have made a general provision for all of them. In a preceding paragraph there is an item of $260,000, a very large sum, which we have provided to carry on a campaign against tuberculosis, trachoma, and other contagious diseases. I suggest to the gentleman that, rather than to increase this item, which will go to maintenance and not to medical treatment, he exert his customary industry to help his people by seeing that the Secretary of the Interior in handling the $260,000 takes good care of those Ute Indians in Utah.

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. I thank the gentleman for his information. I had not noticed that provision. I make this suggestion at the very earnest request of the State officials. Those Indians there are in need at the present time, and physicians are now attending them. The officials of the State say that the appropriation here of $10,000 will be insufficient. I ask for the modest increase of $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, together with the accrued interest thereon, appropriated under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 934), and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, said funds to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the said Secretary shall report to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Is there any special reason why this appropriation should remain available until expended?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is no special reason that I know of. None was given us.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not insist on that, I take it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

Mr. MANN. It is not a very good practice. I notice that the same proviso says that the "Secretary shall report to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914," and so forth. I suppose the gentleman would wish to change that to "1915," anyhow?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And, of course, if that proviso remained in and the fund remained available until expended, it would not work together, anyhow?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the language, in line 14, page 40, "and to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "fourteen," in line 16, page 40, and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 40, line 16, by striking out the word "fourteen" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes, in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems, authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, to be expended under the terms thereof and reimbursable as therein provided, $10,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Uintah Reservation, or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We admit it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] rose as a friend of the Indian—and I know he is a friend of the Indian and a friend of the white people as well—and made a few observations with regard to these paragraphs relating to Indian water rights that are being stricken from the bill on points of order made by me. Among other things he made this observation:

We have seen here an instance of the rapacity of western people. I make no criticism of their conduct, but we have seen an instance of their wishing to have large irrigation projects erected out of the tribal funds of these Indians, and when those projects are erected refusing to allow these Indians to use them, but claiming that those further down on the white man's lands have rights superior to those Indians because the Indians have failed through laches to use them.

I regret exceedingly that a man with so clear a mind as the gentleman from Wisconsin has failed to catch the drift and intent of my argument made a few moments ago with regard to these provisions. I assure the gentleman that it is not rapacity, but a sincere regard for the interests of the Indians, that prompts us to make these points of order. We have no desire that the Indians shall lose their water rights. On the contrary, no one can be so much interested in having the Indians retain their water rights as the people who live in the States and in the communities and in the vicinity of the Indian reservations.

What we desire to prevent is the creation of a condition under which the Indian and the Indian Department shall be tempted to forego or neglect the irrigation of these lands and leave them in their present desert state, with the waters necessary and useful for their irrigation going wastefully and uselessly to the sea.

I want to assure the gentleman from Wisconsin that the maintenance of a water right is a simple thing. There is no necessity for any laches creating a condition under which a water right shall be forfeited. A water right can not be forfeited in my State except after judicial procedure at the end of five years of absolute nonuse.

Now, we do not want to create a condition under which these great areas in our States shall remain unirrigated and unused, unprofitable to the Indian and to the community in which the Indian lives. We have the word of the Indian Bureau in the hearings had before the committee to the effect that there is not now any danger of the loss of Indian water rights. We want to apply the same rule to the Indian as we apply to the white man. The waters of Western States belong to the people of the States. No such thing as individual property rights have been successfully asserted in regard to these waters. They are property of the people. It is the duty of all the people to guard the rights that are acquired under the law, and in order that our land may be irrigated and in order that there may be the most advantageous use of water in irrigation it is necessary to have some rule enforcing the use of the water. The only right the Indian has and the only right that the white man has is the right to use the water for beneficial purposes. If we shall say to any class of citizens, "It is not necessary for you to use the water for beneficial purposes. You may allow your lands to lie year in and year out, arid and unused and unproductive. The water may continue to run down these streams to the sea, and no one may use them, and you decline to." We do not want to create a condition of that kind. The creation of such a condition would be more harmful to the Indian than to the white man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there never was an instance of rapacity on the part of the westerners shown to better advantage than as illustrated by the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. Here we have a condition where the National Government not only provides the funds for establishing these irrigation plants for the use of the residents on the white man's land outside the reservations, but we call upon the Indian tribal funds to provide for a proportionate part of that expense for the use by the Indians of this water on the Indian lands.

Where do we find the Indians represented, so far as their rights are concerned? In the State legislatures? Oh, no. Indians have no representation there. Where do we have to come to find their spokesmen? In the National Congress. And when a provision for the benefit and protection of the Indians, and their right to the use of the fruits of their funds is proposed, to utilize some of this water for which their money has been expended, then rises up the gallant Representative from the State of Wyoming and cites a statute of limitation of five years, which you can not find anywhere else, except in these rapacious western States, that grants prescriptive rights to the use of the water, and thereby bars the Indians from the use of that which they have purchased.

I am acquainted with the statement in the hearings which the gentleman has read, saying that the right of Indians have not so far been jeopardized; but the Indian Bureau comes before the committee and strongly urges that this provision be incorporated. Who fells it with one stroke? The distinguished gentleman from Wyoming. Ah, the Indians on these Indian reservations have no votes. No; but the white men outside of the reservation, who are getting the benefit of the Indian tribal funds, have spokesmen not only here but in the State legislatures. In our State we recognize the right of the prescriptive use of streams and flowing waters, but we do not pass any such law as that 5 years shall grant a prescriptive right. In our State it is 20 years. I think that the rights of the Indians should be protected and conserved; and when a committee, following the recommendation of the administrative officials who have at heart the welfare of the Indians, brings in a recommendation to conserve their interests, and that provision is stricken out at the behest of the gentleman from Wyoming, it only goes to show that poor Lo has not much chance when it comes to a large number of white men who want to take advantage of some of the fruits of his funds in irrigation plants that the Indians have established. The conduct of the westerner in appropriating these privileges is rapacious in the extreme.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON.

SEC. 22. For support and civilization of the D'Wamish and other allied tribes in Washington, including pay of employees, $7,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have tried to discuss this question fairly, dispassionately, and good naturedly with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], but he tries our patience when he applies the term "rapacious" to western people in connection with Indian affairs.

I represent on this floor a considerable number of voting Indians who know their rights and, knowing, dare maintain them; and I stand here, endeavoring to represent them as I endeavor to represent the white men and women in my State.

So far as the Indian reservation in my State is concerned, the Indians would not have had their water rights so well defined but for my efforts in insisting on their being secured. Years ago I talked to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs many times, urging him to make application for water rights on the reservation in our State. Finally they made their application, and by keeping after them we finally got them to outline their plan, file their map, and make their application. But because we want to see our country irrigated and see its land fruitful, because we insist that it shall not remain in its native condition, the gentleman says we are rapacious, and that we are trying to deprive the Indians of their rights. Some gentlemen—I will not say the gentleman from Wisconsin; he always talks well—some gentlemen talk best when they argue about things of which they know the least; and some recommendations made by some departments of the Government are made with the greatest force in regard to things relative to which they have the least knowledge or information. A bureau that in one breath insists that it is necessary to have legislation of this kind and in another says that nothing of the sort is necessary is not, as it strikes me, the sort of a bureau that one may properly follow in matters of this kind.

We want to see these lands reclaimed. We want them to produce crops for the benefit of these Indians, and we do not want a provision under which the gentlemen here in the department, who are charged with the duty of preserving these Indian water rights, can go to sleep and allow those lands to become desert again, after we have spent $20 or $40 an acre for their irrigation. Perhaps there are gentlemen who would prefer to have these Indian ditches fill up and the structures rot down and the lands become arid and desert as they were originally, rather than have the trouble of looking after the water rights. That is all there is in it. We insist that it is the duty of the Indian Department to see that these water rights are preserved, and it is a simple and easy thing to preserve them. All that is necessary is to keep the ditches clean and the water flowing and over the land at least a part of the season. I think we are working in the interest of the Indians rather than antagonistic to their interests when we demand that their reservations shall not only be reclaimed by irrigation but that that reclamation shall be permanent.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., including pay of superintendent, $43,450; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $49,450: Provided, That the appropriation of $2,500 for repairing and rebuilding a barn at the Tomah School, contained in the Indian appropriation act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 538), is hereby made available for the purpose for which appropriated, and shall remain available until expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I should like to get some estimate from the committee as to how long it will take to build this barn that we found so absolutely essential to be built at once two or three years ago, but which has not yet been built, and for the buidling of which it is now proposed to give an indefinite time.

Mr. MILLER. If I recall, the Indian bill for 1912 passed the House some time in August or September, altogether too late to get anything like a start on this project at that time.

Mr. MANN. It certainly does not take a year up in Wisconsin to build a barn costing $2,500. I do not see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] here. That might be the case in Philadelphia, but it can not be the case is Wisconsin. Here they are not prepared even to build next year.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, but in reply to the gentleman's suggestion I will say that the original item of $2,500 for this barn was contained in the Indian appropriation act approved August 24, 1912. That was several months later than the Indian appropriation bill is ordinarily approved. Early the following winter the superintendent of this school suggested plans for this barn, submitted them to the Indian Office, and then advertised for bids. Several responsible bidders made bids. These bids were sent in by the superintendent to the Indian Office, and after they had been receievd the Indian Office advised him that no bids were to be received and that the work was not to be done under bidding, but that he should go on and construct the barn by doing the work in the open market. When this order came the fiscal year had expired. It was no fault of the superintendent, but the fault rests in the Indian Office, as was admitted by Mr. Meritt, the deputy commissioner, in the testimony presented before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He admits in his testimony that this was an instance of "bad administration." I sincerely trust that this school may not be made to suffer when the superintendent was guilty of no laches, and when the officials of the Indian Office themselves admit that they were negligent.

Mr. MANN. Two years ago the gentleman made a pathetic plea in the House about the importance of having this barn built at once; that the school could not continue unless the barn was built at once. Having the money in hand, they really found no occasion to build a barn. Now they do not propose to build within a year and a half.

Mr. ESCH. I had an amendment I wanted to offer to make the amount immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the language "shall remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, line 9, after the word "made," insert the word "immediately."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph. I think the language "hereby made available" should be "hereby reappropriated."

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is correct about it.

Mr. MANN. Where did the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] come in?

The CHAIRMAN. Line 9, after the word "made."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "hereby," the words "reappropriated and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, line 9, after the word "hereby," insert the words "reappropriated and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., including pay of superintendent, $31,025; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $37,025.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph beginning at the bottom of page 43.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph at the bottom of page 43. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what the amendment is?

Mr. MILLER. I want to insert the words "reappropriated and."

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 44, line 3, after the word "hereby," insert the words "reappropriated and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 44, line 3, by inserting, after the word "hereby," the words "reappropriated and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, including the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $25,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Wind River Reservation, or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso that it is new legislation and a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether there is any real necessity for continuing this irrigation plant and whether the Indians can get any benefit from it? Here is $25,000 for continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system. What is the total cost of the system?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have not the figures near me, but I think about $600,000.

Mr. MANN. It has been nearly 10 years since we commenced this project, and we are now appropriating $25,000.

Mr. MONDELL. We have been spending the last few years on this project about $50,000 per annum.

Mr. MANN. What can they do with $50,000 for a series of years?

Mr. MONDELL. They continue the extension of the canals that were started years ago farther down and out over the land, gradually enlarging the project and bringing new lands under it. The gentleman will understand that these Indians are allotted over quite a wide area. The first canals constructed did not cover all of the allotted land. As the canals are extended year after year they reach old allotments and new allotments which are being made from time to time. As the canal is extended the work of allotment is extended so that we are constantly bringing in new Indians under the canal.

Mr. MANN. Who pays the cost of operating this plant?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course the Indians take care of their own laterals and ditches. Otherwise than that the care of the main canals, I suppose, to a certain extent, is provided for under this appropriation. The Indians are doing the work.

Mr. MANN. Here is a plant that has existed for years and it does not bring in money enough to pay its operating expenses. The whites will gradually get in and get a portion of the land. The gentleman has just stricken out a provision that would protect the Indian unless they make use of the water.

Mr. MONDELL. In the last two years the Indian Bureau has been encouraging these Indians to sell or lease the excess portion of their lands. In some cases an Indian family will have as high as 320 acres of irrigable land. Of course that is very much more than an Indian can take care of.

Mr. MANN. Or anybody else.

Mr. MONDELL. Or anybody else. In these cases the Indian department is endeavoring to secure lessees or in some cases purchasers, and they have been quite successful in leasing some of the land, so that they are gradually covering the lands of the Indians that they can not utilize with white lessees.

Mr. MANN. How much do the lessees pay annually for the water rights?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not now recall the exact terms of the leases, but they provide in a general way that the lessee shall grub the sagebrush, shall break up the land, shall fence it, shall within a certain length of time have the land in alfalfa or other crops, and in addition to that before the close of the lease shall pay a cash lease.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, is not the reason why larger revenues are not derived from this irrigation at the present time due to the fact that water rights are under litigation and there has not been for some time an actual sale or lease?

Mr. MONDELL. These water rights are not under litigation; they are secure under the Wyoming law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not think there is any controversy on the water-right question?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a year or a half ago, at a distant part of this reservation, and not anywhere near this reclamation project, having no connection with it whatever, but on a part of the reservation which the Indians sold years ago, there was an old Indian allotment that drew its water from Owl Creek, and a question arose as to the exact priority of that Indian allotment compared with other Indian and white water users in the same locality. Some of the department people took a different view from that taken by the local water superintendent as to the priority of that particular Indian allotment, consisting, I think, of some 40 or 50 acres. I investigated the matter somewhat, and my personal opinion is that the water superintendent gave the Indian a priority as early as he was entitled to. It is true the time came in the late part of the irrigation season when the Indian and his white neighbors could not get all of the water they wanted, because there was not water enough for all, but the Indian got water long after many of the white men were entirely deprived of water. That is the only case that I have heard of, and I am confident it is the only case on that whole reservation where there has ever been a question of water rights, and that is not in connection with this Indian project at all, but it is an individual Indian ditch out of Owl Creek on the other side of the reservation on the ceded lands.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have not the slightest doubt but that the appropriation of $25,000 is absolutely needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I think this project, which has cost more than $600,000, is undoubtedly a good, feasible project.

Mr. MONDELL. It is fine.

Mr. MILLER. It is one of the very best. I do not think there is any question about that. However, it has been found that the Indians are very slow to avail themselves of the advantages afforded by this irrigation system.

Mr. MONDELL. That is unfortunately true.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman give us any method of overcoming that condition?

Mr. MONDELL. The Indian Bureau has been doing all it could to get the Indians to cultivate more land, and they are actually increasing their acreage; but at the same time the bureau is encouraging the Indians to lease or sell their excess lands, the leases all being based on a requirement of cultivation, so that when the lease expires the land will be cultivated, irrigated, fenced, and in condition to grow crops.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlem. n yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I find in the hearings there have been expended $646,000 on this project, and that there are at present reclaimed 104,000 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I also find in another place that there are some 839 Shoshones on this reservation. Is that the whole number that dwell on this vast tract of land?

Mr. MONDELL. No; there are about 2,400 Indians, about half Shoshones and half Arapahoes, the Shoshones occupying the upper part of the reservation and the Arapahoes the lower part.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the project is completed at the present time?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; it is far from being completed, because ultimately much more land can be irrigated.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much of the reservation has been disposed of?

Mr. MONDELL. Over half of the original reservation has been disposed of; that is, provision has been made for its disposition; but the area remaining is all Indian land. This project is on the diminished reservation, all of which is Indian land, with the exception of a few tracts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has no part of the reservation been allotted to the Shoshones?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; all of the land under the ditches has been allotted, and as the ditches are extended, the work of allotment goes on. Sometimes the work of allotment is in advance of the construction, but the allotments are being made on lands that can be irrigated. A complete and very excellent plan, I think, has been worked out by the Indian Service for the irrigation of all of the irrigable lands on this reservation, and they are gradually working toward completing it. They do not need more than the sum proposed this year, because of the fact that there are some funds remaining from last year's appropriation, so that there will be available about $50,000.

Mr. MILLER. A little more than that. There are about $34,000 unexpended. May I inquire what happens to those laterals and ditches that have been constructed and are not being used for irrigation purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. The Indians are, I hope, keeping the ditches open. There is necessity for that by reason of the fact that the Arapahoes occupy the lower part of the reservation at the end of the main canals, and the main canals must be kept in good condition, in order to carry water to the lower end of the reservation.

Mr. MILLER. I had reference to the laterals that are not used. Do not they grow up—fill up with weeds?

Mr. MONDELL. They do if not cared for, and it is the effort of the Indian agent to at least have the Indians keep their laterals cleaned out and water over the allotments. He has been reasonably successful in doing that, although it is a slow and toilsome process, as anyone knows who has to do with these people, who are just beginning to learn the art of agriculture.

Mr. MILLER. Do they really know how to handle an irrigation system? Is not the real difficulty due to the fact that these Indians have no conception whatever of the method of farming by the irrigation system, and is not that true generally among the Indian reservations of the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. I think, unfortunately, it is true.

Mr. MILLER. And before making these irrigation systems throughout the United States a success will we not have to carry on some kind of educational system or propaganda among the Indians to teach them how to make use of them?

Mr. MANN. Farm demonstration work.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is true to a certain extent with certain Indians, but the gentleman must remember these Indians have been living on and beside irrigation ditches for the last 30 years, and they are fairly good irrigation farmers.

Mr. MILLER. They do not seem to use this system at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes, they do. The gentleman realizes that there are few white men who can take real good care of more than about 80 acres of irrigated land.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that.

Mr. MONDELL. When an Indian family may finally secure as much as 320 acres of irrigated land, it is impossible for them to take care of all of it, and it would be impossible for the ordinary white man. My idea is—at least that is the view of the department, and I agree with the department—that 80 acres is all that is necessary for a family of Indians to retain. The remainder should be sold or leased, in order that the white man settling beside him may give him an object lesson in how to clear the land, prepare it for crops, plant alfalfa, and get it ready for cultivation for general agricultural products.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. Section 26 of the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1913 (Public, No. 4), is hereby repealed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now ask that we return to the items under the Five Civilized Tribes, page 32, beginning line 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

SEC. 17. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $150,000: Provided, That the offices of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and superintendent of Union Agency, in Oklahoma, be, and the same are hereby, abolished and in lieu thereof there be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, with his office located in the State of Oklahoma, at a salary of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the paragraph is subject to the point of order, but the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is more familiar with that, and I will yield to him.

Mr. CARTER. I presume, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that this is a change in existing law.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is plainly subject to the point of order, unless it comes under the Holman rule.

Mr. CARTER. Well, I want to direct the Chair's attention to some citations under the Holman rule.

Mr. MANN. The Chair, doubtless, is familiar with them. State the facts, and let the Chair rule.

Mr. CARTER. What facts does the gentleman mean.

Mr. MANN. It is subject to the point of order on its face plainly, I think, unless it comes within the Holman rule of retrenchment of expenditures, and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. I was going to get to that, and I was briefly calling the attention of the Chair——

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, I am not in a hurry myself, but I do not care to take up much time. I assume the Chair has looked the matter up——

Mr. CARTER. I think he has.

Mr. MANN. And I have no doubt he is just as well informed before the gentleman makes his speech——

Mr. CARTER. I will say I claim that it is in order under the Holman rule, and I ask the attention of the Chair to the Saunders decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not made any statement of facts that bring it within the Holman rule.

Mr. CARTER. In the first place, it reduces the salaries. The present salaries of these two officials abolished are $5,000 and $4,500, respectively, or a total of $9,500, and this reduces the salaries to $5,000, and a great deal more money can be saved by the reorganization of the bureau, which will naturally result from a consolidation of the offices.

Mr. MANN. That is a pure matter of theory.

Mr. CARTER. No. That is not a matter of theory. That is a matter set forth by the law.

Mr. MANN. It is a pure matter of theory whether money would be saved by reorganizing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman deny that we abolished an office here and that we have put the salary at $5,000 per annum? There are two offices combined in one. One office of the Union Agency was abolished, that of the secretary, at $4,500. We reduced the amount to be expended and reduced one of the officers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the Chair for only a moment. I suppose the Chair has looked the matter up more carefully than I have. There is nothing in this paragraph which says that the office to be created shall perform the duties of the offices which are abolished. When a similar question arose under the Holman rule many years ago, I thing it was Speaker Carlisle, although I am not certain what Speaker it was, held that the Chair could not determine, because you abolished a number of offices and created a lesser number, that therefore there was a saving of money, because the duties of the office which was abolished might have to be performed by some one else at equal expense. Now, here is a lump-sum appropriation, with the proviso abolishing two offices and creating one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a second. There is not a word in it which says that the officer who is provided for shall perform the duty of the officers who were abolished. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware that from the language of this there are two offices, and "that the offices of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and superintendent of Union Agency are hereby abolished, and in lieu thereof there be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, with his office located in the State of Oklahoma, at a salary of $5,000 per annum."

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly aware of what is in the bill. Why does the gentleman take time to read it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware of the law, and it may be the same with the Chairman, who is presumed to know the law, although it would be a violent presumption in many cases that this is a saving.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair is entitled to receive information.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], to meet the statement that the gentleman from Illinois seems to think valid, if there would be any objection to adding, at the end of the paragraph, "That the said superintendent shall perform the same duties as are now performed by the offices abolished"?

Mr. MILLER. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] would never consent to that. They do not want these functions and duties performed by anybody, and therefore they are trying to wipe them out by abolishing the office.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Do I understand the gentleman to say that I would not favor it?

Mr. MILLER. I did not refer to the gentleman himself, but I referred to the other gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make a point of order against the entire paragraph or the proviso?

Mr. MANN. I make it against the proviso, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the proviso, which reads:

Provided, That the offices of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and superintendent of Union Agency, in Oklahoma, be, and the same are hereby, abolished and in lieu thereof there be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, with his office located in the State of Oklahoma, at a salary of $5,000 per annum.

It is contended that this proviso is in order under that portion of the second clause of the Holman rule which reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The first question, of course, for the decision of the Chair is whether or not the proviso in the bill against which the point of order is made is germane to the subject matter of the bill. This section of the bill provides for expenses of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma and the compensation of employees. The proviso seeks to abolish the offices of commissioner and superintendent of Union Agency in Oklahoma, which are vested in part, if not in whole, with the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, and clearly, in the opinion of the Chair, the proviso is germane to the subject matter of the bill.

The next question is as to whether or not it retrenches expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, or by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money carried in the bill.

In the opinion of the Chair, it is only necessary to read the language of the proviso in order to see that it comes clearly within the rule, and is therefore in order. It proposes to abolish two officers, that of Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and superintendent of the Union Agency, with salaries, the Chair is informed, of $5,000 and $4,500, respectively, and to substitute therefor one superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes at $5,000, which is a reduction in offices and salary and a necessary reduction of the amount of money necessary to be carried in the bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is nothing in the proviso to show that the new office created is to perform the duties performed by the two offices which the proviso seeks to abolish. The Chair thinks the language in the proviso to the effect that these two offices are to be abolished, and, quoting from the proviso, "and in lieu thereof there be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes," clearly shows that the new office is to perform the duties which have been heretofore performed by the two offices which this proviso seeks to abolish, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to perfect the provision just ruled upon by inserting after the word "there," in line 18 of page 32, the word "shall," so as to read "the same are hereby abolished, and in lieu thereof there shall," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 18, after the word "there," insert the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment at the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, section 17, at the end of line 22, after the word "annum," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "And that the said Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes shall have full power and authority to consolidate and reorganize all forces of the offices abolished and to bring the disbursements for salaries and other expenses of such agency within the limit of the said amount of $150,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman desire to argue the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No. It is absolutely new substitutive legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And it leaves the amount of the appropriation exactly as it is now; the very language of the amendment does.

Mr. MILLER. There is no presumption that this is going to reduce any expenditure or discontinue any officials or reduce any salaries. It simply provides for a reorganization in the department, a reorganization that can be made without any such provision in the law whatever.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, there are at present in Oklahoma two Indian bureaus, as is indicated by this amendment. One is under the Commissioners of the Five Civilized Tribes and the other is the Union Agency. Under the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, as the Chair will see from the document which I send to the desk—Senate Document 218—there is expended something over $60,000, and under the Union Agency there is expended an amount quite in excess of that. The purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is to dispense with some of these employees, so that their salaries may be brought within the limit of the appropriation of $150,000.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. In a moment. That perhaps can not be done without this amendment.

Mr. MANN. It would have to be done.

Mr. MILLER. Has not the Interior Department now the authority to keep its expenditures within the appropriations made by Congress?

Mr. MANN. Authority? They can not exceed it.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman may be correct about that; but we appropriated in the bill last year $250,000 for this purpose, and we have now reduced that amount by $100,000. We certainly ought to give the new man who takes charge of this work the right to reorganize his bureau.

Mr. MANN. He has that right, undoubtedly.

Mr. MILLER. He can reconstruct it and reorganize it.

Mr. CARTER. Then if he has the power now, it is not a change of existing law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it is a change of existing law.

Mr. CARTER. But you say he already has that power.

Mr. MANN. Then he does not need it.

Mr. MILLER. This gives the superintendent a power that now resides in the Secretary of the Interior, and it is giving to a subordinate a power that the superior should have; and, if enacted into law, it gives to an employee of one of the great departments of the Government the right to defy the Secretary of the Interior, the right to defy his orders, and put through any kind of a reorganization he wants.

Mr. CARTER. I am perfectly content that the Secretary should have that power.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly the Secretary has the power to reorganize his whole office where there is no organization provided for specifically or where there is no organization provided by statute. This is a lump sum of money.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, it would depend entirely upon whether the Secretary of the Interior, under the existing law, had the right to spend more than this amount of money.

Mr. MANN. He has not that power.

Mr. SISSON. The existing law may limit the amount provided for that. In a great many of the statutes, however, the right to engage the service of employees in a department is not always limited by the amount of the appropriation. That eventually comes up. It would be necessary to consult the statutes with reference to the creation of these various offices and the right to employ the people in them to ascertain whether or not this limitation comes within the terms of the Holman rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair held the item to be in order originally. I do not know whether the Chair, in connection with that or with this, is familiar with what would be called the leading case on the subject under the Holman rule, which was a decision rendered many years ago when it was proposed to transfer the whole Indian Office to the War Department. It was then contended that by abolishing all of the offices under the Indian Bureau, thereby effecting an economy as well as abolishing the offices, that amendment was in order, and the leading decision upon this Holman rule is the decision in that case, where the Chair held and the Speaker afterwards held that abolishing an office and transferring its duties to another did not effect an economy.

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman what would prevent the Secretary of the Interior, without this provision, from creating a deficiency—expending the money and incurring a deficiency—and coming back for an appropriation next year?

Mr. MANN. The statutes of the United States prevent the Secretary from creating a deficiency.

Mr. CARTER. How is it, then, that we have a deficiency bill every year?

Mr. MANN. That is not difficult to explain. The deficiency in some cases is to provide money for something that Congress has ordered to be done, but has not made a sufficient appropriation for. If, for instance, we have an office with a salary affixed and do not appropriate for it, as sometimes we do not, that creates a deficiency; or if we order work to be done on the Panama Canal, for example, they may have a deficiency there, because they lack the money, but they can not incur obligations beyond the authority we give them.

Mr. SISSON. Suppose there is a statute creating a bureau or creating a department of the Government, and it should give, in general terms, to the head of the bureau the right to employ such employees as may be needed.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. As a rule we cut out that general language, if our attention is called to it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; we usually insert it purposely.

Mr. SISSON. When the time comes for him to make employment it is not necessary to limit it by the amount.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it is. No officer of the Government can incur obligations or expend money beyond the appropriation unless there is specific provision for it. He can not spend money, anyhow——

Mr. SISSON. That is true; and unless this statute should repeal all of the authority that might be in some of these bureaus to employ help at a certain price, which is fixed—and I understand the last appropriation carried $250,000——

Mr. MANN. If there were enough salaries fixed by statute, which there are not in this case, to equal more than $150,000, and we did not appropriate for them, and the offices were filled, those people would have a claim in the Court of Claims; but no such case exists here, so there is no use in discussing it.

Mr. SISSON. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. MANN. That case does not exist here.

Mr. SISSON. If under the present employment he was spending at the rate of $250,000 a year, would this specific appropriation in this language prevent his spending more than $150,000?

Mr. MANN. It certainly would.

Mr. SISSON. Would he be compelled to cut off his employees so as to bring the total expenditure within the $150,000?

Mr. MANN. He would, indeed.

Mr. CARTER. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that last year we appropriated $300,000 for the purchase and transportation of supplies in the Indian Service. The intent of the appropriation of that money was to do away with the Indian warehouses, but——

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is not a parallel case.

Mr. CARTER. But for that very specific purpose there was spent some $340,000 or $350,000, and a deficiency appropriation was passed by this Congress.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know; but the Committee on Appropriations has the same authority to bring in a deficiency appropriation which the other appropriating committees have to bring in the original appropriation, because if that committee says a deficiency exists, it has the authority to put it in a deficiency bill; and the Committee on Appropriations could bring in a deficiency appropriation for every item in this bill that is not subject to a point of order. Of course, they do not do that.

Mr. CARTER. Would not the Appropriations Committee have the same right to bring in an item in a deficiency bill for any amount that might be expended in excess of this appropriation?

Mr. MANN. They would have the same right that the Committee on Indian Affairs has to include this item in this bill.

Mr. CARTER. That is what I thought.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; but the money can not be expended unless that is done; and the gentleman and I do not anticipate that the Committee on Appropriations will mix in this row.

After this amendment is disposed of, I have an amendment that I want to offer.

Mr. CARTER. I think we have discussed this matter rather fully, and I am ready for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes a point of order against the amendment that it is new legislation. The paragraph under consideration carries $150,000 for expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and the compensation of employees. It is very clear, of course, that no greater sum than that amount could be expended without an additional appropriation.

The amendment seeks to authorize the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes to consolidate and reorganize all forces of the offices abolished, and so forth, so as to bring the expenses of such agency within the limits of the said amount of $150,000.

The Chair fails to see how the amendment can be held to retrench expenditures to a greater degree than is already provided in the bill, or in any way to reduce the amounts of money carried in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. It has been held by the Saunders decision that it was not necessary to reduce the amount of money carried in the bill in order to make the amendment in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is familiar with that opinion, or at least has read it recently. But as the Chair has stated, the original paragraph in this bill carries $150,000, and no greater sum than that amount could be expended during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made. The amendment does not seek to reduce that amount or to present any legislation which would bring about a reduction, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Chair hold that it must be necessary that the amendment reduce the amount carried in the bill, in order that the amendment may be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair does not hold anything of the kind; but the Chair does hold that it must appear from the face of the amendment that it will necessarily have the effect of retrenching expenditures.

Mr. CARTER. The Chair will take into consideration the law of the land in that regard, will he not? Has the Chair made his decision? I did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 19, page 32, the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, line 19, strike out the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. MANN. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. I have helped to create a number of offices since I have been in Congress—Commissioner of Corporations, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and a number of other officials—and in not one of them below a Cabinet officer will you find that that officer is to be confirmed by the Senate. I think it is rather derogatory to the influence of the House when it comes to matters of appointment that a Member of the House who desires to make a recommendation, instead of going to the executive officers, where he goes on even terms with Senators, has to trot over to the Senate and humbly beg a Senator to listen to him about something upon which they ought to stand on an equal plane.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that if it is necessary for the Senate to confirm the appointment of postmasters there ought to be a confirmation in this case?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is necessary for the Senate to confirm postmasters. I think it is idiotic that the Government requires Senate confirmation of postmasters. If it was not required, Members of the House would stand in a more dignified position before the country. When we commenced in legislation they provided that all officers, practically, should be confirmed by the Senate. There were only a few of them, and that is the reason that the Senate has grown mighty in influence, until the people of the country have an idea that the Senate is Congress. While we know better, we will never convince the people differently until we assert our prerogative and say that the Senate shall have no greater influence in appointments to these places than have Members of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that the combined wisdom of the Senate would be better than the judgment of one man?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe anything of the kind. The combined wisdom of the Senate is not brought to bear upon appointments. Does the gentleman know how many appointments are pending over in the Senate? They have a list that would reach from here to the other side of the Senate Chamber and then back again.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that Members of the House and the Senate from the State where the appointee is from have better means of knowing the conduct, ability, and character of the man under investigation than has the President?

Mr. MANN. I am seeking to protect the rights and the influence of the Members of the House, Members from Oklahoma, who have an equal right to go before the President or the Secretary of the Interior in regard to these appointments. Under this provision they will have no chance at all except to trail along behind if the appointments are made senatorial by requiring confirmation by the Senate. I do not care to have the gentleman ask me any further questions in that line. Every Member of this House who has had anything to do with patronage, outside of postmasters, knows that Members of the House have very little influence, and they will have less and less. Give the President the power to make the appointment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have never had much trouble in going before the President, never had to crawl and humble myself over in the Senate, to get confirmations made, and I do not know of any Members that have. I do not know that I have had any great amount of influence in the appointment of any officer since the Democratic administration came in, and I have not tried to exercise any great amount. I do not know that I shall insist upon the appointment of any certain person for this position, but here you have a great big position, a man handling affairs of 101,000 people and millions of dollars worth of property, a position where you need the greatest executive ability that can be commanded for a salary of $5,000, a position in which you need character and ability. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would be to place this position under the civil service.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman make that statement when he must know that he is inaccurate and wrong?

Mr. CARTER. I do not see how the gentleman from Illinois can make that statement.

Mr. MANN. Because I know.

Mr. CARTER. Some man will be taken from the civil service and put into this job.

Mr. MANN. Not at all; the President makes the appointment.

Mr. CARTER. I know; but we have a parallel case in which a former President did appoint a man from the civil service, just as this one may be under your amendment. How are you going to judge of the character and executive ability of a man by a civil-service examination?

Mr. MANN. I will not argue against such ignorance.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman from Oklahoma, Was it a good man that the President had appointed from the civil service?

Mr. CARTER. I will be frank with the gentleman from Pennsylvania; I do not think he was.

Mr. BUTLER. Was he bad because he happened to be a Republican?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; he claims to be a Democrat. Now, what do you think of him?

Mr. BUTLER. That is a certificate of character. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing to be gained by continuing this discussion. We want a man of executive ability, a man that can do the business. The present man on the job has not done it, and we need some new blood that will turn things over and start them moving. It will take some little time to wind up the affairs of the individual allottees. There is no reason why the affairs of this tribe should not be wound up speedily. There is a treaty which provides that they should be wound up by March 4, 1907, but we have failed to keep that treaty, and now we want a man who will keep the faith.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman think that he can get this paragon of a man with such ability and efficiency for the sum of $5,000?

Mr. CARTER. We are hoping that he will be an improvement on the present man.

Mr. GOULDEN. That would not be much of an improvement, according to the statement of the gentleman. I hope you will succeed in getting a good man, but the salary to me seems small.

Mr. CARTER. The salary is small for such a big job, but it equals that of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] desires five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who has just addressed the committee, offered the observation that he trusted the new superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes would be much better than the one who now occupies the position of Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes. We all join with him in desiring that there be secured for this important position the very best man on earth, but I will say to him that he will not get a better man than the man who is now Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, because a better man does not live on the face of this earth for that particular kind of work. I desire to make that statement in view of the fact that he soon will be legislated out of office.

Mr. CARTER. How long has the gentleman from Minnesota known the commissioner?

Mr. MILLER. Four or five years. I have known his work in Dakota, in Minnesota, and in Oklahoma, and it is a tremendous monument to the industry, ability, and absolute square-toed honesty of this man. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. How long since he was in——

Mr. MILLER. He has been in the Indian Service about 30 years.

Mr. CARTER. How long since he was in Minnesota and North Dakota?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know that I could give the exact date, but he was in Minnesota within recent times, and he is the man who first unearthed the timber frauds in northern Minnesota more than 10 years ago.

Mr. CARTER. This commissioner has been on the job in Oklahoma since 1898.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have only five minutes and I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. CARTER. That is not a speech; that is a statement.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up the time of the committee in discussing some features of this paragraph that are so plain that they do not need discussion. My good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], I am sure, if he will read the paragraph, will never print the speech that he has just made to the House. Even if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] should be adopted, the paragraph leaves it to the President of the United States to appoint anyone whom he pleases, and he can do so. He does not need to go into the civil service, and it is almost a certainty that he will go outside of it. We may as well be frank. We know, and each knows that every one else knows, that this is merely to legislate out of office a man who is now in the office of Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes.

I am perfectly willing that the majority of the committee should prevail, and they can, of course, as they have the strength to do it. I am not going to criticize them particularly for that. I did not intend to say a word about it until the gentleman made the observation that seemed to reflect upon the character of the work this man had been doing. This official, soon to be swept from office by this paragraph, is, in my judgment, the best man in the whole Indian Service. The responsibility for this legislation, the responsibility for this removal of a tried and capable man, rests with the other side of the House. I well know they are cheerful in assuming that responsibility. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States hardly needs the advice and consent of Senators from the State of Oklahoma or Senators from the respective States in the Union to enable him to select with due discretion and judgment a man to occupy the position of superintendent to the Five Civilized Tribes, at the great salary of $5,000, when there are such able Members of the House here from Oklahoma who can give him good advice. If he can not do that, then I say that the gentlemen should change about and select a man for President of the United States who has capacity to do it. I am quite sure the gentleman from Oklahoma will not seriously argue that the President will have to retain in office there the gentleman who is there already or anyone else who is in the civil service. Not at all. He ought to, but, of course, he will not, for politics must here be played, and, in my judgment, the service will suffer. He can wander outside of the sacred limits of the civil service and follow any sweet singing bird, no matter where it may lead him, and select anyone on the face of the earth who is an American citizen to fill this position. Surely that freedom and that power ought to satisfy gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no question that the President of the United States can appoint any man he sees fit for the position that is being created by this paragraph. He may appoint a man from within the civil service and he may appoint a man outside of the civil service, so far as that is concerned. I shall pass that matter over. I have no doubt that if we should strike this provision out here to-day the Senators from Oklahoma, who want to control this matter and take the control and influence away from the Members of the House, would have it inserted in the Senate, and the conferees would have to agree to it in conference when finally considering the bill. What I want to say is this, that while there is anything to wind up for the Civilized Tribes neither the President without the consent of the Senate nor the President with the advice and consent of the Senate can find a man as well qualified, as well acquainted with Indian affairs, or more thoroughly upright and more honest than J. George Wright, the man who is being legislated out of office by this paragraph. I hold no brief for him. I have been acquainted with him for 12 years. He was a Cleveland Democrat, and never made any sort of apologies or explanation for it. He has been protected through 16 years and more of Republican administration, and there has been no attempt whatever to disturb his position, because of the high character of the man and the splendid service that he was rendering to the Indians. Now, Democratic politicians who have not been able to use him and who know they can not use him are legislating him out of office with a view of putting a man in whom they can use for any purpose they see fit. He has stood for the Indian and for the protection of the Indian and of his rights.

The gentleman from Oklahoma says the commissioner has not wound up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. That is not the fault of the commissioner; the fault, if there is any, is with Congress. Year after year we have imposed additional burdens upon the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. This superintendent or Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, is he on the classified list?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He is in the classified service.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I wanted to know; he is in the classified service.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Therefore it requires this in order to remove him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to get it straight.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He still remains in the civil service and in the Indian Service—perhaps as an inspector. He can not be removed except for cause, but this paragraph legislates him out of a job. There is no man in the United States better qualified than J. George Wright, or who knows more about the Indian Service, or better acquainted with Indian Affairs, or more honest in its administration, or who has given better service to the Indians. He simply refuses to be used by the Democratic politicians of Oklahoma or anybody else. You can not use George Wright for any purpose except for the better administration of the affairs of the Indians. Of course somebody that the Democratic politicians in Oklahoma can use will be given his place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate, of course, that the Democrats in Oklahoma, I presume, live in Oklahoma, at least the interpretation placed——

Mr. BUTLER. It is unfortunate they live at all anywhere.

Mr. DAVENPORT (continuing). At least the interpretation placed by my friend from Kansas would seem he thinks so. To reply to my friend who did not rise in his seat, I will say to him that if it be unfortunate that the Democrats live in the United States at all, they alone must atone for it, because there is no organized Republican Party any more in the United States. I have no desire to cast any reflection upon anyone, and I have no charge to make against the present officers in Oklahoma. My friend Mr. CAMPBELL has eulogized Mr. Wright so highly that it would be futile to attempt to say anything more, yet I say that Mr. Wright has occupied the position that he has out there, and all the deeds of crime and outrages have gone on under his administration that my friend Mr. CAMPBELL told us of the other day in such pitiful terms upon the floor of this House.

Mr. MILLER. And all the time J. George Wright has been requesting district agents and begging and begging for employees to enable him to stop the graft, stop the frauds in the probate courts, stop the evil work——

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is not true, and I challenge the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MILLER. It is a fact.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I say it is not true. I will say to the gentleman, if he will listen to me, that J. George Wright went into that office in 1898, or about that time, and you will not find a single statement or appeal for district agents or anything else from J. George Wright until 1908 and until after Oklahoma became a State.

Mr. MILLER. Nobody heard of district agents until then.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will say he has been there and these conditions have been going on. I knew my friend would rise after the eulogy, when I began to state what did take place. It was not until after Oklahoma was admitted as a State that Mr. Wright found the necessity for field or district agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen are both discussing a point that is not at issue. The district agents are not under Commissioner Wright.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, has not debate closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has not yet expired.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] would consult the records before he speaks, he would not be laboring under such misapprehensions concerning Oklahoma.

Mr. MILLER. I am under no misapprehension.

Mr. CARTER. Well, let us see. I believe we all agree there are two bureaus down there—one the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, charged with the duty of winding up the affairs of these tribes, under the head of Commissioner J. George Wright; and the other, the Union Agency, charged with the supervision of the individual Indian and his allotment, under the leadership of Dana H. Kelsey. The agents whom these gentlemen have been discussing look after the affairs of the individual Indian and his allotment and have nothing whatever to do with tribal affairs. Therefore J. George Wright, the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, has no more to do with these district agents than the man in the moon. So the gentleman was laboring under a misapprehension. The gentleman was also mistaken as to whom my first remarks concerned. They did not refer to Commissioner Wright at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I can not yield in my limited time.

I was not casting any reflection on the honor and integrity of J. George Wright. I agree that he is an honorable, straightforward man, and a lovable companion, but he is a man of somewhat negative qualities. He does not take a positive stand on things until he knows how the Secretary of the Interior feels. It is charged that he always finds out what the Secretary wants him to recommend before he makes a report. The principal charge that can be brought against Mr. Wright is that he has been on the job for lo these many years, with laws of this Government directing him to bring these tribal affairs to a final conclusion. Notwithstanding these plain specifications of law Mr. Wright has failed to close these affairs in accordance with law; and with all due regard to him, I believe we should have some new blood in this bureau.

Where the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] gets his information from that J. George Wright is a Democrat is beyond me. I have never heard him credited with that honor before. I will say, however, that he is one Indian official in Oklahoma that has not permitted the Republican machine in that State to dictate what course he should pursue; but this, I believe, Dana H. Kelsey has done, and for that reason we are against him.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I demand a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment, in part, as follows:

Page 32, line 22, after the words "per annum," insert as a new paragraph the following:

"That to compensate the State of Oklahoma for loss of revenue from nontaxable Indian lands there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, to the State of Oklahoma the said sum of $20,000,000, the said sum to be paid as follows, to wit, $1,250,000 on the 1st day of January next following the adoption of the ordinance hereinafter mentioned and $1,250,000 on each and every 1st day of January thereafter until the entire sum herein appropriated shall be paid to said State: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be paid to said State until the people of said State, by amendment to the constitution of the State of Oklahoma, shall, on or before December 1, A. D. 1916, adopt an ordinance, which by its terms shall be unalterable and irrevocable except by the consent of the United States, in which they shall accept the said sum of $20,000,000, paid as herein provided, in full payment and satisfaction of any and all claim or claims whatsoever against the United States for taxes on any lands or other property within said State made nontaxable by any law or laws enacted, treaties made, or by any other act or acts of the United States: Provided further, That the money herein appropriated shall be paid to said State for the use and benefit of the said State and the counties, townships, school districts, and other municipalities within said State in proportion as the interests of the State, counties, townships, school districts, and other municipalities shall appear, based upon the loss of revenue by reason of nontaxable Indian lands and other Indian property, and the same shall be apportioned and paid out under such provisions, rules, and regulations as shall be prescribed by the legislature of said State."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to withhold the point of order. The gentleman discussed that question in general debate. It is late in the evening now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to hold that the amendment is clearly new legislation——

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). And the point of order is sustained. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Oklahoma that all debate on the paragraph is closed.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 22, after the word "annum," strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the words "and said superintendent shall perform the authority now exercised by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the superintendent of the Union Agency, with authority to reorganize the department and to eliminate all unnecessary clerks."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. I have no objection to giving the commissioner power to do such a thing subject to the control of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I do not object to that language. I would be very glad to have that language go in there, as follows:

Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to hear the amendment read.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Add at the end, "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 22, after the word "annum," strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the words "and said superintendent shall perform the authority now exercised by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the superintendent of the Union Agency, with authority to reorganize the department and to eliminate all unnecessary clerks, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MILLER. There would be no objection to that whatever if the gentleman would consent to change one word.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The word "authority" ought to be "duty."

Mr. MILLER. I think "perform" should be changed to "exercise."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is all right. Make it that he shall exercise the authority.

Mr. MANN. One other word, I think, might be changed. I notice the gentleman says "Commissioner to the Civilized Tribes."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I quoted from the statute.

Mr. MANN. It would probably be correct, but right above in the paragraph it says, "the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I quoted from the books.

Mr. MANN. Very likely the gentleman is correct, but I think in the same paragraph it might be proper to denominate the same man in the same way.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But, Mr. Chairman, I have not changed the form of it. The provision here in this new statute is "superintendent to the Five Civilized Tribes." The other is "the superintendent of the Union Agency."

Mr. CARTER. Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. The bill says "Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes." It ought to be changed to one or the other.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, that is immaterial. I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that it be reported as modified.

Mr. MILLER. The words "Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes" are correct.

Mr. DONOVAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. I notice there is a difference between the experts. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] claims that the term should be "Commissioner to," and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says it should be "Commissioner of." How is an unsophisticated Member to decide which one to follow?

Mr. MANN. I did not say "Commissioner of." I simply quoted from the bill, where that form is used.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "annum," strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the words "and said superintendent shall exercise the authority and perform the duties now exercised by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the superintendent of the Union Agency, with authority to reorganize the department and to eliminate all unnecessary clerks, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of such attorneys and other employees as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, deem necessary in connection with probate matters affecting individual allottees in the Five Civilized Tribes, $85,000.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to change the amount "$85,000" to "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 33, line 2, by striking out the figures "$85,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$75,000."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if you will look at the hearings you will find that all that the Interior Department asked for was $50,000, and the commissioner, representing the department, said they really ought to have $75,000, but he only asked for $50,000, and the limit that he asked for was $75,000. It is in the following language:

The protection of the estates of the helpless children of the Five Civilized Tribes is, without question, one of the most important problems, and at least the appropriation asked for should be made.

That is, $50,000 should be appropriated. He continues:

In fact, it ought to be $75,000.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. NORTON. The commissioner requested $50,000?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. And he subsequently appeared before the committee and asked that the amount be raised to $75,000?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; that is what the hearings show, exactly. Therefore I do not believe that Congress ought to give $10,000 more than the maximum amount asked for by the authority that is going to expend the money. If you give him the $85,000, of course he will expend it, and he will be expending $10,000 more than he asked the committee to give him. It would mean, of course, the employment of some additional attorneys, and he fixes the fees to be paid to the attorneys at from $2,000 to $2,500. It simply means that you have given him from four to five more attorneys than he asked for.

I do not believe that Congress ought to give to these departments more than they ask for, because my service on the Committee on Appropriations has convinced me that they are never at all bashful about asking, not only for what they need, but for more than they need; and they always play on the safe side. I do not believe the committee is warranted in recommending $85,000 when the estimate by the department was only $50,000. The commissioner said he really ought to have, in fact, $75,000. Therefore I do not believe that this committee would be warranted in giving $85,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman accept an amendment of $50,000?

Mr. SISSON. Indeed I would. I was simply intending to be liberal.

Mr. MADDEN. I will offer an amendment to make it $50,000.

Mr. SISSON. I hope the gentleman will offer the amendment, so that if my amendment is not adopted his will be. I do not believe we ought to appropriate $10,000 more than has been asked for.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the amount "$75,000" and inserting "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the amount "$75,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I will simply say that the amount—$85,000—was the result of a compromise on a number of different items. There was some effort made to increase the $150,000 in the preceding paragraph, and it was thought advisable to leave it at $150,000 and put in this additional paragraph, the two covering all items. The amount that could be used is a great deal more than the $85,000, and in the wisdom of the committee we allowed them $85,000 for this purpose, and no more. That is the result of really combining other items with the department estimate.

Mr. SISSON. This fund comes out of the Treasury of the United States and not out of the Indians. That fact may account for the liberality of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER. Not at all. The other amount to which the gentleman refers, that of $150,000, also comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I trust the House will not think of reducing the amount to $75,000. Personally, I am in favor of the provision as it stands.

The great trouble we have had in our country has been from the matter of graft in probate matters, largely due to the fact that an incompetent Indian makes a mistake when he employs an attorney; that is, the Indian that needs protection. This provision was designed to give him a man who would be there and represent him.

I know of instances in my county, and in other counties of the State as well, where the Indian who did not understand his business would go out and employ a shyster, and he would go into court and agree with the opposing counsel and have an order entered with an excessive attorney's fee, and things of that character. I know of one estate in my county that was wrecked by that means. The purpose of this provision is that in the reorganization there will be enough money for the employment of probate attorneys. I think the amount ought to remain at $85,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] withdraws his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that in no event should it be reduced below $75,000. We thought that in allowing it at $85,000 we were doing the best thing to protect the rights of the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON), there were—ayes 16, noes 22.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $275,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations in Oklahoma, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I am very much in favor of appropriating this $275,000. As I understand it, this sum of money is to be used in the public schools of Oklahoma. It is a direct appropriation by the Government of the United States to support the public schools of Oklahoma. Ordinarily you would not appropriate funds out of the Treasury to support the public schools of a State; but you base this appropriation upon the ground that because of the large amount of Indian lands in Oklahoma that are nontaxable under treaties made by the Indians with the United States there is a peculiar burden upon the people of Oklahoma by reason of these nontaxable Indian lands, and that the United States is responsible for this burden.

The Indian problem we have had with us since the first white settlement was attempted on the new continent. It is with us still, and is constantly assuming new phases.

Heretofore the great concern has been the proper treatment of the Indian and how to secure his welfare, provide for his education, and promote his development to the point where he will be self-supporting and able to assume all the duties, liabilities, and responsibilities of citizenship. That problem has not been solved satisfactorily, and many years will intervene before all our American Indians may be safely relieved from the special care and protection of the Federal Government.

A NEW INDIAN PROBLEM.

A new Indian problem has arisen. The Indian population is centered in a few States. The National Government has allotted to many Indian tribes lands in severalty, under laws and treaty stipulations which make these lands exempt from taxation by the several States or any minor civil subdivision thereof, for long periods of years. The National Government has assumed the right to dispose of its public lands within the States, under treaty stipulations which exempt these lands from taxation, without carefully considering the question of the right of the people of the States to demand compensation for loss of revenue to the State and its civil municipalities from nontaxable Indian lands.

TWENTY MILLION DOLLARS DEMANDED FROM NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

During the session of Congress which expired March 3, 1913, I introduced in the House of Representatives a bill (H. R. 28670) to appropriate $20,000,000 to the State of Oklahoma, payable in 16 annual installments of $1,250,000 each, to compensate the State, and its county, township, and school district governments for loss of revenue occasioned by nontaxable Indian lands. I have reintroduced the bill. This bill was not introduced until I had given careful study to the questions involved and had reached the conclusion that the State of Oklahoma had a legal and just claim against the Federal Government for losses to the State from nontaxable Indian lands. I am thoroughly convinced that unless this claim shall be allowed the people of Oklahoma will be required to bear alone a burden which rightly belongs to the Federal Government—a burden that should be borne by all the people of the United States.

CARE OF INDIAN NATIONAL DUTY.

The Indian is the ward of the Nation. It is clearly the duty of the Federal Government to provide for his care, protection, education, and training; to see that he is exempted from such duties and responsibilities of citizenship as he is unable to assume; and to pay whatever it costs to provide such care, protection, and exemption. I assume that this proposition is so self-evident that it will not be denied. The Federal Government has allotted the Indian his land in severalty, made him a citizen of the United States, conferred upon him the right to vote, given him the protection of all national laws, guaranteed to him all the advantages, benefits, and privileges under State laws, but has conveyed him his land under laws and treaty stipulations which exempt it from taxation during a period, in many cases, of 21 years. The Indians, in some cases within my own personal knowledge, are asking that this period of nonalienation and nontaxation shall be extended. Such extensions must be made or a large per cent of the Indians will lose their lands and become helpless paupers. Homes that are inalienable and nontaxable are as essential to the welfare of the incompetent and uncivilized Indian as are schools for his education. The Federal Government has assumed the burden of educating the Indian, but now asks the people of the State to pay the cost of providing the Indian with a home that can not be alienated and that is free from taxation. This is asking the people of the State to meet an obligation which the National Government should discharge.

THE STATE'S CONSTITUTIONAL POWER TO TAX.

Under the Constitution of the United States the Federal Government has no right, power, or authority, without the consent of the State and except upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the State, and except upon the payment to the State of such consideration as may be agreed to by the State, to exempt from taxation, for any period of time, any lands which have been sold or disposed of by the National Government.

Cooley, in his work on "Taxation" (3d ed., p. 136), discussing the exemption of public lands from State taxation, says:

> The disability remains effective until the United States shall have made sale or other disposition of the lands, but it then terminates, notwithstanding the title may not have passed by the actual execution and delivery of a patent.

In the Ohio enabling act Congress made three grants to the State: Section 16 for schools, certain salt springs with contiguous land, and a per cent on net sales of public lands. Following these grants was this proviso:

> Provided always, That the three foregoing propositions herein offered are on the conditions that the convention of the said State shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by Congress from and after the 30th day of June next shall be and remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under authority of the State, whether for State, county, township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale.

The Indiana enabling act, passed in 1816, made certain grants to the State on the express condition that the State would not tax lands which the United States had sold for a period of five years after date of sale. Four grants were made to Illinois on the express condition that the State would exempt from taxation lands sold by the United States for a period of five years and exempt certain bounty lands granted to soldiers while the same should be held by the patentees or their heirs.

The enabling acts admitting Iowa, Alabama, Arkansas, and other States contain similar provisions.

Indeed, this proviso requiring the States to exempt from taxation for a definite period of time certain lands which the United States had sold or disposed of was inserted in practically all the enabling acts of those States in which there were lands which the United States desired should be exempt from taxation after statehood.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did not the white people who went into Oklahoma know of these treaties before they went there, and know that these lands were exempt from taxation by treaties with the Indians?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will answer the gentleman by referring to the act of Congress approved May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 312), which provides, in section 1, in part, as follows:

> That from and after 60 days from the date of this act the status of the lands allotted heretofore or hereafter to allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, as regards restrictions on alienation or incumbrance, be as follows: All lands, including homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as intermarried whites, as freedmen, and as mixed-blood Indians, having less than half Indian blood, including minors, shall be free from all restrictions.

And section 4, in part, provides:

> That all land from which restrictions have been or shall be removed shall be subject to taxation and all other civil burdens, as though it was the property of other persons than allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it not true that the Supreme Court of the United States held that statute unconstitutional?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes; in the case of Choate against Trapp the Supreme Court of the United States held these provisions to be unconstitutional, as taking away the constitutional rights of the Indians contained in solemn treaties made with the Government of the United States.

Now, I know that some of you gentlemen, when you heard the proposition embodied in the amendment which I presented, to appropriate $20,000,000 to the State of Oklahoma to compensate the State for loss of revenue from nontaxable Indian lands, seemed to be greatly surprised. I will say there is nothing in the enabling act which provided for the admission of Oklahoma as a State into the Union which gives the United States any authority to reserve from taxation any lands that have been disposed of by the United States. Go back and read the history of the early enabling acts. Every one of them provided that when the United States, through any treaties or through any laws, enacted that lands in the States shall be exempt from taxation, there was a specific provision in the enabling act granting to the State certain things providing the State would agree by an irrevocable ordinance that the State would not tax those lands for so many years. Never in the history of this Government has the United States claimed the right to exempt lands from taxation in a State, after the United States had disposed of them, without the consent of the State and without proper compensation to the State. Cooley lays down the proposition that as soon as the United States disposes of lands they become subject to taxation under the laws of the States, and all through the history of this Nation the United States has recognized that it has no right to exempt land from taxation.

WHAT IT COSTS OKLAHOMA.

If this burden were light, the people of a State might bear it without murmuring. When, however, it means an annual loss of millions of dollars to the people of a State, they can not bear it without using every legitimate means for securing relief.

Few people realize the enormous value of Indian property in Oklahoma which is exempt from taxation, and it is almost impossible to comprehend the immense loss in revenue thereby occasioned to the State, county, township, and school-district governments.

There are in the United States 322,715 Indians; 117,247 of this number are in Oklahoma. We have within our State over one-third of the entire Indian population of the United States; 101,287 of this number belong to the Five Civilized Tribes; 15,960 belong to other tribes. The latter are Indians located in the western half of the State in what was formerly Oklahoma Territory.

Twenty-seven of the States have less than 1,000 Indians; 21 have less than 500 Indians; 7 of the States have less than 100 Indians. The total Indian population of 41 States of the Union is less than the Indian population of Oklahoma. In the amount of its Indian population Oklahoma stands absolutely in a class by itself.

In what was formerly the Indian Territory—now a part of Oklahoma—the allotted and unallotted Indian lands comprise 19,134,214 acres. About three-fourths of this vast area is untaxable for a long period of years. In what was formerly Oklahoma Territory there are 3,602,259 acres of untaxable Indian lands. In the entire State about 18,000,000 acres of Indian land are not taxable. This vast estate, made untaxable by laws and treaties of the United States, is equal to about one-fourth of all the taxable property of the State of Oklahoma.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has made an estimate of the value of all the Indian property in the United States. According to this estimate the Indian property in the United States amounts to $678,564,253. The Indian Bureau values the Indian property in the State of Oklahoma at $267,603,111. Two-fifths of all the Indian property of the United States is in Oklahoma. All the Indian property in 41 States of the Union does not equal the amount of Indian property in the one State of Oklahoma.

If this property were taxed for State, county, township, and school-district purposes at 1½ per cent, it would bring to the State and its various civil subdivisions annually over $4,000,000. At this rate, in the seven years which have elapsed since statehood the people have lost in revenue from nontaxable Indian property more than $28,000,000. Congress granted to the people of the State $5,000,000 cash in lieu of public-school lands in the Indian Territory. At 5 per cent annual interest this would bring the State an annual revenue of $250,000. In the meantime the State and its various civil municipalities loses annually $4,000,000 in revenue. They are losing $16 in revenue from nontaxable Indian lands for every dollar in interest they receive from the $5,000,000 cash appropriation. This must go on until the lands may be taxed. The loss which the people of Oklahoma will sustain by reason of nontaxable Indian lands can not, of course, be accurately measured, but the loss will be enormous. In my judgment, when a final accounting is had in the matter of nontaxable Indian lands the people of the State will have lost in revenue above $50,000,000.

We all agree that the lands of the incompetent, uneducated, and uncivilized Indians should be exempted from taxation, but some one must pay for this exemption. To relieve one piece of property from taxation is equivalent to increasing the tax upon all other property. To exempt Indian lands from taxation adds additional taxes to all other lands. Revenue lost from exempted Indian property must be made up by revenue from other property. There is no escape from these conclusions, unless the people submit to an inefficient government and inadequate educational facilities. This $276,000,000 worth of property exempt from taxation belongs to the Indians. The Indians are wards of the Federal Government; they are the children of the Nation. The care of Indians is a national duty. To provide them with nontaxable property is an obligation that rests upon the National Government. It is the business of the Nation to provide the Indians with nontaxable property. The cost of providing this nontaxable property is a debt the Nation owes and a debt the Nation should pay. The cost of exempting the Indian from any of the ordinary duties, obligations, and responsibilities of citizenship in the State in which he lives should be paid by all the 93,000,000 people of the United States. It is unjust, it is unfair, it is inequitable, it is indefensible for the people of this great Nation to ask the people of one State to bear an undue and an extraordinary proportion of a burden that in justice belongs to all the people of the Union.

Now, here is my proposition: Congress did its part. It removed the restriction, as I understand, from about 10,000,000 acres, giving the State the right to tax those lands; but the Supreme Court held that under the treaties with the Indians Congress had no power to do that. Now, as you can not do that, there is one thing this Congress can do. You can appropriate to Oklahoma a sum of money that will partially compensate these people for the loss of revenue from taxation. There are 44,000,000 acres of land in the State of Oklahoma, of which 22,000,000 acres belong to the Indians, and of that 22,000,000 acres, four-fifths of the land is untaxable. The Indians own one-half of our land, but constitute but 7 per cent of our population.

Now, gentlemen, assuming the estimate made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be correct, that there were $267,000,000 worth of Indian property in the State of Oklahoma, most of which is exempt from taxation, if that property was taxed at one and one-half of 1 per cent for State, county, and local purposes, the exemption of this property from taxation means a loss in revenue of more than $4,000,000 annually to the people of the State of Oklahoma by taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I say the exemption of that land from taxation brings a loss to the State, to the counties, and school districts of Oklahoma of more than $4,000,000 annually. Whose duty is it to protect the Indians? Whose obligation is it to provide the Indians with nontaxable lands? It is not the duty of Oklahoma. It is not the duty of any other State in the Union, but it is the duty of the National Government, of all these 100,000,000 people. Yet through your treaties and your legislation you are placing an annual burden of more than $3,000,000 taxation on our citizens which this Nation ought to bear.

I have studied this question until I have come to the conclusion that the United States ought to make some adequate compensation for this immense loss.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has not the United States Government already given you $5,000,000, and did you not accept it when you became a State?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The United States did give us $5,000,000 in lieu of school lands in the Indian Territory side, but it took from us school lands on the Indian Territory side worth $15,000,000. If the United States had given us sections 16 and 36 in every township in the Indian Territory, the State would have had more than a million acres of additional school lands, worth $15,000,000 or $20,000,000. The United States Government gave us $5,000,000, which, at 5 per cent, brings us in $250,000 anually, but we are losing more than $3,000,000 a year by reason of nontaxable Indian lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the per capita payment is the next item. I ask unanimous consent that that be passed over until the remaining items are read.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been done by a previous order.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand that the per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians has been passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair will state that that was done yesterday.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has already been passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $40,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries not exceeding those for the last fiscal year, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1915, a detailed report of all moneys expended from this and all other funds of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Can the gentleman from Texas give any estimate of what it will cost to carry out the provisions of the last proviso, which reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1915, a detailed report of all moneys expended from this and all other funds of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Does that cover all the expenditure that has ever been made?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not.

Mr. MANN. That is what it says.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I am willing to have an amendment, for it is intended only for the period covered by the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I think there has recently been made a reauditing for one of the civilized tribes and a council of government, and now it is proposed to have it made for all civilized tribes. I was told by some gentleman who may have known, or may have been mistaken, that it would take several years and probably cost several hundred thousand dollars to do it; that as to one of the nations reexamination had already been made two or three times, once at a very considerable expense, and that the result was that the reexamination agreed with the original examination to one cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the last Indian appropriation act there was contained a provision appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of preparing a historical and financial report and restating the accounts of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. That is exactly what this would do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Auditor of the Interior Department has recently stated that that work would cost $150,000; that it would open up a field for the presentation of claims against the Federal Government the extent of which it was impossible to estimate. He said were it to be done he desired special employees to watch the papers of his files while persons employed to do this work were examining them; that they were of so much importance and value to the Government that he did not propose that anybody employed under any other branch of the Federal Government should take possession of those documents without somebody representing him to watch them.

One of the Five Civilized Tribes' accounts have been restated, and as I recall, three times.

Mr. MANN. The Cherokee Nation two or three times.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This provision requires another restatement. An investigation disclosed the fact that $5,000 was paid two gentlemen to restate these accounts at one time, and so far as could be ascertained, all they did was to take the work done on a former occasion, resubmit it, and draw all the compensation appropriated for the purpose. Now, this is too much—to require a detailed report of all moneys expended from this and all other funds of the Five Civilized Tribes. If that provision should ever become a law, the Auditor of the Interior Department would want at least $100,000 to do it.

Mr. MANN. He would want a million before it was through with.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the last proviso on page 35.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes a point of order against the proviso, lines 5 to 9, inclusive, page 35.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I concede the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order as to the balance of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the proviso is subject to a point of order, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fulfilling treaties with Choctaws, Oklahoma: For permanent annuity (article 2, treaty of November 16, 1805, and article 13, treaty of June 22, 1855), $3,000; for permanent annuity for support of light-horsemen (article 13, treaty of October 18, 1820, and article 13, treaty of June 22, 1855), $600; for permanent annuity for support of blacksmith (article 6, treaty of October 18, 1820, and article 9, treaty of January 20, 1825, and article 13, treaty of June 22, 1855), $600; for permanent annuity for education (article 2, treaty of January 20, 1825, and article 13, treaty of June 22, 1855), $6,000; for permanent annuity for iron and steel (article 9, treaty of January 20, 1825, and article 13, treaty of June 22, 1855), $320; in all, $10,520.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph. I want to ask the gentleman what funds does this affect?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These are all treaty items, and it is impossible to avoid making payment of treaty items.

Mr. SISSON. It only affects the annuity items provided for in the treaty?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the way I understand it; they are all treaty items under treaties heretofore made.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman will recall that the Dancing Rabbit treaty provides that the Choctaw Indians remaining in Mississippi should not share in the annuity fund. Is not that true?

Mr. CARTER. I do not think this has anything to do with that at all. This is under the treaty of 1855, made after the Indians moved to Oklahoma, and has nothing to do with the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For constructing, equipping, and maintaining a hospital on lands authorized to be set apart within the Choctaw Nation for the use and benefit of the enrolled Indians of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $22,500 to be payable out of Choctaw tribal funds and $7,500 to be payable out of Chickasaw tribal funds, said hospital to be conducted under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 36, line 8, strike out the figures "$30,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$50,000."

Line 9, strike out the figures "$22,500" and insert the figures "$37,500."

Line 10, strike out the figures "$7,500" and insert the figures "$12,500."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the $50,000 was the amount estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior and the amount asked for by the chief of the Choctaws and Choctaw Council. An appropriation was passed by the Choctaw Council, but it was decided that the Treasury Department had not the right to pay out money on such authorization, and that it would have to be appropriated by Congress. When the matter came before the subcommittee I asked that it be reduced to $30,000, because I thought $30,000 would build a good hospital. Afterwards the chief called on me and said that they wanted to build an elaborate hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis patients, and therefore I agreed to offer this amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that the more elaborate the hospital the less valuable it is. There is not an elaborate tuberculosis hospital in the United States that is very serviceable.

Mr. CARTER. By elaborate I meant larger.

Mr. MANN. Well, call it larger.

Mr. CARTER. So that it would accommodate more patients.

Mr. MANN. The proper way to build a tuberculosis hospital is to build it so you can keep adding to it—separate apartments.

Mr. CARTER. There are 101,000 of these Indians.

Mr. MANN. If they are all sent to a tuberculosis hospital, they will soon be all dead.

Mr. CARTER. There are 101,000 Indians—one-third of the Indians in the United States—and this is supposed to accommodate all of those who may have tuberculosis in those tribes.

Mr. MANN. The only real value of a tuberculosis hospital is to take a man who is sure to die away from where there is any chance of spreading the disease and place him where he can pass away under favorable circumstances. You can have sanitariums, or sanatoriums, or places of that sort, where people with tuberculosis can go and get fresh air—and that is what they need—to sleep in the open. The last thing that they need is a large hospital, except for the purpose of being made comfortable while they are dying.

Mr. CARTER. It is proposed by the department to have an open-air hospital. That is the intention—to have a regular tuberculosis hospital.

Mr. MANN. I am not objecting. It is easily added to.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman in relation to this matter that a short time ago I had an opportunity of visiting several Indian hospitals, and I was in several hospitals where the Indians were receiving a great deal of benefit and where their health had been improved since they went there.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I have been visiting tuberculosis hospitals for personal reasons for many years, and I never yet saw any that I thought were of any great value except to teach people how to take care of themselves in a short time, possibly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in this city we have a tuberculosis hospital constructed along the most modern and scientific lines, and it cost $100,000. We have a population of 300,000. The modern method of providing accommodation for tuberculous patients is not in a great large building, but to put them in a number of separate small buildings, so that the cases can be isolated. It seems to me that if the gentleman takes $30,000 he will have ample to start a hospital of such a character.

Mr. MANN. As a rule the most valuable of them consists of tents. I have a boy in a tent now, and it is the only place he has ever received any benefit from these numerous hospitals that he has been in.

Mr. CARTER. I am not particular about it, and if the gentleman objects I shall withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am not objecting to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to return to the item on page 33, line 20, which is the only item of the bill which has not been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdictioin of the Secretary of the Interior, same to be made under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such members are Indians whose restrictions have not been removed the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for their benefit.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. This is the item that my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, was interested in, but he is unavoidably absent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion? I desire to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 30 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make that agreement now. I want to first discuss the point of order. I have no objection to the debate on the paragraph being limited to 30 minutes if we can be first heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on the point of order is within the discretion of the Chair, and the Chair will state further that not having had full opportunity to investigate the various treaties and statutes which may or may not bear on the proposition, he is inclined to allow considerable latitude in debate on the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER. To-morrow being Friday, under the rules of the House, will this bill be up for consideration, if it should not pass this afternoon?

Mr. MANN. It would be in order for the gentleman from Texas to make the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If this paragraph goes out of the bill, we are through with it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have just been informed by the able parliamentarian of the House, Mr. Clark, that on to-morrow a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of this bill would be in order, and that custom has been followed many, many times. My inquiry goes more particularly to the state of the business on the calendar, if it be such that this bill would not probably be reached in any event, even if that preferential motion be not made.

Mr. MANN. There is not much business on the calendar. In fairness to Mr. HARRISON, I think we ought to give him a chance to debate the matter.

Mr. CARTER. The suggestion that I would make is that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] get through with his statement this evening, and that then we can rise and take the matter up when Mr. HARRISON is here.

Mr. MILLER. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. MANN. Could we not reach an agreement as to the length of time, if the point of order be not sustained, that debate shall be conducted on the paragraph and amendments thereto.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois I have absolutely no objection to agreeing to that length of time that the merits of this question may be considered if it is held to be in order. I would like, however——

Mr. MANN. That is, the time proposition?

Mr. SISSON. But I would not like to make an agreement until Mr. HARRISON'S return——

Mr. MANN. Mr. HARRISON stated—the same matter was up the other night—that if the point of order was not sustained he proposed to offer an amendment, and would not want more than five minutes of time.

Mr. SISSON. That suits me exactly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate, after the disposal of the point of order, be limited to 20 minutes, 10 minutes to a side.

Mr. MANN. Make it 30 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will make it 30 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Make it half an hour to a side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think I could agree to that; I think half an hour will be sufficient for both sides, 15 minutes to a side.

The CHAIRMAN. How is the time to be divided?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Half to those in favor of the amendment and half against it—15 minutes to each side.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, in the event the point of order——

Mr. MANN. After the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. SISSON. If the point of order is sustained, of course that eliminates it from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent, after the point of order is disposed of——

Mr. MANN. If the point of order is overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order should be overruled, that debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by those in favor and one-half by those who oppose.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the gentleman from Texas make it 40 minutes, as several gentlemen want to be heard.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will agree to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas amends his request so as to make it 40 minutes, 20 minutes to a side. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to offer an amendment, and I would like at least five minutes on it, and from the requests and inquiries from gentlemen who wish to be heard I am afraid that I will not have that time.

Mr. MANN. Give the gentleman five minutes extra.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Forty-five minutes, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas amends his request so as to make it 45 minutes, 20 minutes to be given to each side and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee at any length, since we have reached an agreement, because my colleague is much more familiar with the law than I am and will be here to-morrow. Our contention is that this is new and substantive legislation involving the distribution of certain funds of the Choctaws in Oklahoma, in which we contend that the Choctaws in Mississippi are entitled to an interest. But whether that is true or not, this is unquestionably new and substantive legislation. The present law is found in section 17 of the act of April 26, 1906, and is as follows:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, I am not going to detain the committee with reading all of the facts as they appear in the last report of the Secretary of the Interior, but I am going to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a history of this matter as given by Mr. Adams, the first Assistant Secretary of the Interior, for the information of Members. I will state to the committee that there are two or three of these extracts which go into the history of the entire matter, and since the matter is not going to be decided by the Chair or by the committee this afternoon I shall not read that history, thereby detaining the committee, because it will be in the RECORD and if necessary can be discussed to-morrow:

Under this act it will be observed, first, that the right to make applications was given for a period of six months—that is to say, for six months following September 25, 1902; second, that descendants of actual beneficiaries under Article XIV, irrespective of their degree of Indian blood, were to be recognized as Mississippi Choctaws; and, third, that a rule of evidence was prescribed, to be accepted in lieu of proof of ancestry, according any full blood the rights of a Mississippi Choctaw.

In the administration of this act a question arose as to whether, in case of the identification of a full-blood parent as a Mississippi Choctaw, the decision in his favor would inure to the benefit of children born to him of mixed Indian blood. An example of this kind is to be found in the case of the family of Calvin McMillan. (M. C. R., 4215.) The census card in this case shows that the wife only—Mollie McMillan—was identified. In this family there were 11 members, all of whom were alleged to be full-blooded Indians, but only one of whom was identified.

By letter of March 17, 1903, prepared under supervision of Mr. Van Devanter, then Assistant Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior held that the mixed-blood children of full bloods were entitled to identification under said section 41. This decision was overruled, however, by the opinion of the Attorney General of June 10, 1903, wherein he held that the rights conferred upon such Mississippi Choctaws were in the nature of gifts, and therefore that the act should be strictly construed to the exclusion of all except full bloods where Indian blood was the only evidence relied upon.

A second question which arose was as to whether, under said section 41, persons of mixed blood claiming identification through proof of ancestry were required to establish their descent from an actual patentee or might also submit proof of descent from persons who attempted to comply with the treaty. The view was adopted that it was not intended by the agreement to disturb the rule theretofore followed by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes permitting applicants to submit proof of their descent from persons entitled to the benefits of Article XIV who did not receive patents thereunder. However, as before stated, only very few persons of mixed blood were able to furnish the necessary facts to establish their ancestry.

Following the agreement of 1902 came the acts of March 3, 1905, and April 26, 1906, authorizing the enrollment of new-born citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes. Under these acts a number of children whose parents had been found entitled to enrollment by the Secretary of the Interior were added to the final rolls of the Choctaw Nation.

The term "identification," as used in connection with the Mississippi Choctaw work, refers to the preliminary decision of the Secretary of the Interior holding applicants to be entitled to the benefits growing out of Article XIV of the treaty of 1830 and the later acts looking to their removal to the Indian Territory. However, the identification of an applicant was not in any case a guaranty that he would ultimately succeed to the benefits of Choctaw citizenship. By the terms of section 41 of the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 641), "identified" Mississippi Choctaws were allowed six months after the date of their identification to remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country and make settlement there. If they failed to remove, they lost the benefits of their identification.

It was further provided by the same section that upon proof of their settlement in the Choctaw Nation, which proof was to be submitted within one year after the date of their identification, they should be "enrolled" by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to allotment, as provided for other citizens of the tribes, subject to special provisions relating to Mississippi Choctaws, such enrollment to be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

By section 42 of the same act it was provided that when any Mississippi Choctaw had in good faith continuously resided upon the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw country for a period of three years, he should, "upon due proof of such continuous bona fide residence," receive a patent for his lands. Section 44 of the same act also provided that if, within four years after enrollment, any Mississippi Choctaw, or his heirs or representatives in case of his death, failed to make proof of continuous bona fide residence for the period so prescribed, or up to the time of the death of such Mississippi Choctaw, in case of his death after enrollment, he and his heirs and representatives, if he be dead, should be deemed to have acquired no interest in the land set apart to him, and the same should be sold at public auction for cash.

These requirements made it impossible for many ignorant and indigent full bloods to take advantage of the preliminary decisions of the commission and of the department identifying them. It is true that some effort was made by the Government to assist such persons in removing to the Indian Territory. The Eleventh Annual Report of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, the same being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, contains, on page 19, a statement by the commission upon this point. This statement is to the effect that those identified as Mississippi Choctaws were chiefly indigent full bloods who formerly resided in Mississippi and were without means of removing to Indian Territory, and that Congress, in order that they might receive the benefits of identification, appropriated $20,000 to be used in defraying expenses incident to their removal. The expenditure of this appropriation was placed under the direction of the commission, and on July 24, 1903, a special agent was designated to undertake the work. Circulars setting forth the purpose of the Government were distributed in the full-blood settlements in Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, and the special agent of the Government proceeded to Meridian for the purpose of mobilizing those of the Indians who desired to avail themselves of the aid offered by the Government. August 13, 1903, a special train carrying 264 full bloods arrived at Atoka, in the Indian Territory. Arrangements had been made for their subsistence at a camp 3 miles south of Atoka until such time as they could be placed upon their respective allotments. Twenty-six additional identified full-blood Mississippi Choctaws were removed on October 9, 1903, to Fort Towson, making a total of 290 transported under the direction of the commission. The entire appropriation was expended in the removal of these Indians and for their subsistence after removal.

The number transported by the Government (290) was only a small portion of the number identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the commission under the acts of June 28, 1898, and July 1, 1902, said number being 2,534.

Arrangements were also made by private parties for the transportation of Mississippi Choctaws. By reason of alleged expenditures in connection with the removal of such persons, suit was subsequently authorized by Congress to be instituted in the Court of Claims, and all Mississippi Choctaw lands are now held by the allottees under the cloud of an alleged lien which the claimants contend attached to such lands under the act giving the court jurisdiction, it being further contended that the lien extends also to the funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such Mississippi Choctaws.

Under the laws of Congress the contracts looking to the sale or incumbrance in any way of Mississippi Choctaw lands prior to allotment were made invalid, with the result that it was impossible to provide such persons in advance with a fund to meet their expenses, even with the approval of the department.

The report of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes for the year ending June 30, 1907, shows, on page 12, that 24,634 persons applied to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for identification as Mississippi Choctaws under the acts of June 28, 1898, on July 1, 1902; that of this number 2,534 were identified as Mississippi Choctaws, and that of the number so identified 1,072 persons failed to remove to the Indian Territory and submit proof of their removal and settlement within the time required by law. In this connection the commissioner stated that several reasons might be given for the failure of the identified persons to take advantage of their opportunity to submit proof of such removal and settlement; that many of them did not appreciate the value of allotments in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country; that few Mississippi Choctaws made more than a bare living in their former homes and hence had no means for transportation; that some who were transported by individuals became sick under illtreatment and died the first winter; and that those who survived advised their friends and relatives remaining in Mississippi and Alabama of their experience, which discouraged them from making an attempt at removing.

It further appears from this report that under the new-born acts of March 3, 1905, and April 26, 1906, applications were made for the enrollment of 372 children of Mississippi Choctaws; that 198 of such children were enrolled and the applications of 174 rejected or dismissed.

The final results, as shown on page 13 of said report, were as follows:

Enrollment of Mississippi Choctaws.

Enrolled under acts of June 28, 1898, and July 1, 1902	1,415
Enrolled under act of Mar. 3, 1905	11
Enrolled under act of Apr. 26, 1906	187
Total	1,643

I wish to refer in this connection to my letter of April 22, 1912, relating to the general subject of enrollment, wherein I pointed out, under the heading of "Class III," that there were approximately 10 cases where families of Mississippi Choctaws were identified by the department within the last six months prior to March 4, 1907—some of whom were identified within the last few days prior to said date—and that they were consequently deprived of the usual period of time allowed other Mississippi Choctaws under the agreement of 1902 for removal to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country. These 10 families are in a class by themselves, because, notwithstanding formal adjudication of their rights, they were prevented by the abrupt closing of the enrollment work from taking advantage of the decisions which had been rendered in their favor.

I am advised that if the work of reinvestigating and readjudicating the claims of Mississippi Choctaws be undertaken along the broad lines outlined in the bill introduced by Mr. HARRISON, the work can not be accomplished within the time prescribed therein; that if the applicants are required to establish that they or some one of their ancestors were beneficiaries under article 14 of the treaty of 1830, a vast amount of evidence will necessarily have to be taken, covering the family history of the applicants for more than 80 years; and that this work would be a repetition of work which has already been accomplished, and in the great majority of cases would be of no benefit whatever to the applicants. Experience has shown that in those cases where there would seem to be the most merit, judging by the physical appearance of the applicants, such applicants were least able to establish the facts concerning their ancestry. The great difficulty which such persons encounter is due to their frequent change of residence, the breaking up of family ties, and the substitution of English for Indian names.

If Congress shall be of the opinion that any legislation whatever is needed for the relief of Mississippi Choctaws, either at the expense of the United States or the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, the meritorious cases, with few exceptions, can be selected from existing records of this department now in the custody of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, at Muskogee, Okla. As to the 10 families referred to above, it is unnecessary for me to discuss the matter of their enrollment herein, inasmuch as I have reported fully as to them in said report of April 22, 1912. With respect to the 1,070 persons who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws, but who failed to prove the facts of removal and settlement in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, it may be said that, irrespective of their unfortunate condition of poverty and ignorance, there is grave question whether there is any just ground, legal or equitable, for holding the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations responsible for their failure to comply with the law. In fact, it may be urged by the tribes that responsibility, if any, rested upon the United States instead. As to the mixed-blood children of full-blood parents who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws under the rule of evidence prescribed by section 41 of the act of July 1, 1902, which excused them from proof of ancestry, it would seem that the propriety of further action looking to their enrollment would be dependent largely upon whether the benefits of the agreement of 1902 were in the nature of gifts to the full bloods.

Section 3 of the bill provides that claimants may be represented by attorneys, whose fees shall be fixed in accordance with any contract now or hereafter made between the applicant and said attorney, and that such contract shall govern the amount of such fee, provided that the Secretary of the Interior may limit the percentage of compensation in each case, and that the contract shall be enforceable for no greater sum than that fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

In connection with this section, it may be said that the records of the department show the Mississippi Choctaws have been to an unusual extent the victims of numerous extortionate contracts, which were doubtless obtained in some instances through misrepresentation of facts and in some cases by persons falsely representing themselves to be Government agents. I am therefore of opinion that if any legislation whatever be enacted for the purposes indicated by the bill conditions even more stringent than those set forth in section 3 should be provided with reference to such contracts. Persons desiring to negotiate with the Indians should be known to be of reputable character. They should be required to obtain permission first from the Department of the Interior to negotiate with the claimants. They should be limited by law as to the maximum amount to be paid under such contracts, and a penalty should be provided for taking any contract or attempting to enforce any agreement made in violation of law.

Section 4 of the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall have prepared and make a schedule or roll of all persons entitled under the act, within eight months after its passage, and within said eight months award them the full rights of citizens and members of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribe. It seems almost needless to say that if the investigation and reexamination be made in the wholesale fashion proposed by the bill, it would be, as indicated in a previous connection, a physical impossibility to accomplish the work within this time.

Sections 5 and 6 of the bill would appear to be appropriate provisions in the event that such a bill should be enacted. Section 7 provides, among other things, that depositions may be taken in support of said applications in any place in the United States upon notice to the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior, and that the procedure as to notice and taking of depositions shall be as in ordinary cases before the United States courts. If this section should be enacted, it would be absolutely impossible for the representatives of the tribes to be represented at all hearings and to subject the witnesses to cross-examination and furnish the rebuttal evidence which would be necessary to a proper examination of the cases.

The latter part of section 7 provides that the expense of taking depositions on the part of claimants shall be paid by the applicants in the first instance, but shall be taxed as costs in each case where the applicant is successful, and said costs shall be charged to the funds of said tribe in the United States Treasury. If this clause be enacted, a burden will be placed upon the tribes not imposed upon them with respect to many thousands of unsuccessful applicants heretofore denied enrollment.

Section 8 provides a time limit of six months for the submission of applications. If the bill be enacted, some such provision as this should be included therein, although it is questionable whether Indians of the full blood as well as those of mixed blood whose habits, customs, and language are substantially those of the full bloods should be so limited without any provision whatever for some one to act as their representative under authority of the Government.

Section 9 of the bill provides that the tribal organization of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribe shall be abolished and the title to all tribal lands and moneys yet undistributed be vested in the United States as trustee. This provision is not necessarily a part of an enrollment bill, and should, in my opinion, be made the subject of a separate measure, providing Congress is satisfied that the time has now arrived for the abolishment of the tribal organization.

I wish to suggest that the term "Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribe," as used in various places in the bill, is not in harmony with the history or organization of said tribes. The Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations are entirely independent in their organization. It is true that prior to allotment they did own in common all of the lands embraced within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, but they did not constitute a single tribe.

In view of the facts stated above, I am of opinion that the bill should not be enacted into law.

Copy of the decision of the Secretary of the Interior of March 17, 1903, relating to the identification of mixed-blood children of Mississippi Choctaws, is inclosed for your consideration. The opinion of the Attorney General of June 19, 1903, relating to the same subject, appears on page 689 of Volume XXiV of tLe printed opinions of the Attorney General.

Respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

In respect to the Mississippi Choctaws, I find that there was an error of construction on the part of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, which must have caused many children to lose the rights of citizenship. In order that this may be understood, a word of explanation will be necessary, perhaps, concerning this class of Indians. There were two distinct stages in this work. Applicants were first identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, following which schedules of identified Mississippi Choctaws were prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. After identification they had the right, for six months, to remove to and establish residence in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country. Subsequent to their removal and upon submitting satisfactory evidence of settlement, their names were placed upon a roll similar to that established for native-born Choctaws. Like other rolls of citizenship, these Mississippi Choctaw rolls would be forwarded to the Secretary, and when approved by him the persons named thereon became enrolled citizens with substantially the same rights as other Choctaw citizens. Accordingly, when the act of April 26, 1906, went into effect a question arose as to whether their minor children living March 4, 1906, were entitled to enrollment. The Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes erroneously held that they were not so entitled, and, of course, during the period while his ruling was in effect the time in which they could make application was rapidly passing. The matter was brought to the attention of the department and, in a decision rendered May 25, 1906, in the case of Willis Willis, the Secretary of the Interior ruled that the children of enrolled Mississippi Choctaws living March 4, 1906, were entitled to enrollment under said act of April 26, 1906. When in Muskogee last October or November, I learned from the office of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes that, after receiving said decision of May 25, 1906, the practice was changed and the children of Mississippi Choctaws enrolled without further discrimination against them, but that there was no time to go back and take up the cases which had been disposed of under the act prior to said decision, and that no attempt was made to do so. Thus one-third of the allotted time was lost to the children of enrolled Mississippi Choctaws.

* * * * * * *

I find that the department, by letter of January 12, 1907, furnished the Senate with copy of Indian Office letter of January 10, 1907, wherein it was recommended that an extension of at least one year's time from March 4, 1907, be granted for the completion of the rolls of citizens of said tribes. In forwarding the said report the Secretary of the Interior said:

"The department concurs in the views of the Indian Office. Unless the time is extended many persons entitled to enrollment will not be enrolled. The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and the commissioner have been for years taking testimony and rendering decisions in cases involving complicated questions of citizenship in these tribes, and some of the cases have not yet reached the department.

"While the department has disposed of most of the citizenship cases which have come before it, it apparently can not give due consideration to all the cases still pending and to be submitted by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Indian Office within the time prescribed by the second section of the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat., 137)."

In a letter of March 1, 1907, further report was made to the President of the Senate showing the number of cases which were pending in the office of the Secretary of the Interior on February 25, 1907, together with the number of persons included in said cases. Report was also made in said letter showing the number of cases received in the Secretary's Office from the Indian Office between February 25 and March 1, 1907, together with the number of persons affected thereby.

March 2, 1907, the President of the Senate was further advised concerning the number of cases pending before the Department of the Interior.

Final report on this subject was made March 4, 1907, to the President of the Senate. Therein it was shown that there were 2,023 cases before the Secretary of the Interior which required examination and decision after February 25, 1907, and on or before March 4, 1907. The number of individuals included in the total number of cases was not stated in said letter of March 4, 1907, but they probably averaged from two to five persons. The total number of persons could not have been less than 5,000 and probably did not exceed 10,000. The unconditional closing of the enrollment work of the fixed date, to wit, March 4, 1907, worked a great hardship upon a number of Indians who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws a few days or weeks prior to that date. As to them, it became impossible to remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country and to establish proof of residence therein before the jurisdiction of the Secretary to approve their enrollment terminated. Accordingly here, as in many other cases, there was injustice done and the usual period of six months for removal to said country was not allowed them. Other Indians, who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws, had sufficient time for removal to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and, in addition thereto, a liberal allowance of time to establish settlement and residence therein. In my recent investigation of enrollment matters in Oklahoma I found that there were several families who were identified within the last week preceding March 4, 1907, in whose cases removal to the nation was physically impossible before that date. There were at least 15 persons, and perhaps more, included in these families. The majority of them were full-blood Indians.

* * * * * * *

(o) Identified Mississippi Choctaws who were not finally enrolled because they failed to furnish proof of removal to and settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country.

By section 41 of the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 641), it was required (1) that Mississippi Choctaws should remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within six months following the date of their identification as such, and (2) that they should make proof of such settlement to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes within one year after said date. The duties imposed by this section were so arduous that a large number of identified Mississippi Choctaws, mostly full-blood Indians, were compelled to forego all benefits contemplated by the act. The total number of persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws was 2,534, but only 1,445 were finally enrolled. Thus there were 1,089 persons entitled under the law who failed to secure its benefits. This difference was due in part to the closing of the enrollment work on a fixed date. There was a considerable number of persons in whose favor decisions were rendered during the latter part of February or in the early part of March, 1907, for whom it would have been a physical impossibility to remove to the Indian Territory and furnish proof of settlement therein prior to March 4, 1907. There were others, as I found from personal investigation, who removed to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country and who, failing to find work or other means of sustenance during the three-year period preceding the issuance of patents to such persons, were compelled to return to their old homes in order to provide the necessities of life. There were still others who removed to the Indian Territory and who selected "provisional" allotments, but were induced by speculators to lease their land for an inadequate consideration and to leave the country. As such leases were usually for long periods of time, the continued absence of the allottee was very much to the advantage of the lessee.

(p) Children whose parents, although identified as Mississippi Choctaws, were not finally enrolled as citizens because they failed to establish proof of their removal to and settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within the time required by law.

The rights of these children, if living March 4, 1906, are substantially the same as their parents. See opinion of the Assistant Attorney General of February 16, 1907, in the Mississippi Choctaw case of Nicholas Charles et al.

* * * * * * *

This matter has been before the Senate and in the RECORD of June 18, 1913, the rights of the Choctaw was discussed by Senator WILLIAMS, as follows:

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this connection I wish to say just a word in explanation. I would have no objection to this legislation if it were fair and included all the people who ought to be entitled to share in this fund. I should vote for a bill to do that very readily and very quickly; but the committee has left out of all consideration, in my opinion with great injustice, some thousand or more Choctaws in the State of Mississippi, who by the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty of 1830 were guaranteed their rights to every privilege of the Choctaw Nation, except a share in the annuities. The treaty expressly provides that if they still remain in the State of Mississippi they shall be members of the Choctaw Nation and share in every privilege except that "persons who claim under this article"—I read a part of the fourteenth article—"shall not lose the privilege of Choctaw citizens, but if they ever remove they shall not be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

That is the only exception. Now, no act of Congress can abridge that treaty right nor has the Choctaw Nation ever asked that it should be abridged. Nothing except a new treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation would have any effect upon this question. The tribe has never attempted to abridge or change in any way the Dancing Rabbit treaty, which was effected under Andrew Jackson's régime.

Congress has already treated these people very unfairly. I secured some legislation in the House some years ago, and under that legislation Congress went some distance to do them justice, but it required that they should move to the Indian Territory, as it was at that time, in order to be entitled to their right as citizens of the Choctaw Nation.

Not only is it true, Mr. President, that the treaty expressly reserved to them their rights as citizens of the Choctaw Nation, but if there had been no treaty to that effect it is a general principle of law that citizenship in barbarous or semibarbarous tribes, as they were at that time, is a matter of blood relationship and not a matter of geographical boundary. That has been the case at all times. After some rights had been given these people Congress took the matter up later. The first statute passed was this:

"Said commission shall have authority to determine and identify the Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, September 27, 1830, and make report to the Secretary of the Interior."

That was in 1893, I believe; it was in my first or second term in Congress I know.

Then later on, in 1902, Congress passed some other provision and, amongst other things, used this language:

"The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who receive a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior"—

Prior—

"to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said commission; but this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not a Mississippi Choctaw of the full blood, etc."

This act of Congress said that no person should be enrolled "whose ancestors had not received a patent from the Federal Government." The Dancing Rabbit treaty entitled these people upon certain proof to receive a patent. A man by the name of Ward was sent down there. It was a notorious scandal at the time, so much so that the Congress of the United States subsequently acted upon the matter. A commission was sent down to investigate what this man had done, and it was reported that his action was in every way discreditable and wrong. He remained drunk all the time, and after he had made up a file of the people who were entitled to entries of 160 acres of land on loose foolscap paper he used a great deal of it for shaving paper later or tore it up. It was a regular scandal.

Now, then, this cunning law with the language which I did not notice at the time, put upon the statute books at the instance and under the approbation of a noted law firm in the State of Oklahoma—the Indian Territory it was at that time—thus confined the Mississippi Choctaws to the descendants of only 143 Mississippi Choctaws. This man Ward had managed to lose or destroy or drunkenly misplace the names of all except 143 of them, and those 143 or the descendants of them are now the only ones who can apply under that law as it was.

We tried to get in the Indian Affairs Committee an amendment to this amendment so as to include these people. I did not draw it up there, but left it to be worded, and it was worded in a bill introduced by the Representative from the sixth district of the State of Mississippi, Mr. HARRISON. That, if it came in here at all, would come in at about this place.

On page 59, line 7, after the word "Indians," I would put in something like I suggest, and if the committee would do that I would be very glad to withdraw the point of order, but otherwise we are in this fix.

Here you are distributing the dividends of a concern without permitting a part of the stockholders to be entered upon the list as stockholders and to receive their share of the dividends. If you begin it, you will go through with it little by little until there will be nothing left, and then the Mississippi Choctaws could get no relief at all, unless they got it by going back and disturbing the allotments in the Territory, because they would have to sell the lands that have been allotted in order to get the money for them. So it is in the interest of the Indians there as well as of the Mississippi Choctaws that their rights should be considered before this is passed upon. The language that I would put in at the place designated would be this:

"Including such Mississippi Choctaws as have established or may prior to January 1 next establish their right to be registered or listed as Choctaws; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make rules and regulations whereby evidence may be taken within that time to determine what persons in Mississippi are by blood entitled to be enrolled as Choctaws under article 14 of the treaty of 1830 between the United States and the Choctaw Nation."

I thought it due to myself to explain why I made the point of order, because I do not want to be understood as objecting to the distribution of this Indian fund among the Indians, provided that everybody who is entitled to a part of the distribution shall have a proper day in court.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is talking about a different matter entirely, not the per capita. I will read article 14. It is as follows:

"14. When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes."

So that this is carrying out an existing law and an existing treaty and is entirely germane to and proper under this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have now the act to which I referred. This is the act of 1902, and this is the language which is used:

"The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who received a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty"—

The Dancing Rabbit treaty.

In other words, this act was so cunningly worded that only the descendants of these 143 people whose names Ward left on his torn list could make any proof at all that they were Mississippi Choctaws. Only they shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws, entitled to benefits under article 14 of a solemn treaty entered into by the United States Government; and in that treaty it was expressly said that these people who remained in Mississippi should have all the privileges of Choctaw citizenship, except that they were not to share in the annuity.

I say this amendment is general legislation—very general at that—and that it is new legislation, and that so far from carrying out existing law it is in contravention of a solemn treaty.

Now, I want to state, however, that the contention of those of us who feel that the Mississippi Choctaws have not been properly treated is this: The Choctaw Indian, being a ward of the Federal Government, is entitled to its full protection, and it should not permit him to be defrauded. Under the act of 1906 six months were given in which time the Choctaws in Mississippi and in Alabama might make certain proof as to their Indian blood, and if they succeeded in making proof of their Indian blood their names then would go upon these rolls. My recollection is that there are about 20,000 of those who had Indian blood in them that applied to get on that roll. About 2,600—and I am not speaking with absolute accuracy—made proof that they were full-blood Choctaws. Now, $20,000 was appropriated for the purpose of doing all of this work. After they had made this proof the Indians, many of them, were notified to go to Meridian, Miss., and take the train for Oklahoma. Something like 200——

Mr. CAMPBELL. When was that?

Mr. SISSON. That was in 1907, I believe. It was after the act of 1906.

Now, as to the Indians living back on the Yockanockany and the Pearl Rivers and other streams of that kind, where the Indians had been in settlement for a long time and were hard to find and hard to reach—the agents never got back to those Indians who had responded and proven that they were Indians of full blood. So the Secretary of the Interior, according to the report of Mr. Adams, says that there are something like 1,200 of these full-blood Indians who never had any notice of any kind that they were to go to the Choctaw Nation. The result has been that the full-blood Choctaw in the State of Mississippi has absolutely lost his rights, it is contended, because the limitation in reference to getting his name on the roll and getting his proof and going up to the Territory was only six months. It was utterly impossible for the work to be done in that time. The fund, too, was entirely too small. But under the Dancing Rabbit treaty—and Congress has not endeavored, and never will endeavor, to repeal the solemn provisions of that treaty——

Mr. CARTER. Of course I have no objection to the gentleman discussing the merits of this proposition if our side will have the same privilege under the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman is going into a discussion of the matter. I am glad to hear him do it. I hope that will be done, but——

Mr. SISSON. And I want to show by the argument I am now making that it affects the distribution of this fund. I am going to endeavor, if I can do so, to show how it affects that.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But, Mr. Chairman, I make this point, that he is discussing the question that we have placed a limit on and which has been discussed more on that side than it has been on ours. I do not object to that discussion if there is plenty of time to go into it.

Mr. SISSON. I am addressing the Chair on the point of order, and it is my purpose——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Wait until I state my point. It will be all right to discuss that if we are to be permitted to discuss the whole subject. But if you are going to discuss your side of it, and we are only permitted to discuss the point of order, it is not equitable.

Mr. SISSON. My contention is that the Mississippi Choctaws under the law and under the statutes, which I will put in the RECORD, are entitled to a portion of this fund. Under this act they are denied that right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not discuss the matter any further, because I think that my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is more familiar with this matter, may take it up when he gets here in the morning. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will thank the committee for their kind attention and say nothing further at present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. There are two executive documents here, one Document No. 752, entitled "Amounts due claimants for which vessels of the Navy are responsible," from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and another, Document No. 730, relative to "Naval records of the Revolutionary War," also from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; but that committee think they can be more expeditiously handled by the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore, without objection, the Committee on Naval Affairs will be discharged from further consideration of these documents, and the same will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for one week, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we call upon Thy name. Thou art the author of our being, the giver of every good and perfect gift. Thou dost hold within Thine own hands all the resources of our physical life. Thou dost stand guard by Thine own eternal moral law over all our moral and spiritual rights. Thou dost call us into fellowship with Thyself, into the freedom of the children of God. We pray that we may be touched and inspired by the high dignity of the sphere of life into which Thou dost call us, making us the heirs of an everlasting kingdom.

Grant us the blessing of God this day, and Thy guidance in all our ways; and at the close of the day may we have the comforting assurance of a day spent in the service of God and lives spent in the interests of those about us in this great land. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3049) for the relief of Edward R. Wilson, passed assistant paymaster, United States Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3817) authorizing the issuance of a patent to James Gunning for lot 2, section 32, township 29 north, range 39 east, Montana, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 274) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 55) for the relief of Daniel Hampton, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 275) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7138) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 277) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 542) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

COST OF LIVING IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia, and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I report back the joint resolution, and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, as it was an erroneous reference. It proposes to make an appropriation of $6,000, but not out of the contingent fund of the Senate. Being a joint resolution, the appropriation, of course, would be made out of funds available for that purpose in the Treasury. I suggest that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

HEIRS OF SIM HARRISON, DECEASED.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I report back favorably with amendments, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate resolution 276, submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the 18th instant. It proposes to pay six months' salary to the heirs at law of Sim Harrison, deceased. Sim Harrison was an employee of the Senate, acting as a doorkeeper at the time of his death. This is the usual resolution which is passed for such a purpose, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 4, to strike out the word "Harrison" where it occurs the second time and insert the word "Richardson," and, in line 6, before the name "Harrison," to strike out the word "Simmons" and insert "Sim," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to James S. Harrison, of Hattiesburg, and Sallie G. Richardson and Annie S. Harrison, of Belzoni, Miss., children and heirs at law of Sim Harrison, late messenger, Acting Assistant Doorkeeper, of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BRANCH HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE AT LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 494) to establish a hydrographic station at Los Angeles, Cal., and I submit a report (No. 273) thereon. I call the attention of my colleague [Mr. WORKS] to the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, in section 1, line 5, after the words "provisions of," to strike out "an act entitled 'An act to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department,' approved June 21, 1866," and insert "the law applicable to the Hydrographic Office in the Navy Department," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, in the State of California, the same to be conducted under the provisions of the law applicable to the hydrographic office in the Navy Department.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to secure sufficient accommodations in said city of Los Angeles for said hydrographic office, and to provide the same with the necessary furniture, apparatus, supplies, and services allowed existing branch hydrographic offices, at a cost not exceeding $9,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for these purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, Cal."

LANDS AT LAWTON, OKLA.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Lawton, Okla., a tract of land to be used for watershed and water-supply purposes, and I submit a report (No. 272) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill and in connection with the request I wish to give a word or two of explanation.

The bill is of no personal interest to me, but it appears to be meritorious and is, I think, somewhat of an emergency measure. It proposes to sell to the city of Lawton, Okla., a section and a half of public land at a dollar and a quarter per acre, to be used solely as a part of the watershed and water supply for the city.

The bill was unanimously recommended by the House Committee on Public Lands and, I think, passed the House without objection. It is unanimously recommended by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. The author of the bill, Mr. FERRIS, represents to me that there is some need for haste and some emergency in the matter. For that reason I request its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the usual reservation is made in the bill that in case the land is not used for that purpose it shall revert to the Government?

Mr. MYERS. It is. I ask that the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 4553) to authorize the appointment of an ambassador to Argentina; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

My Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4554) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Forrest City, in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 4555) granting a pension to Missouri Ruth Justice; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 4556) for the relief of Myron H. McMullen (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4557) for the relief of Jasper H. Powell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4558) granting a pension to Anna L. Warren (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 4559) granting a pension to James W. Ruffin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4560) to amend an act approved May 30, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in Mellette and Washabaugh Counties in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect"; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STERLING (for Mr. CRAWFORD):

A bill (S. 4561) granting an increase of pension to John S. Lewis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 4562) granting an increase of pension to Clara Talbot (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 4563) granting an increase of pension to Starlin Stanfill (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4564) granting a pension to James Allen Wood (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to place the name of Theodore Barker upon the retired list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RURAL POST ROADS.

Mr. BRADY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11686) to provide that the United States shall, in certain cases, aid the States and the civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. KERN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim of any trust company or other claimant for the refund of special bankers' tax erroneously assessed or illegally collected under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reported in favor of Senate resolution 270, providing for a stenographer to report hearings before the Committee on Mines and Mining. The resolution was reported favorably by the committee with amendments. Inasmuch as hearings are being held, I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time. It is in the usual form of resolutions of this character which have been passed by the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate were, in line 5, after the word "committee," to strike out "and to have the hearings, bills, and such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary printed for the use of the committee," and in line 8, after the word "paid," to insert "at a compensation of not exceeding $1 per folio page," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining or any subcommittee thereof be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and that such stenographer be paid at a compensation of not exceeding $1 per folio page out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The word "folio," in line 9, is a mistake. I move to strike out the word "folio," before "page," and to insert the word "printed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Colorado is a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and, as he is aware, hearings are now being held. I suggest to him that the value of these hearings will be very largely lost unless they are made available for the use of Members of the Senate by having printed the testimony taken before the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the object of the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that the provision for printing the testimony has been stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me inform the Senator that there is no need of such a provision in the resolution, because under the general law a committee of the Senate or House has authority to have a thousand copies printed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the reason why it was stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee can order 1,000 copies printed. So there is no need of the clause in the resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

NATIONAL AID TO GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to have printed as a Senate document an article by Jonathan Bourne, jr., a former Member of the Senate, taken from the North American Review of September, 1913, on the subject of national aid to good roads. I ask that the article be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document an opinion prepared by the Comptroller of the Treasury on the 3d of January, 1914, in relation to what is known as the half-and-half system of paying the expenses of the District government. It is a very carefully prepared opinion on a subject that is now interesting Congress, and I am sure it will be useful.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator by whom the article was written?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. By Mr. Downey, the Comptroller of the Treasury. It is an official opinion.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked the Senator the question is because the other day we ordered printed an article on the same subject, and I really did not know whether this was the same one or not.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is not, I am sure, because it was just brought to me by Mr. Downey within the last 24 hours. I am sure that it has not been printed. It is an official opinion.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the subject matter is before the Senate, and I will not object to printing the opinion as a document.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure it has not been printed, and it will be a very useful document.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, some time ago this matter came up, and, as I understood it at the time, all such questions of printing were to be referred, without exception, to the Committee on Printing. I think that is the best course to pursue. It has been done in some specific instances by merely mentioning the fact. I have no objection to this particular document being printed, but if we are going to have a rule on the subject, it ought to be a uniform rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from California that there is pending in reference to this matter a proposed amendment to the rules, which has not yet been passed upon by the Senate. The Chair had no right to do so, but the Chair has expressed the opinion that all such matters should first go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Virginia to allow the matter to go to the Committee on Printing for consideration.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that; but it has not been the custom. There has not been a day for perhaps the last 30 days when such requests for printing have been made that they were not granted; and it has not been the custom, so far as I have observed, to refer such matters to the Committee on Printing. Still, I have no objection to the reference of this paper to the Committee on Printing; and if the committee shall decide that the paper ought not to be printed, it is of no particular concern to me, though I consider it a very valuable paper.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator from Virginia will understand that I am not making the suggestion because I object to the printing of the paper which he has offered, but the matter was discussed a few mornings ago—I do not know whether or not the Senator from Virginia was present—and it seemed to be the general feeling of Members of the Senate that all such matters ought to be referred to the Committee on Printing, and I am inclined to that opinion myself.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As I stated, I am willing that the paper shall be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration.

POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to read a telegram which I received this morning from a constituent of mine, and to make a statement in regard to the matter therein referred to. The telegram is as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., February 19, 1914.

Senator JOSEPH L. BRISTOW,
Washington, D. C.:

Papers say you have introduced bill to take postal savings deposits out of State banks unless they become members of a Federal reserve bank. States, counties, and cities do not discriminate against national banks, and we do not think our Government should discriminate against State banks. Kindly wire answer. I want to place the matter before our members at once.

W. MACFERRAN,
President State Bankers' Association.

The truth is the present law requires that all postal savings funds shall be deposited in national banks which are members of the reserve association. I introduced a bill to amend that provision, so as to permit postal deposits to be deposited as they were previous to the passage of the law to which I refer. It seems that the press, in transmitting the news as to the bill, have stated that it has exactly the opposite effect from that which the bill secures. The object of the bill is to permit State banks to retain the deposit of the postal savings funds, as they have done heretofore, instead of taking such funds away from them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in this connection, I desire to say that I am in full accord with the object of the bill which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has introduced. I know of a great many cities in which there is not a national bank. Of course, if the law is put into force as passed, the postal funds in those cities will have to be sent to some other city for deposit in a national bank which has joined the present system.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly. Then, it has been the practice of the Post Office Department to deposit these funds with all of the banks in the community in proportion to their capital stock, so that the State banks and trust companies and the national banks all have their share of these funds. The new banking bill, which has been recently passed, I think inadvertently requires these funds to be deposited in the national banks. I am certain that Congress never intended to do any such thing. Therefore I introduced the bill to which I refer to amend the law in that respect.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. JONES conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on the 19th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 832. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 833. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 834. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the order submitted yesterday by Mr. SMITH of Arizona, as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4425) "to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is not here this morning; but I sincerely hope that there will be a vote upon this motion.

I merely wish to say one more word in reference to bills introduced in the Senate and as to the committees to which they are referred. I noticed the other day two measures introduced by a Member of this body, with a special request that they should go to a certain committee. One was a bridge bill that should have been referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the other was a joint resolution that should have gone to the Judiciary Committee, but they were not so referred. I wish to say, Mr. President, that if Senators will examine the bill and the joint resolution, they will immediately see how absurd the request was. I believe that a bill ought always to be referred to the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject matter to which it relates. That is all that is involved in the motion made by the senior Senator from Arizona.

I desire to say to the Senate that I am a member of about as many committees as any other Senator, and that I have never been absent from a meeting of the Committee on Public Lands, with the exception of the time when I was out of the city, last September. I desire to say, further, that I let all my correspondence and business go unattended to until nighttime or a later day rather than miss the committee meetings of which I am a member. I know, of course, that the Members of this body are overwhelmed with work; I know that many of them claim that it is impossible to attend the meetings of the committees; but this is no more true of the Public Lands Committee—and not so much so—than of a great many other committees of this body. I hope, therefore, Mr. President, the Senate will adopt the motion made by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I believe that this bill should have been sent originally to the Committee on Public Lands. I believe it should be sent to that committee now. It seems to me the Committee on Public Lands, if it is to be continued as a committee of the Senate, should not be shorn of its jurisdiction. My belief is that the Committee on Mines and Mining was organized to take charge of matters connected with mines and with mining, the same as is the Bureau of Mines in the general governmental service. In the law creating the Bureau of Mines we set forth exactly what the scope and jurisdiction of that bureau should be. I read from the provision of the law creating it:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of said bureau and its director, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners and the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores and other mineral substances, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, and other inquiries—

And so forth and so on.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the Committee on Mines and Mining has a substantive jurisdiction that need not interfere in any degree with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Lands so far as that jurisdiction has heretofore been exercised. The result of references of this sort, which are contested, in a way would be to take away from any committee the original and proper jurisdiction of that committee. For instance, we might say that jurisdiction over all lands containing minerals and legislation connected with them should belong to the Committee on Mines and Mining, that jurisdiction of lands and legislation connected with them devoted to agricultural purposes should be transferred to the Committee on Agriculture, and thus we might go on depriving the Committee on Public Lands of its rightful jurisdiction piece by piece, until its usefulness would be entirely destroyed.

I hope, Mr. President, that this bill will be sent to the Committee on Public Lands, which has already been considering its subject matter. I do not think anybody will challenge the industry or the good faith of the Committee on Public Lands. I have been on that committee many years, and, so far as my observation and experience have gone, that committee has not failed in its duty, but has had its regular meetings, at which it has had little or no difficulty in securing a quorum; and I am sure that, under the efficient chairmanship of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], there is no reason to fear that this bill, like all other bills dealing with the public lands of the United States, will not receive proper consideration by that committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to complement the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] with an additional suggestion. When bills are referred to committees to which they ought not to go, it not only deprives committees of bills to which they are properly entitled, but simply renders impossible keeping in touch with legislation. For that reason there ought to be more care exercised in the reference of bills. We found yesterday in the Committee on Naval Affairs some claims bills that should have gone to the Committee on Claims; and we found another one this morning, referred a day or two ago to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which should have gone to the Committee on Claims. It will be impossible to keep in touch with legislation if bills are going to be referred without any regard to the propriety of the reference.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire when this bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining?

Mr. SMOOT. On February 9, 1914.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know what is the jurisdiction of these two committees, and I am not especially interested in that question; but there has not been much care in referring bills to committees. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has referred to two bills that should have gone to the Committee on Claims, but which were sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Bills have been introduced here which previously had been considered by the Committee on Claims and had been reported adversely, and have been sent to other committees because the parties interested thought they might secure favorable reports from such committees. That is a common practice; one that occurs at every session of Congress.

I do not like to take part in a controversy between committees over jurisdiction. It seems to me in this instance as if either committee would have a right to the control of the measure; but in a question of mining coal or the sale of public lands it seems to me that there ought to be a clear-cut definition somewhere as to what committee should have jurisdiction, so that we would not have to settle here controversies where the equities might be on either side.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator in that connection that the question of the disposition of the coal lands of this country has always been under the jurisdiction of the Public Lands Committee in both Houses. I also desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that a bill identical with the Senate bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Public Lands Committee of that body and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Hearings have been had before that committee; the Secretary of the Interior has appeared before it; and we have had the same subject matter before the Senate Committee on Public Lands for the last six years.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not know of any rule of the Senate—there may be such a rule, but I do not know anything about it, if there is—which undertakes to define or limit the jurisdiction of any committee. The term "jurisdiction" has been applied in this discussion. It has no meaning at all, it has no significance as so used. The jurisdiction of the various committees simply means the appropriate scope of their activities as indicated by the name which the committee bears; that is all. There have been bills introduced in relation to the disposition of the coal lands of Alaska and the mining of coal on the public lands of Alaska, which have been referred to the Committee on Territories, the Committee on Public Lands, and the Committee on Mines and Mining, respectively; and I undertake to say, Mr. President, that there is no impropriety at all in the reference to any one of those three committees of such measures, nor can it be denied that they fall within the jurisdiction, if that is the proper term to apply, of any one of those three committees. That this so-called jurisdiction overlaps in a multitude of instances is known to everybody.

For instance, after a time we are going to consider what are known as the trust measures. Over in the House some of these measures have gone to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Some others have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. Over here a controversy is likely to arise as to whether the jurisdiction, so to speak, of those bills is in the Senate Committee on the Judiciary or in the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

This is a mere matter of expediency, Mr. President. It is a mere matter of how the business of the Senate will be most expeditiously taken care of and dispatched.

I have heard no suggestion from any source that these measures would not have proper, judicious, careful consideration from the Committee on Public Lands. Why should the members of the Committee on Public Lands have any sort of dread that the Committee on Mines and Mining will not act as carefully, as judiciously, as cautiously, and as promptly as they would? When you talk about jurisdiction, it is a committee on mines and mining to which this bill has been referred, and which has had it under consideration, and which is all but ready to report it to the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. What are the provisions of this bill? I should like to know, so that I can decide how to vote on it.

Mr. WALSH. The bill provides for the issuance by the Secretary of the Interior of licenses or leases to mine coal——

Mr. OVERMAN. To mine coal?

Mr. WALSH. To mine coal upon the public coal lands of Alaska. It does not provide for the disposition of the fee at all. The operator gets something in the nature of a lease, which permits him for a limited period to take coal from a limited area.

I was going to say, if I may proceed, that in addition to this Alaska coal-land bill there has been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining a bill for the disposition of lands containing radium-bearing ores. The committee has had that bill under consideration. It has had extensive hearings. A resolution was adopted this morning authorizing the employment of a stenographer to take the testimony given at those hearings and to publish it for the information of the Senate. The counterpart of that bill in the House was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. They seem to think over there that it is entirely appropriate to do so, and it apparently was considered entirely appropriate here.

If the argument of the Senators who have talked upon this matter has any relevancy at all to this question, you must also call back from us the bill in relation to radium-bearing ores. We have no more jurisdiction, so to speak, over that question than we have over the other. Both of these bills are intimately connected, however, with the business of mining, and that is why they came to these committees in the respective Houses.

Let me proceed further. The other day the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] introduced a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission the business of which would be to revise and codify the entire system of laws for the disposition of mining lands. He asked that the resolution go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and we have had it under consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator ought to say that the resolution specifically provided that it should not apply to coal, phosphate, gas, or oil lands of any kind. It simply referred to metalliferous ores, and laws affecting that character of minerals.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that lands containing coal are mineral lands.

Mr. SMOOT. That is absolutely true; but I simply said that the resolution I had introduced was for the purpose of an investigation with a view of revising and codifying the laws affecting the precious metals, and specifically excluded coal, oil, gas, phosphates, and other minerals of that character.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is absolutely correct about that; and I should like to ask him or anyone else how you are going to maintain the proposition that the Committee on Mines and Mining has jurisdiction over bills affecting the disposition of lands containing metalliferous minerals and has not jurisdiction over bills for the disposition of lands containing coal, oil, gas, and other deposits of like character?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if he knows of a single bill that ever passed the Senate of the United States, coming from the Committee on Mines and Mining, that affected an acre of coal land in the United States—one single bill from the time the first law was passed for the disposition of our coal lands? I say now, without hesitation, that there never was a bill of that kind referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and there never was a bill of that kind reported from that committee. Every bill for the disposition of the coal lands of the United States has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands and reported from that committee.

Mr. WALSH. I do not undertake to controvert the statement made by the Senator from Utah; but I reply, likewise, that I do not know of a single instance in which a bill ever came from any committee except the Committee on Public Lands in relation to the disposition of lands containing any kind of mineral, coal or otherwise. Where and when did the distinction arise?

Furthermore, I am very sure the Senator from Utah will recognize, upon reflection, that it would be an absurdity to provide a general code of laws affecting the disposition of mineral lands and exclude from it laws in relation to the disposition of coal, oil, gas, sodium, phosphates, and other deposits of like character. Indeed, the things go together, and laws in relation to them constitute a complete mining code. I undertake to say that the Senator himself will not ask that a commission be appointed to revise the laws in relation to the disposition of metalliferous mineral lands and not take into consideration and devise a system for these other lands as well.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator misstates my position in that regard, because of the fact, which the Senator knows as well as any Senator in this body, that there are questions in the laws affecting the mining of metalliferous ores which ought to be amended, and which have no relevancy whatever to the mining laws of oil, coal, gas, phosphates, or any minerals of that character.

For instance, I will call the Senator's attention to the question of the apex law. That law does not affect the mining of coal; it does not affect oil; it does not affect phosphates, or any minerals of that class. Then there are other questions, such as the number of locations. I believe there are many other evils connected with the present law in regard to the location of mining claims. I think it ought to be one of the duties of this commission to look into all such subjects; and if I had time to mention them, there are scores of other questions that I think this commission ought to investigate and consider, and, with the help of the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, a practical miner, and a mining attorney, make all necessary recommendations. Whether the Senate will act upon them or not is another thing; but I think the commission ought to make such recommendations. I will say to the Senator that these are some of the questions I had in mind when I introduced the resolution referred to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as a matter of course there are questions affecting the portions of the general body of mineral-land laws applicable to metal-bearing lodes that are not involved in the disposition of the coal lands. So, likewise, there are questions touching the disposition of coal lands that do not affect the others. That, however, is not the question. We should have one general code of laws. The disposition of the coal lands should constitute one chapter of the code, and the disposition of the metal-bearing lands should constitute another chapter of the same code.

Let me answer the Senator from Utah, and I will show him just exactly where the two run together. Under the existing law, oil lands are disposed of under the provisions of the placer-mining law, enacted for the disposition of alluvial deposits of gold and silver. Now, it is proposed to revise and codify the laws in relation to mineral lands exclusive of oil; but, sir, if you undertake to do that, you affect the laws in relation to the disposition of oil lands; and if you are going to declare that the placer-mining law shall no longer be applicable to the appropriation of oil lands—and you must do it—you must then make some appropriate provision for the disposition of oil lands.

Mr. SMOOT. That is absolutely true.

Mr. WALSH. I assert, sir, that no commission can revise these laws and no commission ought to attempt to codify them unless that code is to be a complete code in relation to the disposition of mineral lands of every character.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one other matter. The Senator no doubt will vote for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska. I do not believe the Senator would vote for the leasing of precious-metal lands in Alaska, however. I know there are many people who are perfectly willing to support a measure for the leasing of coal lands and for the leasing of oil lands who would never think of supporting a measure for the leasing of precious-metal lands.

Mr. WALSH. That is entirely aside from the question whether a commission, when they undertake the work, should not cover the entire field and make provision for all these different kinds of mineral lands.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought if the commission went into the investigation of oil, gas, phosphate, and all the associated minerals of that kind, they would have a greater job upon their hands than could be possibly attended to within any reasonable time. What I wanted to do in relation to that resolution was to amend the laws affecting the mining of our precious ores and correct the evils in regard to them which all of us admit should be corrected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this discussion has traversed a field far more extensive than I imagined it would cover.

I simply desire to say that if this bill is recalled from the Committee on Mines and Mining upon the ground that it is not within its jurisdiction and it has no right to have consideration of such a measure, you must likewise recall from us the bill for the revision and codification of the mineral-land laws, because we likewise have no right to have that bill. You must recall from us the bill in relation to the disposition of lands containing radium-bearing ores. You must likewise deny to us in the future the right to deal with bills affecting the disposition of oil and of gas. You must withdraw from us and deny to us the opportunity to consider the bills in relation to the disposition of sodium deposits, potassium deposits, now in course of preparation by the heads of the various committees of the Senate and House, as a result of whose labors the bill that has given rise to this discussion came here. All of these matters are now pressing for consideration. The mining business of the West is paralyzed by reason of the fact that we have not appropriate laws for the disposition of these lands.

Mr. FALL, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. OVERMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield, and to whom?

Mr. WALSH. If the Senators will pardon me one moment, then I will yield.

You do not want to intrust the preparation of some one of these measures to one committee and some more of them to another committee, because they must be in harmony with each other, and they ought to be parts of a complete system. So, if you are going to take this measure away from us, kindly relieve us of the whole thing.

I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that I see this difference between the mineral-land laws and the coal-land laws, following along the old distinction that was made originally, but done away with under our laws, between the "Crown" minerals, or precious minerals, and those which go with the land itself. Of course the Senator is thoroughly familiar with that old rule, which still obtains in practically every country but the United States, that the precious metals do not go with the land—they never did go with the land—and that coal, oil, phosphates, and minerals of that kind, do go with the land.

We have to some extent preserved that old distinction yet, in practice, in this respect: Radium-bearing ores, carnotite, pitchblende, and other ores of that character are located under the mineral laws exactly as gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc, tin, and the other minerals are located under the mineral laws. For the working of those mines, for the disposition of every particle of mineral found in the land, it is not necessary to acquire title to the surface of the ground at all. Of course it all looks forward to the eventual patenting of as much as 1,500 by 600 feet, approximately 20 acres; but prior to the patent the party making the location can extract every dollar of value from the ground and need never secure a patent at all.

Under the coal-land laws, on the other hand, it is necessary at present for the locator to acquire title to the surface of the ground.

Therefore, bills relating to the disposition of coal lands, as I understand, have always been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. To refer them to the Committee on Mines and Mining would be to break a precedent. Whether or not that is a good policy for us to pursue in the future might as well be thrashed out now as at any other time, I presume; and personally I have no objection to it.

This very bill, however, provides for the survey of the public lands of the United States. It provides for the classification of the public lands of the United States. It provides for the reservation of 5,000 acres in one body, and so many thousand acres in another, for governmental purposes after they have been classified, surveyed, and declared to be coal lands. It then provides for the disposition of the surface lands of the United States under lease—not of the coal within the lands, but the surface lands bearing the coal under the surface. It provides that they shall be leased in 40-acre sections to individuals or up to 2,560 acres in a body.

This is a disposition of the public lands, not a mining law providing for the disposition of carnotite, pitchblende, copper, gold, silver, lead, zinc, tin, or other minerals contained below the surface of the public-mining lands of the United States. That is the distinction.

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. President, I think the Senator will agree with me that the Supreme Court of the United States long ago determined that a mining claim is a great deal more than a mere grant of the ores within the vein and is an absolute disposition of every foot of ground within the exterior boundaries of it.

Mr. FALL. So long as possession is held of it under local rules and regulations to be adopted by each mining district or each State, under the one restriction that there shall be $100 worth of work done upon that mining claim during the year, and that it shall be located within an area not more than 1,500 feet in length by 600 feet in width. When such a location is made, not contrary to the local rules and regulations, the Senator is absolutely right; it carries with it the exclusive right to the possession of the surface land so long as it is held under the location and the laws which apply to it. Why? Because, first, of the necessity of measuring to some extent the right of the individual to pursue the discovery along the course of the vein itself. His right stops at the expiration of the 1,500-feet limit. Anyone else can locate a claim, or he can locate another claim, adjoining that and acquire land and a right to the possession of the same.

But here is the distinction I am making, and I have always thought that it was a very great mistake that we ever should have adopted any such theory or law. I refer to one matter in which it works disastrously to us. I call the Senator's attention to one very peculiar feature in the mining law, and of course he has run across it. An alien is prohibited from patenting a mineral claim by the United States law, and yet that alien can locate a mine and extract every dollar of the value from it. He is not compelled to patent it. He may have taken out hundreds of millions of dollars from below the surface, but whenever he undertakes to acquire title to the surface he is estopped; he can not get the patent.

That, it seems to me, illustrates the difference between the mineral location to which the Senator referred and the acquisition of coal lands and lands of that character. Heretofore it undoubtedly was the case, and I think very properly so, that measures of this kind were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is absolutely correct in his interpretation of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Wyoming pardon me for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Lest the remark by the Senator from New Mexico concerning the possibility of aliens acquiring coal lands——

Mr. FALL. Not coal lands; I said mineral lands. The Senator was in conversation with some one, and hence did not catch my observation. I was simply making this explanation of the difference, that an alien can deplete a mineral location of all its wealth to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars, but if he undertakes to get a patent he can not do it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the Senator from New Mexico has correctly analyzed the purport of the bill. The Senator from Montana seems to take some exception to the use of the word "jurisdiction." When we refer to the jurisdiction of a committee, of course we do not mean a statutory jurisdiction conferred upon a committee, such as is conferred upon courts, neither do we assume to say that the function of the committee is always clearly defined; but we all know that without rules there are certain appropriate references that are made to certain committees, so that we may justly say that a particular committee has jurisdiction over that class of legislation.

This is a bill which deals exclusively with the disposal of public lands, just the same as though it were a bill directing how homesteads should be acquired, just as though it were a bill directing how desert claims should be acquired. The bill itself in its title is a bill to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska. That is a disposition of the public lands as much as any other disposition could be. But it provides, in the first place, as the Senator from New Mexico says, for the survey of the public lands in the District of Alaska. It provides for the segregation or reservation of lands in the District of Alaska supposed to contain coal. Then it provides that the President shall reserve from use, location, and sale certain lands for certain public purposes. Then it provides that the unreserved coal lands shall be divided into leasing blocks or tracts. All through the bill it deals with the disposition of the public lands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me a minute, another thought occurs to me. The coal lands are absolutely different in location from the mineral lands of which the Committee on Mines and Mining has jurisdiction in this, that the coal-land laws spread over large tracts of agricultural land. If the Committee on Mines and Mining can go into the question of the disposition of coal lands in Alaska, it can go into the question of the disposition of coal lands in Wyoming and Colorado, and then the question of the segregation of the coal lands of the United States, a thing the Committee on Mines and Mining has never attempted, and which never in this case ought to have been attempted. Over other classes of public lands there is unquestioned jurisdiction in the Public Lands Committee; and it only complicates the matter to turn over these coal lands to the Committee on Mines and Mining. It makes a conflict between the two committees in the bills brought in by them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's suggestion is very pertinent, and I had it in my mind. If the disposition of these coal lands, by lease or otherwise, is placed within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, then the disposition of all coal lands would naturally and logically go to that committee, and if the disposition of coal lands, then the disposition of phosphate lands, and then the disposition of lands containing radium-bearing ores.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And of oil lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And the disposition of oil lands. The consequence would be that in the Western States millions and millions of acres of the public lands of the United States would be taken out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Lands and placed within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, which, I venture the assertion or the belief, anyway, was never formed for the purpose of dealing with the public lands, but was formed for other and different purposes, such as those which were in view when we created the Bureau of Mines. I am not familiar with the bill to which the Senator referred providing for the reservation of lands containing radium-bearing ores; but, if I understand the bill, from what I have read in the public press, I do not believe that it should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, because it does not affect the mineral itself. It affects the withdrawal of vast areas of the public domain supposed to contain this mineral. It occurs to me that even that rule, and I will not stop to discuss it, because I am not familiar with the bill——

Mr. WALSH. Let me advise the Senator——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. That bill does not contemplate the withdrawal of any land at all. It simply provides in effect that persons locating land hereafter containing radium-bearing ores shall be obliged first to tender their product to the Government for purchase.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is a very different measure. I can hardly see why the Senator should think that the Committee on Mines and Mining may be shorn of the consideration of that bill.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps the Senator did not understand that the locator, under the bill, gets absolute title to the lands containing the mineral-bearing ores. So it is more a disposition of the public lands than the bill under consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course that brings it directly in the line of the law, as the Senator from New Mexico says. Mr. President, I may be entirely mistaken; I know I am not prejudiced in relation to this committee in the presentation of their bill, but I can see no logical place for the bill to go in view of the fact that it is the disposition of public lands and a reservation of public lands and a leasing of public lands, except to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I hoped when this matter came up that it might be disposed of in a very few minutes. On yesterday I gave notice that I would again move to-day that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of executive business to consider certain important matters.

Mr. MYERS. Will not the Senator withhold the motion for a very few moments, until I, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, may say a few words? Nearly everyone interested in the matter has spoken except myself.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator will find that the matter can not be disposed of to-day any way.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it can be disposed of to-day.

Mr. MYERS. I should very much like five minutes to get my views in the RECORD at this time.

Mr. SHIVELY. I can not resist the request of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, but I give notice that at the conclusion of his remarks I will make the motion.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands I feel that I should in a very few words define my attitude on this question. I have no personal feeling or prejudice in the matter whatever. I came in while the debate was progressing and I have learned by listening what it was about.

Before the last bill over which this contest has occurred, and which is the subject of the motion to withdraw it from one committee and refer it to another, was introduced there were pending in the Senate two other bills of similar import, I understand, for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska, and which had been referred. One was the bill of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the other was the bill of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], which had been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, as I was informed. Before the last bill under discussion had been introduced, and before it came to my knowledge, the breach, the line of cleavage here mentioned, had already occurred; the split in the reference of bills had already occurred. At the time the matter under discussion was brought to my attention one bill had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands and another to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and I was asked what I thought about the reference of the last bill, if its reference to the Committee on Mines and Mining would be proper and appropriate.

There was then a like bill before the Committee on Mines and Mining and another like bill before the Committee on Public Lands, and it occurred to me that either committee was an appropriate committee and had jurisdiction. It occurred to me that the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Mines and Mining, or the Committee on Territories would be an appropriate committee and would have jurisdiction—concurrent jurisdiction, if you please.

So I said, as far as I was concerned, speaking only for myself as one member of the Committee on Public Lands, and not for the committee, that I had no objection personally to the bill being referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and personally I did not care where it went. I had no choice in the matter at all. I had no pride of committee in the matter, and I am not in the habit of hunting for extra jobs of work either for myself or for my committee. I stated to more than one person, on more than one occasion, that I thought it would be proper and appropriate that the bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining; that that course would be personally agreeable to me; that, speaking as one member of the committee, I had no objection; and the bill was introduced later and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Who asked the Senator that the bill might go to the Committee on Mines and Mining? I did not hear the Senator distinctly.

Mr. MYERS. I was consulted by several persons about it. My opinion was asked about it.

Mr. SMOOT. By Senators or by some one else?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; Senators.

Mr. WALSH. If my colleague will permit me, I think I stated the fact that the bill was drafted as a result of a conference between the Secretary of the Interior and the heads of three committees in the House and Senate, the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Territories, and the Committee on Mines and Mining, and it was the unanimous request of all of them that the bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why, what was the reason assigned?

Mr. MYERS. I suggested that it was personally agreeable to me that it should go to that committee.

I want to discuss the matter a little further. Later, after the bill had been introduced and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, in my absence one day from the Senate Committee on Public Lands, of which I have the honor to be chairman, that committee adopted a resolution, I understand, directing me to make a motion that the bill under discussion be withdrawn from the Committee on Mines and Mining and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Requesting.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; requesting. I was not present at the meeting. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] presided, and he informed me of the action of the committee. Inasmuch as I was not present, and as he was acting chairman of the committee at the time and heard the discussion and knew the exact nature of the resolution, direction, or request, whatever it might be, and was better versed in the premises than I was, I requested him as acting chairman to make the motion. Not that I shrank from it at all; I was willing to obey the request or direction of the committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, but I felt that he was better informed in the premises and was better able to give the reasons that may be offered, and I requested him to make the motion for the committee, and he did so.

Now, so far as I am concerned, since this controversy has arisen, while to me it is personally a matter of indifference what committee considers the bill, and while I have no choice in the matter personally, I am going to obey the direction or suggestion of my committee in its spirit as well as its letter and intent. I feel that I am the servant of that committee. I have always put the expressed will of that committee above my individual feeling or lack of feeling, and I feel now that I am impelled and it is incumbent upon me to obey, in spirit as well as letter, the direction, suggestion, or request of the committee. The committee having spoken and feeling that I am its servant, I feel that the request that I make the motion carries with it the implied request that I vote for and support the motion; and while I am personally indifferent, I shall vote on this motion in accordance with the expressed will of my committee, and in accord with the action that my committee has taken, because I put the expressed will of the whole committee above any feeling or lack of feeling upon my part. Therefore I shall vote in accordance with the action taken by the committee of which I have the honor of being chairman and as it has willed. When my committee asks jurisdiction of a matter I stand with it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIVELY. I move——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Indiana withhold his motion for just a moment?

Mr. SHIVELY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota for the purpose of submitting an amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to offer an amendment to Senate resolution No. 277. It proposes to add the following:

Third. The full text of any proposed settlement or arrangement between the Department of Justice and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. relating to the Boston & Maine Railroad be laid before the Senate before the same is accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. SHIVELY. For a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Chair state that the order we have been discussing goes over until to-morrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This order?

Mr. SMOOT. Not the resolution, but the question of reference the Senate has been discussing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has made no statement about the question which has been under consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the order go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As an order coming over from a preceding day?

Mr. SMOOT. From the preceding day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The order will go over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art supremely wise and strong, whose essence is love, impart unto us out of Thine abundance, that we may discern clearly, conceive readily, act conscientiously and fearlessly in the common daily duties of life; that we may enrich our minds and contribute to the good of mankind, keeping ever before us the life and precepts of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GOEKE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three weeks, on account of a trip to Panama by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Wait until you get into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SISSON. That is what I do not want to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present; and the Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. The roll is to be called on the motion, I take it?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the roll is to be called on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 286, nays 1, answered "present" 5, not voting 140, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is carried, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday a point of order was pending against the paragraph providing for the per capita payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I know the Chair has taken the trouble to fully inform himself as to the law authorizing the carrying of this per capita payment amendment in the Indian appropriation bill, and I think it only necessary for me to direct the attention of the Chair to one or two specific authorizations for this payment and to the contentions that may arise in connection with them.

I desire first, however, to briefly define these funds and analyze their origin. There is now on hand in the Federal Treasury belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes something near $7,000,000. These funds emanate from many sources. They were placed in the Treasury as coal and asphalt royalties and rents, invested funds, treaty funds, funds in lieu of investment, proceeds of forfeited land sales, proceeds of coal and asphalt land sales, proceeds of unallotted land sales, and proceeds of town-site sales and other property.

Provision is made by the two agreements with these Indians of, first, the Atoka agreement of June 28, 1898, and, second, the supplemental agreement of July 1, 1902, and by different acts of Congress of dates running from 1898 to 1913 for a per capita distribution of all these funds, as the Chair is aware.

Let us bear in mind that the Atoka agreement of June 28, 1898, provided for the allotment of all lands owned by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and if the provisions of this treaty had been carried out there should have been not one acre of unallotted lands, except the segregated mineral lands. These segregated mineral lands were reserved by the Atoka agreement for a permanent school fund. The supplemental treaty, however, provided for a diminished allotment of only 320 acres of average allottable land and contained the following direction for the sale of lands not allotted and a per capita distribution of the proceeds:

14. When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

So you will see, Mr. Chairman, that the first authorization for a per capita distribution of the sales of the unallotted lands is that above referred to in section 14 of the supplemental agreement. Sections 56 to 63, inclusive, of the supplemental agreement also provided for the sale of both the surface and mineral of the segregated mineral land. So if this treaty had not been interfered with by a subsequent act every particle of tribal property would have been disposed of and the proceeds of the sales divided per capita.

But the act of April 26, 1906, which is a plain act of Congress and not a treaty with the Indians, withdrew the segregated mineral land from sale and, in accordance with the Atoka agreement, directed the sales of all other property and a per capita distribution of the proceeds thereof in the following language:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

As to that part of this language which provides that all just charges against the funds must be deducted, it is only necessary to point out that such charges relate to the equalization of allotments and charges for administration, in advertisement and sales of this land, and the collection of the proceeds provided for by the supplemental agreement.

Section 17 of the act of April 26, 1906, just above quoted, must certainly have been placed in this law as a saving clause to enable the sale of the unallotted lands and other property and in order that the Secretary of the Interior might understand that he was directed to continue the sales of the unallotted lands and other property, other than the segregated mineral land, and to distribute the proceeds thereof in conformity with section 14 of the supplemental agreement. This section 14 of the supplemental agreement is specific and plain, and it certainly can not be logically contended that the intention of this agreement was amended so as to prevent the distribution of these funds until all unallotted lands and other property are sold. If this was true, then a radical departure was intended from the supplemental agreement. If this radical amendment had been intended to the Atoka agreement, it would only have been necessary to have inserted the word "all" after the word "when," and the good lawyers in both Indian Committees and on the floor of the House and Senate dealing with this complicated matter certainly would not have made such an egregious oversight as omitting the word "all."

Let me insist, further, that since section 13 of this same act of April 26, 1906, had withdrawn from sale the coal and asphalt lands, the construction attempted to be placed on section 17 by the gentleman would certainly have made that law inoperative, null, and void, because, if his contention is agreed to, no division of these funds could be made until all tribal property is disposed of. But that part of the tribal property known as the segregated mineral land would be made impossible of sale by section 13 of the same act. I think it will be agreed that no word or line is ever placed in any law by intelligent legislators save for some specific purpose. It is certainly never the intention of legislators to insert in important acts of this character any language or provision of law which is made by the very terms of the act itself inoperative, null, and void.

We must bear in mind that these are Indian funds being administered in the capacity by guardian to ward. It can not certainly be contended that a guardian could take advantage of such language as this. Only by the most strict and rigid construction might it be contended that section 17 of this act gives the guardian "discretion" as to when such funds should be distributed per capita; and even admitting this narrow construction, it necessarily follows that the guardian—which is the Federal Government—has a right to make such distribution in its discretion, and that is all that is necessary to bring this amendment within the rules of the House. The fact of holding this amendment not in order would be tantamount to preventing the guardian—the Federal Government—from using such free discretion.

The Chair is, I know, familiar with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Choate against Trapp and other numerous decisions wherein it is laid down that in dealing with the affairs of Indians, who are wards of the Government, it is the duty of the Federal Government to give the most liberal construction on behalf of the Indian wards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma with reference to the provision in section 17, to which he has referred, providing that all just charges shall be paid.

Mr. CARTER. I discussed that while the Chair's attention was diverted by some one at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to whether or not the provision that all just charges should be paid applies solely to administration charges or any possible claims that might be sued against the funds.

Mr. CARTER. The Chair is so much better lawyer than I ever hope to be that I hardly think it necessary for me to attempt to define the legal distinction between a claim and a charge. The Chair, I know, is thoroughly familiar with that definition, and I will only address my remarks to the direct inquiry of the Chair.

The charges contemplated in section 17 undoubtedly refer to the matter of administration charges for sales, collections, and so forth, and the charges that might be made upon these funds for equalization of allotments as provided in section 14 of the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. Assuming that the gentleman is correct in his interpretation of the word "charge," does the Chair understand the gentleman to say all these charges have been paid?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; all the allotments have been made and all charges on behalf of the equalization of allotments have been fully satisfied. The charges for the sales of these lands and collection of proceeds are carried right along annually in the Indian appropriation bill. We have an item in this Indian appropriation bill for $40,000 for charges that might accrue in the future, completing them up to the end of the fiscal year of 1915. That has been carried along each year. Furthermore, I will call the Chair's attention to the fact that there is another provision already attached to this bill providing for a distribution of these funds per capita and that provision has been in every bill since we stopped other disbursements from these tribal funds unless authorized by Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, unless the Chair has decided to sustain the point of order, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has stated the only law—I do not know that he said so, but that is a fact—upon this subject, which is section 17 of the act of 1906.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken; there are 14 propositions——

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman stated that that was the last word.

Mr. CARTER. With reference to the sale of unallotted lands; yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the language of this section:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The first suggestion I wish to make to the Chair is that, even if this paragraph is, in fact, in order under the view that the conditions prescribed in this act have been complied with, in that case they must affirmatively show that the conditions have been complied with, which they have not. They have not shown—there is nothing that appears to show that the unallotted lands have been sold; there is nothing appearing to show that the just charges have been paid, and the burden is upon them to show it.

Mr. CARTER. I have a letter from the Department of the Interior saying that the unallotted lands have been sold.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the gentleman a letter saying that all just charges have been paid?

Mr. CARTER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I said, Mr. Chairman, that I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior stating that these unallotted lands have been sold; and the Indian appropriation bill will show year by year that these expenses have been paid right along.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but they might have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. CARTER. I am not speaking about their being or not being subject to a point of order. I am offering that as evidence to show that we appropriated what the department called for—for the payment of the just charges.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be when you come to the final distribution.

Mr. CARTER. This is by no means a final distribution.

Mr. LENROOT. I contend that the principle is the same whether it be a partial distribution or a final distribution.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The rolls, as a matter of fact and as a matter of law, were closed March 4, 1907. That was after all claims had been adjudicated.

Mr. LENROOT. For allotments?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Claims for allotments, and after all claims had been adjudicated. As a matter of law, all the claims were closed March 4, 1907. If that be the case, then this provision is within the purview of the law in providing for the per capita payment.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman pretend that there can be no claims arising against these funds subsequent to 1907? There might be various claims.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; but does the gentleman contend that we could have reached a point where we could pay out anything if the legislative enactment or a judicial procedure fails to shut out claims?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, not at all.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If that were a continuing claim, when would we reach the point when we could pay out any money?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that I am not referring to the claims mentioned by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] at all, as under the state of the law they are shut out, but there may be various other kinds of claims or charges against these funds which we know nothing about, so far as the House is concerned.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. But if there is a claim at all it must be presented lawfully.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And we can only act on the records of the courts and of the Congress, and we are doing that now. Anybody might come up with a claim at any time in the future, and if we are to take the gentleman's theory, it seems to me we will never reach the point when we can hope to make a per capita payment of this money.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman misunderstands my position, that when we make this distribution it must affirmatively appear that there are no just claims pending against these funds. That does not appear to the House or to the committee at the present time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the act he is reading from does not say one word about claims.

Mr. LENROOT. Just charges.

Mr. CARTER. There is a distinction between a claim and a charge, is there not?

Mr. LENROOT. A claim is a charge, and a charge might be more than a claim.

Mr. CARTER. I think there is quite a distinction between a claim and a charge. That distinction has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Chair will bear with me, the gentleman claims that this is only a partial distribution, and therefore this rule I have contended for does not apply, inferring that there will still be moneys in the fund that will take care of any possible claims. Is that the contention?

Mr. CARTER. I simply say this, that the Choctaws and Chickasaws will have left, after this division of funds, about three and one-half million dollars in the Treasury. In addition to that, they will have 440,000 acres of as fine coal lands as there are in the West, which have been variously estimated at from $24,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and in addition to that they have a million and a half acres of timberland, which is probably worth $6,000,000 or $7,000,000; so even if the gentleman's contention were correct there would be no danger, if it came to the point of danger, of subjecting the Federal Government to any claim on account of the distribution of this money; and I take it that if that word "when" would be interpreted to mean "when all," then that is the construction that must necessarily be put upon it, because we must view the act with the intent of the same, and I call the gentleman's attention further to the fact that it does not say "when all the lands," and so forth.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but it says when the unallotted lands and other property shall be sold. I want to direct the chairman's attention to this: The gentleman states that there will be something like a billion dollars' worth of resources remaining after this per capita distribution and, therefore, a sufficient amount to take care of any possible contingency; but, Mr. Chairman, directing your attention to the latter part of this section 17, it is provided that the distribution shall be made to—the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes.

The CHAIRMAN. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. LENROOT. I am reading from section 17 of the act of 1906. It is provided there that the distribution shall be made to the members of the tribe then living and to the heirs of deceased members.

Mr. CARTER. On the finally approved rolls?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I think perhaps we can stop a lot of argument here by my stating to the gentleman that I can read in a dozen different places where the rolls have been closed.

Mr. LENROOT. I admit that.

Mr. CARTER. And where no just claim could come from anybody to be placed on the rolls.

Mr. LENROOT. I admit that, so far as this present argument is concerned. That is not the point. The distribution when made shall be made under the terms of this act to the members of the tribe then living and the heirs of deceased members. That is correct, is it not—as finally approved?

Mr. CARTER. Not the heirs of deceased members, if the gentleman will permit me. There shall not be a share paid out except to the member on the finally approved rolls, and if those members are dead then that share shall be paid to their descendants, but it does not mean that their descendants shall receive a separate share themselves.

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all, and the gentleman and I are agreed perfectly. Mr. Chairman, it will be readily seen that the per capita payment to each of these members depends entirely upon the time of the distribution. In other words, a per capita distribution to-day of a portion of this fund is not necessarily the same thing at all as a per capita distribution when the matter is finally closed up. And why? Because it provides that the payments shall be made to members of the tribe on the finally approved rolls, then living, and to the heirs of deceased members.

The Chair will readily understand, it is a matter of common knowledge, that as time goes on very often men die without heirs, leaving no descendants to whom this per capita payment would go, and in that case if the matter is reserved until the final distribution every one of those members of the tribe then living and the heirs would receive a larger distribution than they would if it were distributed at this time.

Mr. CARTER. Why so?

Mr. LENROOT. Because now you would pay $100 to a member now living. If he shall die without heirs before the final distribution is made, that $100 will be distributed among the members of the tribe if the per capita distribution is not made at this time.

Mr. CARTER. That is a pretty fine drawn distinction, is it not, to enforce against an Indian who is a ward of the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. Not a distinction at all. It is a question of what the Indians are entitled to. They are entitled to a final distribution.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman, as I understand, offers that proposition as a legal objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. To the $100 per capita payment at this time?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Carrying that to its logical conclusion, when would we reach the point when there would be no legal objection?

Mr. LENROOT. There is no legal objection, whenever you have complied with all the conditions of this section read together, as to final distribution.

Mr. CARTER. Now, the gentleman will admit, doubtless, that this $100 is to be paid for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I will read to the gentleman something about what the Supreme Court has said as to how legal technicalities should be applied——

Mr. LENROOT. No; I will not yield for that, because I wish to say to the gentleman that if it were not that I believe it equitable I would not urge these legal propositions, but in order to save the equities I am justified in urging the legal proposition.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I understood the gentleman to dwell upon the point where it uses the word "charge."

Mr. LENROOT. I did.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I will give him a legal definition of the word.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. There is a distinction between the word "charge" and the word "claim."

A claim is a challenge of interest in anything that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own possession—a challenge of the ownership of property that one hath not in his possession, but which is detained from him by wrong. (Saddlesvene v. Arms (N. Y.), 32 How. Prac., 280; Fordyce v. Goodman, 20 Ohio St., 1.)

A charge is the price required or demanded for services rendered. (Fulser v. Southern Railway Co., 45 St., 196.)

Charges mean any matters which were supposed likely to require expenditures in amounts, either definite or indefinite. (Marathon Tp. v. Oregon Tp., 8 Mich., 372.)

Now, those are the only specific definitions as laid down by the courts as to the meaning of the word "charge." There can be but one charge against this claim. It can not exceed $27,000, although there are $14,000,000 worth of assets, according to the statement I hold in my hand.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Chairman, admitting the correctness of the gentleman's statement, if there is one possible charge amounting to $27,000, and the gentleman admits that possibility, then I insist, on that statement alone, this point of order must be sustained, because it does not affirmatively appear that it is not a just charge. Now, Mr. Chairman, merely as persuasive to the Chair, I do not think it improper to refer to the fact that this identical item has been twice ruled out in the Senate upon this identical ground and presumably because of that in 1911 the Congress of the United States passed a joint resolution, joint resolution No. 11, Sixty-second Congress, reading as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, and Seminole Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of the moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, said payment not to exceed $50 per capita and to be made under such regulations as he may prescribe.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, because the thing could not be done that is now attempted to be done, it became necessary for Congress, in order to provide for a per capita payment of these Indians, to pass a joint resolution which of course repealed or modified the act of 1906 so far as it went, and I insist the only way that we can make the per capita payment to these Indians now is to do it by affirmative legislation, a change of existing law, and I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this plainly changes existing law both upon the ground that it does not affirmatively appear that the conditions prescribed in section 17 have been complied with, and secondly, because to make the distribution at this time, when it is admitted that the matters have not been finally closed, would deprive Indians when the final distribution is made or may deprive them of some rights to which they are now entitled. Now, just one word more.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman point the Chair to the resolution to which he refers?

Mr. LENROOT. I will send it to the Chair. Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma, as I understand him, stated that the unallotted lands had been sold. Did I so understand him? I read from the hearings, Mr. Chairman, this——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What page?

Mr. LENROOT. I read from page 589.

Choctaw Nation: Twenty-six thousand seven hundred and thirty persons have been enrolled, of whom 9,434 are restricted Indians, and there have been allotted 6,953,048.07 acres, and there are remaining unsold after completion of allotments 17,504.88 acres, which, added to the timber reserve of 1,278,753 acres in the Choctaw Nation advertised to be sold, commencing January 5 and concluding January 14, 1914, and also adding 432,584 acres of the surface of the segregated coal-land area yet to be sold when regulations are approved, will make a total of 1,728,841.88 acres remaining unsold.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit me, I stated, in effect, just what the gentleman has read from the hearings in my first statement. The act of April 26, 1906, withdrew from sale the segregated mineral land, and the timber reserve was withdrawn about the same time; so those are not the unallotted lands, strictly speaking. The unallotted lands that had been sold up to that time amounted to 17,000 acres, and there have been sold perhaps 2,500,000 acres of unallotted land. The Chairman has in his hand a letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he says that land is now practically all sold. The letter is dated day before yesterday, if I am correctly informed. So the gentleman is confusing the segregated mineral land and the timber reserve with the unallotted land of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman contend that the situation there is such that we can to-day make a final distribution to those Indians of this entire matter?

Mr. CARTER. Why, certainly not.

Mr. LENROOT. If that is admitted, and if we are not prepared to make the final distribution, if I am correct, as I think the Chair must hold that I am, if we can not make the final distribution, we can not make a partial one, because of its effect upon those who shall be entitled to this distribution. And then I think the gentleman must admit, so far as facts are concerned, that this point of order is well taken.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman if this section 17 of the act of 1906 says that "all" allotted lands must be sold?

Mr. LENROOT. It does not say so, except, Mr. Chairman, it seems so clear to me that when a statute says when the unallotted land shall be sold it means exactly what it says, which is all the unallotted land.

Mr. CARTER. Why read the word "all" in?

Mr. LENROOT. I am not reading it in.

Mr. CARTER. You are trying to read something there that is not there.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The unallotted lands have been sold. This is segregated land.

Mr. LENROOT. When the unallotted land and other property belonging to the Choctaws——

Mr. CARTER. I call attention to this fact, that that very act itself provided for the withdrawal of the mineral lands from sale. So if it should have been intended to mean that no distribution should be made until all the lands were sold, it would certainly have said "all," in view of the fact that part of the property was withdrawn from sale by that very act.

Mr. LENROOT. Here is the entire crux of the matter: It was the intention, by the passage of that act, that no distribution should be made unless Congress, by affirmative law, should order a distribution prior to the final winding up of the affairs of these Indians. That is the proper construction. If it is proper to make a $100 per capita payment, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing to interfere with the power of Congress to do so by affirmative legislation, and it is not within our power, under the rules of the House upon this appropriation bill, to change the provisions of law which now plainly exist.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in the beginning that it has always been the policy of this Government, as laid down by the courts, that an Indian treaty must be construed in the light in which the Indians themselves understood it. I have some decisions covering those particular points. I had occasion years ago to prepare quite a brief on that particular point, but I apprehend that every lawyer will recognize that fundamental fact, namely, that the treaty must be construed in the light in which the Indians understand it. Since the making of these treaties for the break-up of their tribal government there have been four several payments made, and this is only in keeping with their understanding of the Curtis Act and the Atoka agreement.

Now, the gentleman who just took his seat made an argument upon a proposition of law or a statute, but I want to say to the House and to the Chair that this whole question is predicated upon the first treaty for the allotment of these lands, namely, the Atoka agreement. The Government had to get this agreement in order to secure a break-up, and in that treaty this language is used:

> It is further agreed that all of the funds invested in lieu of the investment, treaty funds and otherwise, now held by the United States in trust for the Chickasaws and Choctaws, shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal government shall cease, so far as the same may be legally done, and a per capita payment made by some officer of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is meant by the language "one year after tribal government shall cease"? We find in a subsequent statute that the law authorized that it must be in eight years from a given date, and the same is contained also in this treaty, which caused it to expire in 1904. So the question, then, will arise, What is the meaning of the word "government" as understood by this Government and understood by the Indian?

The CHAIRMAN. Right there, if the gentleman will permit, the Chair understands that that provision providing for the dissolution of the tribal government was repealed in a subsequent act before the time elapsed for its going into effect. The Chair thinks it was the act of April, 1906.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But it did not repeal this promise of paying out the money whenever it did cease.

Now, then, what is "government"? Government means a control, and involves moral control, a physical control, or a political control. Let us see what the Standard Dictionary says about it. It says:

> Govern: To exercise authority; administer laws.
> Government: Any territory over which the right of sovereignty is extended; a state or community governed by an authority.

If we were to take a European definition, it would mean any authority exercising the power that goes with authority. But as understood in America, a government is the administration of law, carrying with it somewhere the authority to make that law.

Now, the commissioners who negotiated the treaty must have understood that definition. Let us consider what the Indians understood by it. When the Atoka agreement was made they had a government that was to cease. It consisted of a governor, a national superintendent of schools, an auditor, a treasurer, a secretary of state, local county courts, probate courts, district courts, and a supreme court.

Mr. CARTER. And a legislature.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Let the gentleman wait until I get through. I am tracing now the judicial department.

It had, in addition, a legislative department consisting of a house and a senate. It had a superintendent of schools. It could exercise a power supreme, only controlled by the Federal laws. It exercised a power that no State in this Republic could exercise. There was no question as to the constitutionality of its laws; no question of the validity of its laws. No question of whether or not a law was confiscatory could be raised in the Federal courts. They could make a law providing that criminals might be hanged if they saw fit, or shot when they saw fit, and no Federal court could interfere with that. They occupied the same relation with respect to this Government as the Boers of Africa had to the British Government. There was merely a suzerainty or nationality over them; nothing more.

Now, what is more, they now have no schools that are controlled by themselves, no legislature, no officer, except one—a governor—and that governor can not control or enforce a single law; and the very key to government under American definitions is the administration of law. Why is he preserved? Because those Indians now own that land in fee simple, and it required a governor to transmit the title from the tribes to the lot owners who purchased the lots or to the individual allottees. So his duty is purely ministerial. He can not enforce a single law. There is no power of government. There is no control in the treaty and statutes. Years ago they passed out of existence.

Lay aside your technicalities. What did the Government of the United States understand? What did the Indians understand? There is not a man here who can claim for a moment that those commissioners had in their minds any other meaning than that laid down in Bouvier's Law Dictionary and in the standard dictionaries of the country. The Indians relied upon its continuation and ending of their government as it then existed. No definition, even under a monarchical definition in Europe, to say nothing of our definition, could be invoked to claim that there is a Chickasaw or Choctaw government. Now, let us keep those obligations. Let us pay that money out as the treaty provides.

There is another side to this question—the question of the meaning of the word "claim" referred to. There might be some contention in that, but what is a "claim" or "charge"? The word "charge" is used in the treaty, not "claim." I recite here from a brief two decisions of the courts—the word "claim" means a contest of an interest in the possession of another individual. A "charge" contemplates service to be done, expenses to be had, and the courts have so defined it. If you are going to construe technically against these Indians, for God's sake take your own court's definition, and you will hold this to be in order.

There is a distinction between the word "charge" and the word "claim."

> A claim is a challenge of interest in anything that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own possession—a challenge of the ownership of property that one hath not in his possession, but which is detained from him by wrong. (Saddlesvene v. Arms (N. Y.), 32 How. Prac., 280; Fordyce v. Goodman, 20 Ohio St., 1.)
> A charge is the price required or demanded for services rendered. (Fulser v. Southern Railway Co., 45 St., 196.)
> Charges mean any matters which were supposed likely to require expenditures in amounts, either definite or indefinite. (Marathon Tp. v. Oregon Tp., 8 Mich., 372.)

I place in the RECORD a brief prepared by the Chickasaw attorney, Mr. Bond:

MEMORANDUM OF AUTHORITIES SUSTAINING PROVISION OF APPROPRIATION BILL AUTHORIZING PER CAPITA PAYMENT TO THE CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

[Prepared by Reford Bond, general attorney for the Chickasaws.]

H. R. 12579, a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, contains the following provision:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, same to be made under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such members are Indians whose restrictions have not been removed the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for their benefit."

In order to understand and correctly determine the issues presented by the point of order against said provision it is necessary to refer briefly to material portions of lengthy agreements and statutes, under which the tribal property of said tribes was divided in severalty among their members, disposed of under rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, and under which the proceeds derived from such disposition are to be distributed per capita among the duly enrolled members of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

The Atoka agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians and the United States is embodied in the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495). This agreement contains the following provision:

"It is further agreed that all of the funds invested, in lieu of investment, treaty funds, or otherwise, now held by the United States in trust for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal governments shall cease, so far as the same may legally be done, and be appropriated and paid, by some officer of the United States appointed for the purpose, to the Choctaws and Chickasaws—freedmen excepted—per capita, to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands."

By the same act the tribal governments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations were continued for eight years from March 4, 1898. The provision is as follows.

"It is further agreed, in view of the modification of legislative authority and judicial jurisdiction herein provided, and the necessity of the continuance of the tribal governments so modified, in order to carry out the requirements of this agreement, that the same shall continue for the period of eight years from the 4th day of March, 1898. This stipulation is made in the belief that the tribal governments so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need or desire for further change till the lands now occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a State to the Union."

This act in effect continued the tribal governments of said tribes until March 4, 1906, and provided that their funds be appropriated and paid within one year from said date, or on or before March 4, 1907.

There is only one conclusion to be drawn from an examination of the above and foregoing provisions and that is, Congress contemplated a dissolution of the tribal governments at the advent of statehood and the distribution of tribal funds.

The act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), known as the supplementary agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and the United States, contains the following provisions:

"No person, whose name does not appear upon the rolls prepared as herein specified, shall be entitled to in any manner participate in the distribution of the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and those whose names appear thereon shall participate in the manner set forth in this agreement."

The object and purpose of this provision was to definitely designate the persons who were to participate in the distribution of the property of the tribes.

Section 14 of this agreement makes provision for the disposition of the surplus tribal property for equalizing allotments, and provides that the balance of the proceeds shall be distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes. The exact language of same is as follows:

"When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of land not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction, under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes."

The latest legislation affecting the issues involved is embodied in the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137), entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes." Section 2 of this act fixed a time for the completion of the citizenship rolls, which provision is as follows:

"Provided, That the rolls of the tribes affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after said date."

This act further provided for the disposition of all of the tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, except the coal and asphalt segregation, which was reserved from sale until further action by Congress, largely on account of conditions existing at that time, which seemed to make the sale of this segregation unwise for business reasons.

Section 16 provided—

"That when allotments as provided for by this and other acts of Congress have been made to all members and freedmen of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes the residue of lands in each of said nations not reserved or otherwise disposed of shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, and the proceeds of such sales deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the respective tribes."

This act further provided for a per capita distribution of funds to living members and to the heirs of deceased members whose names appear upon the approved rolls of the tribes.

Section 17 provided—

"That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of such tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear upon the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

It will be contended under the terms of the first paragraph of section 17 that a per capita payment is not permissible until all the unallotted lands and all other property belonging to the tribes have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales and other sources have been paid into the United States Treasury. Such a contention necessarily calls for an unusually strict and technical construction. In the case of Choate et al. v. Trapp, Justice Lamar says:

"But in the Government's dealings with the Indians the rule is exactly the contrary. The construction, instead of being strict, is liberal; doubtful expressions, instead of being resolved in favor of the United States, are to be resolved in favor of a weak and defenseless people, who are wards of the Nation, and dependent wholly upon its protection and good faith. This rule of construction has been recognized, without exception, for more than a hundred years."

The act does not say when all the unallotted lands have been sold. It does not say when all other property has been disposed of. Then why read the word "all" into the act? Why not give it a liberal construction and why not take into consideration the history of the provision, together with the Indians' understanding of the meaning, the facts and circumstances surrounding its enactment, and bring to bear all material evidences in construing same?

It will be noted that every agreement between the tribes and the United States provided for a distribution of tribal funds per capita; that practically all legislation enacted affecting the funds of said tribes provided for a per capita payment thereof. Moreover, the Government has so construed these by making three several per capita payments since their adoption. It was contemplated that they be paid their moneys as early as practicable, that they might build homes and improve their allotments. It was thought that the sale of their coal and asphalt lands would occasion considerable delay. It was understood and believed by them that their moneys would be paid per capita from time to time and that their agreements with the United States and the acts of Congress so provided. Under such belief they have lived up to and performed on their part each and every agreement made. They have allotted their lands in severalty; they have permitted the abolishment of their tribal governments until they exist only in name. The institutions they held passionately to from custom and patriotism are forever gone. Now, is it equitable and just to ask for a strict technical construction, for a construction that necessarily reads into the act words that are not found therein, simply to prevent a people from obtaining a very small portion of their own property, which in right should have been distributed per capita long ago?

It has been asserted that under the terms of the second condition of said section the funds of said tribes can not be paid per capita until all claims against them have been settled. This perversion is monstrous and absurd. Let us look to the language of the statute in question. It reads: "And when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita." The word "claim" is not found in the statute, but, on the contrary, the word "charges" is used. There is a marked legal distinction between the words "claim" and "charges."

"A claim is a challenge of interest in anything that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own possession. A challenge of the ownership of property that one hath not in his possession, but which is detained from him by wrong." (Saddlesvene v. Arms (N. Y.), 32 How. Prac., 280; Fordyce v. Goodman, 20 Ohio St., 1.)

"A charge is the price required or demanded for services rendered." (Fulmer v. Southern Railway Co., 45 St., 196.)

"Charges mean any matters which were supposed likely to require expenditures in amounts either definite or indefinite." (Marathon Tp. v. Oregon Tp., 8 Mich., 372.)

The charges mentioned in the statute in question refer to charges of administration, charges of the Government for administering the estates of the tribes. When you look to the language and the purpose and intent of the statute you will agree that it is not susceptible of any other construction.

The charges against the tribes are carried and cared for annually in the Indian appropriation bill, and therefore the question of charges is eliminated from the issues involved.

The provision of the Indian appropriation bill in question has the approval, support, and indorsement of the Department of the Interior. Its letter of approval to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs contained the following language:

"It appears therefrom that the total deposits and amounts on hand January 17, 1914, aggregate $7,425,213.20, and to make a per capita payment of $200 to 27,022 enrolled members entitled thereto will take $5,404,400, leaving a balance of $2,020,813.20 still on hand, which, added to $23,673,845 to become due, will make a total amount of $25,694,658.20 to become due for future payments."

It appears from the letter of the Department of the Interior that the tribes have ample funds for several $100 per capita payments, and the department in approving the provision for such payment has virtually acknowledged that it is for the purpose of carrying out the terms of existing treaties between the Government of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and also for the purpose of carrying into effect laws of the United States pertaining to the estate of said tribes, and has virtually placed the construction on said statute contended for by the tribes.

After a careful analysis of the material portions of the statutes and agreements above set forth, after weighing certain well-known facts, and after looking to the spirit as well as the letter of the law, you are irresistibly drawn to the conclusion that the provision of the Indian appropriation bill in question is merely a partial fulfillment of the treaty obligations existing between the United States Government and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and a partial carrying into effect of the laws of the United States relating to the estates of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

I will refer again to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that on the 18th day of June this question was up in the Senate, and on a roll call the Senate voted, by a vote of 36 to 16, that this very same provision was in order, and yet they were a party to all this legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I do not. I do not want to break the continuity of my thought. I will yield directly to the gentleman. I will yield to him before I get through.

These several provisions of law run through a series of treaties and of statutes. They do not always harmonize. But the Indians have always understood that they were to have this money annually and a final settlement after the dissolution of tribal government. That was their understanding. They have had four payments, and, so far as the equity is concerned, this hour, above all times, demands that this payment should be made.

Perchance there exists here and there a charge, and we refuse to make a just claim when the department has shown them by this list, itemizing the permanent annuities made under treaties negotiated years ago, itemizing the several sales of land, and showing which have been paid for, how much of it is in deferred payments under the law and under the treaties. Those two tribes have now a little upward of $7,000,000 in cash. They have deferred payments up to this month of $7,100,000 that will be due in the next three years, so that there will be $14,000,000 in all. A per capita payment of $100 would take less than $3,000,000. Why make such a technical claim in the interest of a people who need their money? You have them tied down with restrictions.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman give to the Chair the figures that he has just stated of the amount of money on hand?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Does the Chair mean the ones in reference to the word "charge"?

The CHAIRMAN. The figures of the amount of money on hand.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes, sir. I sent them, and I desire to put them here in the RECORD, showing the amount in detail due each and all these tribes:

NOTE.—This does not include the coal and asphalt lands.

The Chair will find the funds of all the tribes and the membership of all the tribes stated there.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman stated that the Senate held this amendment to be in order?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. When the question was submitted in the Senate the amendment was declared to be germane only. I have the RECORD in my hand.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is the question before the House.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is not the question. Then I want to ask the gentleman another question, whether it is not true that in that very proceeding, when the Chair's attention was called to this statute of 1906, the Chair reversed all former rulings on that subject?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes; I will state that. I was in the Senate at the time.

When that question was submitted to the Senate Vice President Marshall, the presiding officer, submitted it to the Senate whether it was germane. The Senate, by a vote of 36 to 15, voted that it was germane and that it was in order——

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If it is germane, it is in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Subsequently Mr. WILLIAMS——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will tell the gentleman what occurred. It was on the 18th of June. Senator WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, offered a proviso, an amendment to the provision for a per capita payment offered by Senator OWEN. They began discussing it, and they discussed treaties and laws for three or four pages of the RECORD, and finally the Chair ruled everything out of order, even that question that the Senate had before voted was in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Now will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not mean that the question whether a proposition is germane involves the question whether it is in order as new legislation?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is the only question involved in this point of order.

Mr. LENROOT. The Chair had just ruled that it was in order under the treaty, and then submitted to the Senate the question whether it was germane; and then having his attention called to the law of 1906, he held it was not in order.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The only question involved here is whether it is germane. If it is germane, it is in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I admit this matter is germane if it is in order, but it is not in order.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It is in order if it is germane, and if it is germane it is in order. The only question is whether it complies with the laws and treaties. The very title of the act is "An act to carry into effect treaty stipulations and laws," and this is to determine whether or not this appropriation to pay $100 per capita is in obedience to treaties and laws. If it is in obedience to treaties and laws, it is germane to the bill and the title and in order. If it is not, then it is new legislation. If it is new legislation, it is not germane, and therefore would be out of order. I took it for granted that the House understood—and I believe the House and the Chair understand—that the question involved is whether we are trying to legislate or whether we are trying to carry out a treaty provision and a statutory provision and make an appropriation in obedience to it. If it is, then this bill, to "carry out treaty stipulations and to make appropriations for the Indian Department" in obedience to the law, makes this provision in order. So far as the equities are concerned, as referred to by the gentleman, I am ready for that discussion anywhere. I am ready for the discussion both as to the technicality of the law and as to the equity of the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. We are willing to discuss any of those questions. When we opened the rolls before we added 1,634. Many of them have returned, going back to Mississippi. We are getting tired of the generosity that holds us up, that delays land titles, that delays settlement. We want the Government at some time to keep its promises and to make this settlement in obedience to the treaty obligations of this Government. The time of "one year after the tribal government ceases" has passed long ago, and we are tired of the delay.

That is all we say, Mr. Chairman, that this is in obedience to treaty, in obedience to law even as the commissioners on the part of the Government understood it, and that every law and every treaty made with the Indians was with the understanding that this should be paid out from time to time, as fast as the money accumulated in the Treasury.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Will not that cut out the Mississippi Choctaws?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I have shown that there are $14,000,000 worth of assets.

Mr. QUIN. But you are dissipating that, giving that away, and these people have not got their rights.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Some of them went out there, and then went back to Mississippi. Are we to be held up until they are ready to go to the Choctaw Nation?

Mr. QUIN. There are thousands of them whose claims have never been paid.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is not relevant here. We are on the point of order. I can not go into that. This Government gave over 4,000 of those men scrip when they lost out, so that they could locate on the public domain. Over 3,000 of those scripees gave their scrip to traders to move them West, and the traders located the land for themselves.

Mr. QUIN. You mean land sharks?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Sharks, or whatever you want to call them. Some of them returned, and when they returned the Government saw what the land sharks were after and passed a law to pay the scripees for the scrip, but those that had gone west and returned got nothing, and those are the ones you are talking about, and those are the fellows who never got anything.

Mr. QUIN. There are thousands of them that have never known——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Oh, the gentleman does not claim that there are more than about 2,000. There are thousands of Indians all over this country who are not citizens of any nation and who have no rights with any nation, just as there are thousands of American-born men who have become citizens of foreign countries and lost their interest in this country.

Mr. QUIN. They ought to have the right to that money.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Now, my friend, if you will go and read the law and find out what they have done, you will come to the same conclusion that I have. You will agree to the conclusion of the Attorney General and the Supreme Court, and you will hold to the same contention that we are holding to.

Mr. QUIN. I do not think I will ever hold that they should lose their rights.

Mr. SISSON. In answer to what the gentleman from Oklahoma has had to say in reference to the treaty, it is understood that the statute is always paramount over the treaty. Statutes may repeal treaties. Now, the Vice President said that if he had known that the statute of 1906–7 had been passed, he would have held that provision out of order. Everybody admits that the provision is germane if it is in order. The rules of the House contain two distinct provisions, one in reference to germaneness and the other whether or not an amendment changes existing law. At the time the question was submitted in the Senate the only question presented to him was in reference to the treaties which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] has referred to. But subsequent to those treaties, as the Chair himself stated a moment ago, in 1906 they passed a general act covering this entire situation, and the concluding clause of that act is that it repeals all other acts of every kind and character in conflict with this act. So the Vice President was compelled to hold that it was a change of existing law. Now, let us see whether it changes existing law or not.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It does not claim, though, to repeal the treaty.

Mr. SISSON. Indeed it does. If a law and a treaty come into conflict, then the statute prevails, and that is universal, and there is not a lawyer in this House who will contend otherwise.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If that is true, the statute that closed the rolls of the Mississippi Choctaws puts you out of business.

Mr. SISSON. I am not discussing that question now; I am talking about the point of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma insisted yesterday on my not talking about the merits, but to confine myself to the point of order. A moment ago he was discussing not the point of order but the merits.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I was drawn into that discussion by questions from other gentlemen.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman ought to be able to resist temptation to do wrong. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want the Chair to carefully read section 17:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively—

Now, Mr. Chairman, that does not mean the sale of lands alone, but, in order that it may complete the entire transaction, it says, "and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever shall be paid into the Treasury." Then it goes on:

And when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Chair will notice that language particularly—"any remaining funds shall be distributed." It does not say a portion of the fund; it does not say $100 per capita; it does not say all funds; but it says the remaining funds shall be allotted. This is as clear as language can make it—all of the funds from every source shall go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma rose.

Mr. SISSON. I can not yield now; I will later.

Now, the clause in this bill repeals that section, because in so many words it tells how it shall be done. Here the distribution should be made in accordance with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, let us look at the language of the bill which proposes to change the law of 1906, which is the last announcement on the subject. If the Chair is familiar with the reading of it, he will at once notice the difference. This is the provision in the bill:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, same to be made under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such members are Indians whose restrictions have not been removed the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for their benefit.

Under existing law our contention is that he was to distribute the remaining money, because it says the moneys from the sale of unallotted lands and moneys from all other sources, showing the clear intention of the statute was to gather into the Treasury every dollar from the sale of all the lands, and other funds, so that when the distribution was made it could be a final distribution. If it was not to be a final distribution, why should the statute provide that all just charges should be settled before the money is paid? All just charges shall be paid. If portions could be paid to the Indians, it was unnecessary to put in the language and say that the remainder shall be paid. The remainder means what is left after paying all the charges existing against the fund. This provision in this bill changes that.

Now, the act of 1906 provides that this money shall be paid into the Treasury. This act does something that the present law does not do, it reaches out and gets the money in the banks and from all other sources. Therefore, before this money can be paid out under existing law, it is necessary that all charges against it be paid, else if the money is paid and the Federal Government having paid the money out without paying all the charges, it would itself become liable for the charge against the fund unless it collects it out of the fund. Therefore it was the intention of the act of 1906 to wipe this out at one time and have a final settlement with each and every Indian having a charge or claim against the Government.

Under the proposed provision of the bill it does not do that in any sense of the word. It leaves the matter unsettled; changes the statute, which provides that the remainder of the fund—all that is left of the proceeds of all of the sales of the land and from other sources after paying all the charges—then whatever is left shall be distributed among the Indians. If this does not change the present existing substantive law of the land, it is impossible to conceive of a statute that will. It specifies how the money shall be paid, to whom it shall be paid, and under the existing law it provides that it shall be paid out under rules and regulations by the Secretary of the Interior. I do not see why this act should not now, if all conditions have been complied with under the law as it exists, allow this money to be paid out.

It is because they are unable to show or convince the Secretary of the Interior, or to convince Congress, that all the charges against the fund have been settled.

Now, a few words in relation to the word "charge." Gentlemen differentiate between the word "claim" and the word "charge," but they do not take into consideration the definition of the word "charge," that it is "a burden placed upon something," "an outstanding burden," and in that sense the word "charge" and the word "claim" are synonymous. In construing a statute in reference to language you must construe it liberally, for the reason that in order to discharge the obligation resting on the fund you must be sure that you have satisfied all people, all parties having claims against it, because the Government would not undertake to pay these funds out until it was satisfied under existing law that all these charges had been paid.

It is the contention of us who advocate the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws that under the first treaty, under the first acts of any kind that enabled the Mississippi Choctaws to be carried to the Indian Territory, under the "Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty," that certain Indians were permitted to remain in Mississippi, and the Government was to allot to them lands, which the Government never did, and the Government never having allotted the lands, the Mississippi Choctaws now have claims which they have propounded to Congress and asked Congress to satisfy. They contend that the statute of 1907 was a statute which in its enforcement denied them the rights, by virtue of the negligence, carelessness, and wickedness of those who were to notify them of their rights to go to Indian Territory.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman awhile ago used the general term "burden," but he does not deny the specific difference between "charge" and "claim," because he himself used it rightly when he said they had a claim, but the laws says "charge" and not "claim."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in the construction of the word "charge" in the statute the definition is broad enough to include any claim, to include any demand, that may be made against this fund, and up until that demand, charge, or whatever you may call it, is satisfied, it is the duty of Congress to see to it that this fund is not dissipated. The gentleman speaks of technicalities. I am not endeavoring to make this as highly technical as he has, in the hair-splitting definitions and terms, because in the use of words in statutes you are to take them in their usual meaning. It was evidently the purpose and the intention of this statute to have all of the charges, all of the claims, all of the burdens against this fund satisfied before it was paid out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask whether it is possible to in any way fix a limit on this debate?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to discuss this thing a minute longer if the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no disposition to cut the gentleman off.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss this matter briefly, after the gentleman from Mississippi is through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to hear anything the gentleman has to say.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the evident intention of Congress was that all of the charges against this fund, in order that it might protect the Federal Treasury, should be paid before this money was paid out. This proposed measure changes that, and is permitting $100 per capita to be paid out, when the evident intention of Congress was that it should be paid out after all of these charges had been liquidated, and after all settlement had been made, and it is an admission, when they are only asking for $100 to be distributed, that the fund is not in condition where under the law they could relieve it of all of these burdens. But, in addition to that fact, in order that the records may be made, it is provided that this money shall be paid into the Federal Treasury. Evidently that has not been done, because this bill reaches out and gets money in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior or any other agents of the Government, and yet the statute provides that the money shall be paid into the Treasury.

It is necessary before this fund is dissipated that every man having a charge, having a claim, should have his day in court, and unless that day in court is had and Congress pays this money without all of these claims and charges being settled against this fund, that ought to be paid legally, justly, and honestly out of it, then, indeed, Congress assumes the responsibility.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman state just what claim or charge is now pending against these tribes which has not already been adjudicated?

Mr. SISSON. It is not up to me; it is up to the gentleman to show, under the statute of 1906, that they have all been liquidated.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. We contend the statute settles that question; but I understand the gentleman now to state that there are yet charges and claims against these tribes.

Mr. SISSON. I am willing now to state that it is our contention that something like 1,500 or 1,600 Mississippi Choctaws were entitled in equity, by treaty rights and by the law of 1907, to have their rights protected. It is admitted they had rights there, but some gentlemen, some attorneys representing some clients and not the Mississippi Choctaws, prepared a bill, which was introduced, which gave to the Mississippi Choctaws a most outrageously unfair opportunity to go to Oklahoma, and appropriated $20,000 for that purpose, and out of the nearly 2,600 full-blooded Choctaw Indians only about 400 of them ever got the opportunity to go to Oklahoma under that act.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Sixteen hundred and thirty-four went.

Mr. SISSON. If that is true, then the report of Mr. Adams and the Secretary of the Interior is not correct.

Mr. CARTER. They are on the rolls.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Sixteen hundred and thirty-four of them.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman contends that there was a law passed.

Mr. CARTER. In 1907.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And that that law closed the rolls. It does not make any difference, so far as this point of order is concerned, whether Congress is right or wrong with respect to these claims. The adjudication of the claims, first, and the law passed as a result of that adjudication absolutely closes the matter.

Mr. SISSON. The Federal Government is the guardian of these Indians, and the Indians are the wards of the Government. The guardian can not take advantage of his own wrong in any court, nor can the Federal Government do it, and if the Federal Government has done these people a wrong, or if the Federal Government finds that an injustice has been done, it should right that wrong here in Congress. It is not right that the Choctaws in Oklahoma should inherit and take possession of that which is legally, equitably, and rightfully the property of the Choctaws in Mississippi, because the wards, being ignorant, and for that reason ignorant of the condition, and relying especially upon the Government to do its full duty by them, and having been left, as they testify now and as the people there know, without knowledge of their rights, it is the duty of the Government to right that wrong. Uncle Sam did not send the man whom the Indians expected, and that is the way he has treated these unfortunate people—his wards. Our contention is that this being a legislative body, a body that can right a wrong by legislation, it is the duty of the Government to right that wrong.

You are depriving them of their rights and property without due process of law. You are depriving them by an act of Congress, without due process of law, of their birthright, which they had by virtue of giving up their lands. You are depriving them of their right without due process of law, which every man is entitled to under the Constitution of the United States. They were not notified. Why, there is not a court in the world that would permit a judgment to stand taking from a man his property unless he had been duly served with a summons and had notice of the proceedings; and in God's name will the American Congress deprive the Mississippi Choctaw of his right without having that notice, especially in view of the fact that the Choctaw Indian in Mississippi is the ward of the Government and Uncle Sam is his guardian? I ask the gentleman if he stands for that sort of legislation? If he does, then he will have to answer in a court higher than the one in the middle of this Capitol, greater than this House, greater than the American people themselves, a jurisdiction that is supreme over all.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Do I understand the gentleman's argument to be that he says the law was not supreme as it is now against the claims of these parties?

Mr. SISSON. If the statute enacted is one that deprives a man of his right without due process of law—and a suit is pending in the courts now for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it is true—a suit will be filed here in the District, and the attorneys are going to show that these people have been deprived of their right without due process of law.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman claim that these claims which he mentions are effective against the present law to such an extent as to operate——

Mr. SISSON. If it is adjudicated in the courts that this statute of 1907 deprives the Indian down in Mississippi of his rights without due process of law, then indeed his claim is a just claim and is a charge against this fund, and if he has 640 acres of land and other property in Oklahoma he is entitled to 640 acres.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Let me see if I state the gentleman right. Does the gentleman make the proclamation against the present law that the law is supreme or that the claims of these parties are supreme?

Mr. SISSON. The trouble is when they make that contention they lose sight of the fact that the Choctaws, ignorant, uneducated, had no attorneys at that time to represent them, whereas the shrewd Oklahoma attorneys, whose business it is and whose fees have been paid or will be paid, would have been paid for keeping the names of other Indians off the Choctaw rolls.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Is the law supreme or are these claims supreme?

Mr. SISSON. Why, if these men have been done an injustice, and if our contention is true that they have been deprived of their rights and property without due process of law, then indeed the claims are supreme.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And that is the gentleman's position in respect to this point of order?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I am not contending that the Chair will pass upon that question in ruling on the point of order. I am simply stating that that would be one of the charges that it might be urged has not been satisfied, and that we are contending ought to be satisfied, for final adjudication and final settlement before this fund can be paid. My contention is that this provision of this bill changes existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill irrespective of the rights of anybody outside of these people; that it changes the method and manner of paying this fund.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Then the gentleman does not make any claim that these claims mentioned of the Mississippi Choctaws are supreme to the present law?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman can not get me committed on that proposition. I am saying that that ought to be taken into consideration, but I am not contending at any time that the Chair will hinge his decision on it at all.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. CARTER. I take it the gentleman means by due process of law a case must go through the court for trial and up to the Supreme Court, and that that would be due process of law?

Mr. SISSON. Suppose a statute passed deprived you of your home, of your property, and you had no notice—wait a minute——

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman is not answering the question at all.

Mr. SISSON. I am going to answer the gentleman's question now.

Mr. CARTER. All right.

Mr. SISSON. If a statute should pass this House and pass the Senate and be signed by the President, taking away from him property, without having it brought into court, and giving him a right to be heard——

Mr. CARTER. I am trying to get down to some concrete thing.

Mr. SISSON. It is not due process of law unless you had knowledge of it and had a hearing and been duly compensated.

Mr. CARTER. That would not be due process of law if you legislate a man's right away from him.

Mr. SISSON. Indeed it is, because the Constitution expressly provides you can not take a man's right away from him by acts of legislation.

Mr. CARTER. I can not understand the logic of the gentleman's argument when he says that you can legislate a man's right away from him without due process of law. That is an argument absolutely incomprehensible to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentlemen have wandered far afield from the point of order, and trust that in the interest of time they will confine themselves strictly to the question before the Chair.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman spoke of the due process of law. I want to say to him that every due process of law has been given to the Mississippi Choctaws, and if the gentleman had examined the record he would not have made such a statement on the floor of this House.

Mr. SISSON. My dear friend, I have examined the record.

Mr. CARTER. Have you looked into the Jack Amos case?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What was decided in that case?

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the gentleman, irrespective of what they did in the Jack Amos case or irrespective of what any court decided, I do know that these Mississippi Choctaws have not had that notice and have not had the opportunity, to which they were entitled, to go to the Indian Territory. And if you will read the record of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, it shows that the time was entirely too short, and the Indians could not avail themselves of the rights the Congress endeavored to give them.

Mr. CARTER. I prefer to read the record of the court rather than the record of the Secretary or the President or of anybody else.

Mr. SISSON. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. CARTER. I thought you were through. I will make a speech when you are through.

Mr. SISSON. I put in the RECORD all the facts as stated by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, as shown in the report, affecting the Mississippi Choctaws, and giving the history connected with this matter. I put it in the RECORD, and it is here, that which is favorable and that which is unfavorable. I copied it, just as it was, from the report. These matters other than this report I did not put in the RECORD; but that which I have taken from the report is there, and it gives a history of the whole matter, and it shows what I say to be the fact, that the time was entirely too short and under the limitations the Indians were not given an opportunity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the Chairman and the committee for their indulgence.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this is quite an interesting legal proposition, and I will not undertake to take issue with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] with respect to his statement that a Federal statute can modify, or, for that matter, abrogate an existing Indian treaty. I do not know that it is very much to our credit that this is true, but I realize that such is the fact. With respect to Indian treaties we claim the power practically to do with them as we please. However solemnly they may have been entered into, or however clear the understanding of the Indians may have been, with respect to its terms, and intent, we hold an ultimate authority that is occasionally exercised, to completely abrogate these agreements. And while that authority exists, and while under certain conditions, not very much to our credit, it has been exercised, yet the general trend of interpretation with respect to Indian treaties, and legislation relating to Indian treaties, is to interpret them with respect to the understanding of the Indians, and so as to promote their substantial interests and welfare.

This being true, and this principle of construction being admitted, I submit that, having in mind both the antecedent treaty bearing on this situation, and this principle of construction, the Chair will not be disposed to strain the interpretation of an act subsequent to the treaty in order to nullify a clear understanding of the natives as to the terms and effect of this treaty.

I admit the authority on the part of the Government to do this. I admit that if this statute in terms destroys the solemn agreement between the Indians and the United States, the statute is the paramount authority, and must be followed. I admit that if the intent to abrogate clearly appears on the face of this statute, then the Chair is bound to rule in conformity with this clear plain intent.

But I wish to state in this connection one or two propositions, having in mind this fundamental canon of interpretation with respect to treaties and Indian statutes, which, I think, will make it abundantly clear that the statute under consideration, even if it is strictly construed, does not deprive the Congress of the authority to distribute from time to time the proceeds of property sold under its terms, and pursuant to its directions.

I am somewhat familiar with the facts relating to this whole subject matter, and I know the difficulty that exists with respect to the final disposition of a portion of this entire property. The United States has been at a loss to determine the proper policy with respect to the coal lands, whether they should be sold as a whole, or in sections, or be leased for the benefit of the tribes. A few years ago I went out to the State of Oklahoma, as a member of a committee, and when we looked over these coal lands, and discussed the problem of their disposition, I realized that it was one that presented substantial difficulties. We were all agreed that the interests of the Indians, and they are exclusively interested, required some immediate disposition, but could reach no conclusion as to the form this disposition should take.

The Chair will observe that another section of this statute, heretofore cited, provides that these coal lands shall be segregated, and not offered for sale. This section was an indication on the part of the Government, an acknowledgment you might say on the part of the Government, that it was not prepared to determine the disposition of the coal lands. In other words, it was a reservation of the final determination of this disposition for some future time, when, as the result of larger experience, and new facts, the Government would be better able to reach a wise conclusion, and determine whether this coal land should be sold as an entire tract, or in subdivisions, or should be held in perpetuum by the United States under an arrangement to lease the same and pay over the proceeds of these leases to the tribes.

If the view presented by the gentleman from Mississippi is correct, namely, that all of this property must be sold before any disposition can be made of the proceeds, then the withdrawal of the coal lands from sale will postpone indefinitely the distribution of the proceeds of the remaining lands, although the disposition of these lands is free of difficulty. In fact all of these lands have been sold, and the proceeds are now in hand, and available for division among the parties in interest.

Now, having in mind that all of the Indian statutes are intended for the benefit of the Indian tribes, can any sufficient reason in law be advanced, why a distribution pro tanto should not be made of the money in hand derived from sales made pursuant to the authority of the statute in question? Why not construe this statute as other Indian statutes are construed—that is, liberally in all that relates to the interests of the Indians? Why should the proceeds of sales long since made be allowed to remain in perpetuum in the hands of the Federal Government, when there are no ascertained demands upon the fund, and the people entitled to participation in their own are clamoring for a partial distribution?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman's argument is very interesting; but assuming for the sake of argument that there are Mississippi Choctaws who have been kept from the roll who ought to be on the roll, and assuming that this is the first distribution of the fund, to be followed by another distribution of the funds to those Choctaws who are on the roll, and that in the course of two or three or four years, by these annual distributions of funds among the Choctaws who are on the roll, none would be left for those who in the course of time might be placed upon the rolls, does not the gentleman think that that question ought to enter into the consideration of this matter, and if that is true this point of order should be sustained?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I will answer my friend's inquiry fully. Even upon his statement of the case, I do not think that he presents for consideration an element that should enter into the decision of the Chair. And yet I will say, with respect to what this House may do, that if it should clearly appear that there was a meritorious outstanding claim, against this fund, though it had not reached the point that it had become a charge, it would be a great wrong on the part of the Congress to distribute this fund pending the ascertainment and determination of this claim. A reasonable opportunity should be afforded for its prosecution to judgment, or final determination. I for one would never agree to distribute the fund in hand so as to leave nothing for outstanding claimants prosecuting in good faith an apparently meritorious demand. But I submit that this is a question for the House, and not for a ruling by the Chair. The statement of the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws as made by my friend does not bring them within the benefit of the language used in the statute. However, neither the House, nor the Chair, need concern themselves with this phase of the situation for the very simple, and sufficient reason that there is a reservation of property that in the ultimate will be far more than sufficient to discharge any possible findings in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws.

I know something about the extent and value of these coal areas. I went over them as a member of the committee that visited the State of Oklahoma a few years ago. They are practically intact, and in the aggregate of immense value. No fear need be entertained that the partial distribution proposed will in anywise imperil the discharge of any prospective finding in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that no one believes that in the result all of these claimants will be able to make good. I take it that every Member on this floor who is at all acquainted with the nature and character of these claims realizes that in the ultimate, when every opportunity shall have been afforded in the courts for the determination of their merits, quite a large proportion of them will fall by the wayside. But even upon the theory that all of the two thousand and odd outstanding claimants will establish their claims in the courts, there is a sufficient undisposed of reservation to pay these demands in full.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. The Indians for whom we are contending now are those Indians whose claims have been established beyond question, who are shown to be entitled to have their names placed on the roll of the full-blood Choctaws.

Mr. SAUNDERS. How many of them are there?

Mr. SISSON. About 1,200.

Mr. HARRISON. The claims of at least 800 of those Indians have been approved by the Dawes Commission.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I deny that they were identified as claimants or have been properly enrolled.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will ask the gentleman whether there is any proportion of the Mississippi Choctaws who are now entitled to participate in the distribution of these funds?

Mr. SISSON. No. The commission was appointed to ascertain the number of Mississippi Choctaws who were entitled to enrollment and who were entitled to be enrolled as Choctaw Indians under the Dancing Rabbit treaties, and there were something like 2,600 of them. There were several thousand claimants that claimed under that treaty, but there were 2,600 of them that claimed the right to go on the roll. If they had complied with the conditions and had gone to Oklahoma, they would have probably gotten their rights, but they were entitled under the treaties up to that time, except for the statute of 1906.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. They were not entitled to anything.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I know something about this Dancing Rabbit treaty. I was a member of the Indian Committee for two or three sessions, and have heard this particular treaty discussed. It may be true that the Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to the benefits of the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

But I deny that there is any ascertainment anywhere that the Choctaws now in Mississippi are entitled to present participation in the fund in hand. These Choctaws have nothing but a claim, a claim that may be prosecuted during all time to come, and which therefore might defer, for all time to come the distribution of this present fund.

Mr. Chairman, look at the unreasonableness of the contention advanced in behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws that they have a right to hold up the partial distribution of the money in hand, even though the undistributed balance will save them harmless. In substance this contention is, that so long as they are prosecuting their claim in good faith, though their rights are undetermined, and unascertained, they are entitled to demand a postponement of distribution among the Indians whose right to present participation in the fund in hand has been definitely settled.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there no way by which we can force to a conclusion the cases that are pending?

Mr. SAUNDERS. None whatever. These Mississippi Choctaws will enjoy precisely the same status before the next House, as they have before the present body—namely, the right to press their claims, and ask for favorable action. Even an adverse decision by the present body, would not hinder the claimants from presenting their claims to the next House.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, having in mind that the controlling canon, or principle of interpretation of an Indian statute is to favor the interests of the Indians concerned, why should the Chair undertake to say that the language of the statute in issue means of necessity that there shall be no distribution of the fund, until every foot of land has been sold, every dollar of the purchase price has been paid into the Treasury, and every outstanding claim has been provided for? Why should you reach that conclusion, unless the language of the statute is so compelling that no other conclusion is possible? Upon a fair consideration of the statute, it is apparent that the language used means to say that when this property shall be sold from time to time and the proceeds paid into the Treasury until such an amount is in hand as to justify a partial distribution, this distribution shall be made among the parties in interest, after provision has been made for existing demands upon the fund. This is the present situation. An immense sum is in the Treasury in the hands of the court, so to say.

The people for whose benefit this statute was presumably enacted, being the same people, or the successors of the same people who made the Atoka agreement, are knocking at the doors of the Treasury. They ask that this fund shall be partially distributed. They meet the request for postponement of distribution by pointing to this agreement, and citing the familiar rule of interpretation applied to all statutes affecting the rights of Indians. How can this request be repelled? In one was only. The gentlemen who hold the contrary view must satisfy the Chair that the terms of the statute are so absolute, so positive, so overpowering in their clear prescription distribution must be deferred until the last dollar has been brought into the Treasury from the sale of all the property of thes Indians, that no decision is possible other than to sustain th point of order. When will these final sales take place? Havir g in mind the difficulties that attend the disposition of the coal lands, there is not a Member of this House who can make a reasonable estimate of the time that will be required to work out a solution of this problem in the best interests of the Indians. The disposition of the unallotted timber and agricultural lands was an easy task. They were platted and sold on easy terms. But the disposition of the coal lands has proved to be quite another thing, and the Government has never reached any definite conclusion as to the proper policy to be pursued in relation to this most valuable and undistributed asset.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this proposition be confined to 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like two minutes.

Mr. MANN. This discussion is in the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the section under consideration:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Having in mind that the segregated coal lands constitute the "other property" of the Indians, it is apparent that the interpretation of this section urged upon the Chair by the gentlemen who raise this point of order, will defer the distribution of any fund in hand, even if there is not a single charge against this fund, until the final sale of the segregated coal lands, and the payment of the proceeds of sale into the Treasury.

I would like for the gentlemen who hold this view to give to the Chair some sufficient reason, having in mind the interests of the people entitled to participation and therefore entitled to be considered, why the statute should carry this meaning. Why should it be supposed that Congress, having withdrawn the coal lands from sale by another section, should withhold the proceeds of sale of other lands from the parties in interest, until such time as the coal lands should be sold and the proceeds collected? From what conceivable point of view would this policy be to the interest of the Indians owning these lands? I submit that what this statute really means, is that when any amount of this property has been sold sufficient to justify a distribution, and the proceeds of sale have been collected, this fund, after providing for all just charges shall be distributed per capita amongst the proper parties on the approved rolls. Such a construction would conform the statute to the Atoka agreement, and be in harmony with the prevailing rule of interpretation of statutes of this character.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield for just one moment?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. WEAVER. In 1904 there was a per capita payment of $40, in 1906 a per capita payment of $35, in 1908 another per capita payment of $20, and in 1911, from the general fund, a per capita payment of $50.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that according to the present contention, all of the per capita payments made since 1906, were a repeal to that extent of the present statute. This act was passed in 1906. These payments afford a very clear indication that up to the present time, this act has not been construed by the people who are charged with its enforcement, as bearing the meaning that is now sought to be impressed upon it, by the gentlemen who insist on this point of order. If these payments were in violation of the act of 1906, this point of order would have been made long ago by some one on behalf of the Mississippi claimants.

Mr. LENROOT. It is entirely proper to put legislation upon appropriation bills if no point of order is made against it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand that perfectly well; I am not raising the question of authority. The gentleman can not raise an issue with me on that proposition. If no objection is made, we are agreed that legislation may be ingrafted upon appropriation bills.

Mr. LENROOT. I think so.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But the objection that the provision for these payments is contrary to law, is raised for the first time to-day. The omission to raise it heretofore raises a presumption that the payments ordered were conformable to law, and a proper part of the appropriation bill.

It is perfectly clear, that if there are no interests to be protected by the interpretation sought to be impressed upon this statute, there is no merit in the contention for this interpretation. Is it an abstract proposition that my friend from Wisconsin is seeking to establish? Why does he urge this interpretation, when it is so palpably contrary to the best interests of the people directly concerned in this fund?

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to the gentleman I will say that I believe it is not contrary to the people most concerned, and because of the equities I am standing for the legal proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So far as the equities are concerned a fund is retained that will be sufficient, and far more than sufficient, to meet them. But these equities can not be considered in the determination of this point of order. So we return to what after all is the main inquiry, and that is what interpretation of this statute will best promote the interest of the people vitally concerned. That interest should be the main, determining factor of interpretation. Why should the distribution of this money that possibly is needed to relieve actual want, be postponed until in the fullness of time, some other lands the property of the same tribes, shall be sold and the purchase price paid into the Treasury? Why should money now in hand lie idle in the Treasury, until Uncle Sam can scratch his head, and solve the knotty problem of how to best dispose of the coal lands?

Mr. Chairman, the summation of this situation may be stated as follows: First, the equities have nothing to do with your determination; second, a sufficient fund is retained to provide for the equities; third, the interpretation of this statute should not be contrary to the manifest interests of the Indians unless you are driven to that conclusion by the overwhelming compulsion of the language used by the lawmakers; fourth, there is no more reason for deferring this distribution than it would be for a court to defer a distribution of a fund in hand, when the parties were before the court, and all questions in issue had been determined. This distribution will go to the discharge of present necessities, to the discharge of present obligations, perchance to keep the wolf from the door of the desperately needy. Yet the gentleman from Wisconsin insists that distribution must be postponed until the segregated lands are all disposed of. Keep it in the Treasury, he says. Don't give it to the only people in the world who are entitled to distribution, but tie it up in a napkin, and put it away until the last acre in the coal area is sold, and the last Mississippi Choctaw is laid at rest.

I wish to put into the RECORD in response to the suggestion that some provision should be made for what are called the equities of the Mississippi Choctaws, and I do not undertake to prejudge their claims, or to deny them in a day in court, the fact that there are still $30,000,000 to be paid over to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is aware that this paragraph does not provide that that shall be taken out of this particular beneficiary's share in case others shall come in.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It makes NO difference from whom it is taken. In the aggregate a sufficient amount will be in hand to meet the equities that the gentleman has talked about.

I wish also to put into the RECORD certain principles of interpretation taken from the case of Choate against Trapp, decided in the Supreme Court of the United States May 13, 1912 (opinion by Mr. Justice Lamar):

> But in the Government's dealing with the Indians the rule is exactly the contrary. The construction, instead of being strict, is liberal; doubtful expressions, instead of being resolved in favor of the United States, are to be resolved in favor of a weak and defenseless people, who are wards of the Nation, and dependent wholly upon its protection and good faith. This rule of construction has been recognized, without exception, for more than a hundred years.

My last word is that the language of this statute is not so compelling that the Chair is required to hold that it repeals by implication the Atoka agreement, and postpones for an indefinite period the disposition of present funds among the persons severally entitled thereto. The point of order should be overruled.

I will append as a part of my remarks the following:

> The funds belonging to the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians now in the hands of the United States Government are as follows:

CHICKASAW.
In the Treasury	$603,460.06
On deposit in State and national banks	852,939.88
Total	1,456,399.94
CHOCTAW.
In the Treasury	1,918,798.69
On deposit in State and national banks	2,274,439.19
Total	4,193,237.88
Grand total	5,649,637.82

> The unallotted lands of these two nations which have been sold during the last two years brought a total of $10,137,094.85, of which there has been paid by the purchasers $4,891,310, leaving a balance due on deferred payments of $5,245,784.85.
> In the hearings before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Sixty-second Congress, third session, on H. R. 26874, pages 313 and 314, J. George Wright, Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, February 8, 1913, testified that the property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes undisposed of was worth approximately as follows:

Sale of surface of coal and asphalt lands	$4,000,000
Value of mineral deposits in coal and asphalt segregation	12,000,000
Value of timber reserve	3,500,000

> Adding to this the total cash now on hand, $5,649,637.82, and the deferred payments still due on the sale of the unallotted lands, amounting to $5,245,784.85, makes the total tribal property of these two tribes amount to $30,395,422 67.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House long. The gentleman from Virginia thinks solely of the Indians in Oklahoma. I want to say that the Choctaw Indians who reside in Oklahoma went from Mississippi, and the only way in the world that the treaty was ever perfected between the Choctaws living in Mississippi, a part of whom went to Oklahoma, was by the insertion of this fourteenth article. To bring it to your mind clearly, Mr. Chairman, I want to read it, and I want the Chair to recollect that the Indian in Mississippi to-day has a right to stay in Mississippi, that he has every right under that treaty that any Choctaw Indian in Oklahoma has, and that he is entitled under this article of the treaty to share in the funds of the tribe the same as do the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma; that the Indian in Mississippi has as much right, and that we should regard those rights here as much as the gentleman, or any other gentleman, should regard the rights of the Indians in Oklahoma.

The fourteenth article is as follows:

> 14. When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Now read section 2.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the gentleman from Oklahoma had plenty of time. I only cite this Mr. Chairman, to show that the Indian in Mississippi had a right to stay in Mississippi; that he is now as much a part of the tribe as are the Indians in Oklahoma, and his rights should be safeguarded in this bill, and that when you distribute the funds you ought to look in part to these Indians in Mississippi and at least give them some consideration in this matter. Now talk about the construction and interpretation of laws and treaties.

In the case of Worcester v. Georgia (6 Peters, 515), what did the court state?

> The language used in treaties with the Indians should never be construed to their prejudice.

This citation, with other citations, were before the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs in the Sixty-second Congress, presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL]. On that committee was Mr. SMITH of New York and Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They had this matter up for consideration, and they had exhaustive hearings on the bill that I had introduced, and after hearing all the testimony and the facts connected with it they brought in a unanimous report, saying that the Mississippi Choctaws should be enrolled and should be entitled to share in this fund.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to impose upon your patience, but the gentleman from Oklahoma says that no Mississippi Choctaws are now off the roll, that they had not been identified, if I understood the gentleman, and I think I did. Here is what the Commissioner of the Indian Office says in a report to the House in discussing the Mississippi Choctaws:

> The total number of persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws was 2,534, but only 1,445 were finally enrolled.

He does not stop there.

Mr. CARTER. Why?

Mr. HARRISON. He says:

> Thus there were 1,080 persons identified under the law who failed to secure these benefits—

Mr. CARTER. Why does he not say why?

Mr. HARRISON. He goes ahead—I am not going to take up too much of the committee's time to discuss that. He says these men went there, they investigated this thing, and that 1,089 Indians who live in Mississippi were identified and proved their rights under the fourteenth article that are not now on the rolls who by the paragraph in this bill would be prevented from getting their rights and sharing in this per capita payment.

Mr. CARTER. The court prevents it, not me.

Mr. HARRISON. Ah, the gentleman knows, Mr. Chairman, if you take this amount of money out of the tribal funds of this nation—the Choctaw Tribe—that there will be that much less left, and that if you continue to do it finally there will be nothing left for the Mississippi Choctaw, if he is ever permitted to prove his rights under the treaty.

Mr. CARTER. No; it is not; absolutely not; because the segregated mineral lands can not be sold under the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this discussion is for the benefit of the Chair and is not upon its merits.

Mr. CARTER. I was simply answering the question which I understood the gentleman to ask me. I do not have any desire to infringe upon the rules of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, to hear the gentleman say that, because I have here a copy of a letter that the gentleman from Oklahoma wrote to a constituent of his about this matter.

> WASHINGTON, January 16, 1914.
> B. M. MCDANIEL, Durant, Okla.
> MY DEAR SIR: On January 3, 1914, I proposed to the Indian appropriation bill an amendment for a per capita payment of $100 to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, which was adopted by the subcommittee and which we may be able to increase to $200 if handled properly.
> You doubtless know that the only legislation necessary for a winding up of tribal affairs is a provision for a per capita distribution of our funds. This amendment is the first step on the last lap of a final settlement, and we expect to try to provide for these payments every year; so that all the funds may be distributed just as they are collected. Points of order, petitions, and every other possible opposition will be urged against this amendment, and the sentiment of our people should be made known.

You can assist materially by writing a letter to several members of the Indian Committee, whose names appear at the head of this letter, stating the long delay that has taken place in the settlement of our affairs, the necessity for bringing same to a close at the earliest possible date, and the dire need of these per capita payments.

I gave up my Christmas trip to Oklahoma because I wanted to be on hand at the proper time to get this matter started off right. Now, won't you take time to persuade your Indian friends to express their sentiments to different members of the committee? You are interested; get busy and help us.

Very truly, yours,

C. D. CARTER.

Mr. CARTER. I wrote that letter and I did not say anything in that letter contradictory to anything I have said, but what has that to do with the point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the gentleman knows in answer to the question I put to him if this was not a method that is going to be followed by the Oklahoma delegation to constantly from year to year get a per capita payment of these tribal funds, so that in the end there will be none left for the Mississippi Choctaws in the event any should get on the rolls, and the gentleman denied that would be the method. His letter shows otherwise.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I did not deny any such thing. I simply stated what is the fact, that there still remains unsold, which can not be sold under the present law, the segregated mineral lands, the value of which has been variously estimated at from $20,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and this will complete the winding up of tribal affairs under the law, because it winds up everything except the segregated mineral lands, the sale of which is prevented by existing law, and our people all understand that. I admit everything in that letter, and I admit that I am going to try to do everything that letter sets forth.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read to the Chair the law that the committee evidently acted upon. I suppose this has already been cited to the Chair, but I want to read it again. Here is the law:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that under the construction and interpretation of treaties and laws pertaining to Indians, the only fair construction, the only right interpretation that can be placed on that law is that you can not distribute the funds of this tribe until all of their lands have been sold, until all of their property has been wiped out, and all the charges against the estate have come in, and the whole matter settled up. That is based on reason. I can not for the life of me see how gentlemen can contend otherwise. You never know when charges are coming in against the tribe. You never know how much you are going to have on hand until all of the lands are sold and all of these charges come in against the estate, and I submit that under that law, when gentlemen argue for this distribution, it flaunts itself in their face and says by its own language that it can not be done. This matter was up in the Senate last year, and the Vice President then ruled that it was subject to a point of order, and ruled it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that, as he understands the ruling in the Senate, it was both ways.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that. Here were the facts in the Senate. When the appropriation bill came into the Senate the point of order was made by Senator WILLIAMS upon the ground that this provision was not germane and that it was legislation on an appropriation bill, and upon the ground, also, that it was a distribution of funds when this was an appropriation bill. At first the Chair stated that he would leave it to the Senators to vote upon it, and they voted and held that it was in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the RECORD shows the Chair first held that it was in order under the treaty, and submitted the question of germaneness to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. And later on when this statute was called to the attention of the Chair he ruled it out of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely. After it was held to be in order then Senator WILLIAMS offered an amendment to the paragraph in the appropriation bill, and the point of order was made against that amendment. The Vice President overruled the point of order, and afterwards sustained the point of order to that and also the point of order that was originally made to the paragraph. That was the final ruling.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, without taking up more of the time of the committee, that this paragraph should not be inserted in this bill; that the Mississippi Choctaw ought to have a right to prove his claims if he has just claims, and it has been proven before a subcommittee of this House that he has just claims, and when you rule that this paragraph is in order and allow this distribution to go on year by year, you prevent, you estop the Mississippi Choctaw from ever getting anything out of the funds of this tribe. I trust that the point of order will be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment. Of course I do not care to unsettle the mind of the Chair, if he is going to rule my way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. Just for a moment, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] stated the law correctly, but I am sure inadvertently, from his standpoint, and I shall not try to hold him to what he said. He did state, referring to the per capita payments of $20 and $36, that they were acts legislative in their nature, and to that extent pro tanto repealed the law of 1906. That is exactly what I claim; but, as I say, I shall not attempt to hold the gentleman to his statement.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him in that connection. I said on his theory of the law.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not hear the gentleman state that. I know the gentleman did not intend to make the statement as I have stated it, but the gentleman did make the contention that the act should be construed in the light of the treaty, in the light of the whole act itself. That is true. Of course, Mr. Chairman, where there is any ambiguity in a statute resort can sometimes be had to other matters to clear up the ambiguity, but if there be none that resort can not be had; and if the Chair will examine the entire act of 1906, he will see, from the title down, that it is an act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. CARTER. Let me ask the gentleman if that same act did not withdraw from sale the segregated mineral lands?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Then would it not be a fact that the withdrawal of those lands from sale would completely prevent the operation of section 17?

Mr. LENROOT. Not necessarily.

Mr. CARTER. Section 17, according to the gentleman's contention, means when all the unallotted lands and other property are sold, and it would therefore prevent any division of these funds by its own terms.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, not necessarily, because so far as the withdrawal is concerned, if there is nothing to sell, of course that would not be embraced within the provisions of the act.

Mr. CARTER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. It is tribal, is it not?

Mr. LENROOT. It is tribal property.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman wants to read all kinds of language into the law.

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is just the situation. Whether the property of the tribe be in lands, whether it be in minerals, or whether it be in money, it is the intention of the act of 1906 to continue the tribal relation until the final disposition. Now, the gentleman would not contend for a moment that legislation would be in order upon this Indian appropriation bill making a different disposition of property other than money of the tribe. And the entire intention of the act is to make the money simply take the place of property.

Now, just one further suggestion.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit just a moment, I want to correct one thing. He said that I would not contend they had a right to divide other property. My contention is they have divided other property, because lands have been allotted since the act of 1906.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, that is true.

Mr. CARTER. But that is "other property."

Mr. LENROOT. But that has been under affirmative legislation. One other suggestion and I am through, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] attempted to persuade the Chair that this would be in order, because there was a large amount of resources belonging to the tribe, amply sufficient to take care of any claim that might exist or might arise in the future, and I want to say just a word in reference to that. Now, Mr. Chairman, the act of 1906, in language as plain as language can make it, imposed a condition precedent to the distribution of any of this money, namely, "when all of the just charges against the funds of the reservation tribes have been deducted therefrom." Now, I respectfully submit that the Chair can not consider that there will be any money to take care of just claims hereafter; the Chair can not consider whether that was a wise thing to put into the act of 1906—can not consider whether it was necessary to put it into the act of 1906. It is there, and so long as there is a claim, even one such as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] admitted as existing, amounting to $27,000, so long as that remains this is new legislation, and it is changing this act of 1906 to permit a partial distribution of this fund in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The proposition submitted is attended with considerable difficulty. The Chair has permitted a very liberal discussion of the whole matter. Much has been said about the equity of the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws; but, of course, that is something with which the Chair, so far as this ruling is concerned, has nothing to do. The Chair has very carefully examined the agreements made between the Indians and the United States Government, and also the acts of Congress, and has made note of those portions which, in the opinion of the Chair, have some relevancy, so far as this particular question is concerned.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] makes the point of order against the following paragraph in the bill:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, same to be made under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such members are Indians whose restrictions have not been removed the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for their benefit.

It is contended that it is not authorized by existing law and, therefore, not in order on an appropriation bill.

In order to determine the issue raised by the point of order, it will be necessary to refer to certain portions of agreements and statutes under which the property of said tribes was divided in severalty and disposed of under rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States. The first agreement to which the Chair will refer is what is known as the Atoka agreement between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes and the United States, and is embodied in a confirmatory act of Congress passed June 28, 1898.

In section 11 of said act it was provided that when the rolls of citizenship of said tribes were completed and the lands of the tribes surveyed, then all of the surface lands should be allotted in severalty among the citizens as shown by the roll, reserving and excepting to each tribe only the oil, coal, asphalt, and mineral deposits in the lands and a sufficient amount of land for town sites, schools, churches, and so forth. Section 15 provided for the disposition or sale of the town lots and that all the money "paid into the United States Treasury for the sale of all the town lots shall be for the benefit of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes—freedmen excepted—and at the end of one year from the ratification of this agreement, and at the end of each year thereafter the funds so accumulated shall be divided and paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws—freedmen excepted—each member of the two tribes to receive an equal portion thereof." It was further provided that royalties on oil, coal, asphalt, and other minerals, and rents should be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribe to which they belong, and that they were to be used for the education of the children of Indian blood of the members of said tribes. But it was provided in said agreement "that whenever the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes shall be required to pay taxes for the support of schools, then the fund arising from such royalties shall be disposed of for the equal benefit of their members—freedmen excepted—in such manner as the tribes may direct."

It may be stated here, parenthetically, that the members of the tribes are now paying taxes for the support of schools in the State of Oklahoma. Said agreement further provided—

That all per capita payments hereafter made to the members of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations shall be paid directly to each individual member by a bonded officer of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, which officer shall be required to give strict account of such disbursements to said Secretary.

The agreement contains the further provision:

It is further agreed that all of the funds invested, in lieu of investment, treaty funds, or otherwise now held by the United States in trust for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal government shall cease, so far as the same may legally be done, and be appropriated and paid by some officer of the United States appointed for the purpose, to the Choctaws and Chickasaws—freedmen excepted—per capita, to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands.

It was also provided that the tribal governments should cease after the lapse of eight years from March 4, 1898, but this was subsequently changed by the act of April 26, 1906.

The Chair has referred to this agreement and act of Congress somewhat at length, and it is clearly to be seen that it was the intention that the lands and all the property of the Choctaws and Chickasaws should be allotted and distributed to them per capita as soon as the rolls were completed and their tribal governments should cease in anticipation of statehood for the territory in which their lands were located. Subsequently a supplementary agreement was entered into which is found in the act of Congress passed July 1, 1902, and which limits the allotment to each citizen of the tribe to 320 acres.

As to the residue of said lands, section 14 provides:

When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

It will be borne in mind that the Atoka agreement provided for an allotment of all the lands. The supplementary agreement provides for a reduction of amount of allotment and sale of residue, the proceeds to be distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

Section 17 of the act of Congress passed April 26, 1906, provides:

That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the money arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear upon the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

In the opinion of the Chair, authority for this provision in the bill must rest on this section and section 14 of the supplementary agreement, as above quoted. But it is contended that under this section no distribution can be made until all of the unallotted lands have been sold. The section does not say so nor does the Chair think that to be a correct, fair, or just interpretation of it. But even if it is, the Chair has been furnished with a letter, written on February 19, 1914, by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. E. B. Meritt, to the Hon. CHARLES D. CARTER. In that letter the assistant commissioner says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES D. CARTER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CARTER: In response to your inquiry over the telephone relative to the unallotted lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, I have the honor to advise you that said surplus unallotted unreserved land was sold at public auction under the provisions of section 14 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), and section 16 of the act of Congress of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137). The entire area with the exception of a few odd tracts has been disposed of at said sales. A few tracts that have been forfeited by the purchasers by reason of the nonpayment of the deferred purchase price will, of course, be reoffered for sale at the earliest practicable date.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

So, assuming that the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs has correctly stated the facts—and the Chair has no doubt about that—even if the contention be true that all of these unallotted lands must first be sold before there can be a distribution of the per capita funds in the Treasury, the Chair thinks that that requirement has been complied with. The Chair thinks, however, that said section should be construed in connection with the clear intent of the Atoka and the supplementary agreements, and that a liberal rather than a technical construction should be placed upon it, in the interest of the Indian tribes, who are the wards of the Government.

The act itself clearly negatives any such intent on the part of Congress as is claimed, for section 26 of the same act provides that any lands not sold and belonging to any part of the tribes upon their dissolution should be held in trust by the United States for the use and benefit of those whose names appear upon the rolls.

The Chair's attention has been further called to the fact that the act of 1906 withdraws all segregated mineral lands from sale, and if the contention made by those who have supported the point of order is correct, then it will result in withholding a distribution of the funds belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes for an indefinite period of time, which in the opinion of the Chair was certainly never intended, as will appear from a reading of the act referred to. The Chair does not think it was the intention to withhold indefinitely, and until after the final dissolution of the tribes, the millions of dollars to which they are justly entitled, in the language of the statute, "to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands."

It is further contended that this section provides that a per capita payment shall not be made until all just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted, and that the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws constitute a just charge. However just their claim may be, the Chair does not think it could be called a charge in the sense in which the word is used here. The courts have repeatedly held that a charge is the price required or demanded for services rendered. The charges mentioned in the statute refer to the charges of administration—charges of the Government for administering the affairs and estates of the tribes. The Chair is informed by the gentleman from Oklahoma that there are no such charges, and he assumes that it is correct.

The Chair is more content with this ruling, because it can not possibly work any injury to any person or persons who hold a claim against either tribe. It has been stated, and the Chair does not doubt the correctness of the statement, that to make the per capita payment of $100 will require the sum of $2,702,200, whereas the tribes have on deposit an aggregate of $7,100,000, and there is said to be more than $33,000,000 in addition to become due them.

The Chair has come to the conclusion herein expressed after as careful an examination of the statutes as was possible under the circumstances. His personal views of the rights or equities of the Mississippi Choctaws have had no weight, and have not been permitted to enter into this ruling one way or the other. It is the duty of the Chair to pass upon the point of order in accordance with what he believes to be the meaning of the rules of the House and the general law on the subject, and this the Chair has endeavored to do without regard to the merits of the question. The committee has the right of ultimate interpretation, and if the Chair is wrong in his conclusions the committee on appeal can so determine.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the paragraph does not involve a change of existing laws and is not new legislation, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on line 1, page 34, after the comma, following the word "heirs," by inserting the following:

"And such other Mississippi Choctaws as have been identified by the Dawes Commission in its report of March 10, 1899, and all persons who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission from March 10, 1899, to March 4, 1907, and were approved by the Secretary of the Interior, but whose names do not now appear on the final citizenship rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations; and also all Mississippi Choctaws, whether of full or mixed blood, whose ancestors received or were entitled to receive a patent to lands under article 14 of the treaty of 1830 between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, and the time for making the proof and the manner and rules governing the same shall be within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. JONES as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10258. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Lawton, Okla., a tract of land to be used for watershed and water-supply purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Eastern Maine Railroad to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge without a draw across the Penobscot River between the cities of Bangor and Brewer, in the State of Maine.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, for the reason that it is not germane and that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to argue the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to be heard against the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps I shall want to be heard, too.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this paragraph that is incorporated in the appropriation bill for this per capita payment is to pay out this money to those who are entitled to receive it. That was evidently the object and the intention of the Indian Affairs Committee when they incorporated it in the bill. Assuming that that is correct, and assuming that their object was to give this $100 to each one of these Mississippi Choctaws who are entitled to it, then it certainly is in order that in the distribution of it those Indians who have made their proof, who have gone before the officials of the Government, the Dawes Commission, for instance, and have proven their claims and the justice of them, and who have been properly identified, ought to be enrolled, as well as those who, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, are entitled to be enrolled. I submit that in all fairness and in all justice this amendment should be incorporated into this paragraph, so that when the distribution of these funds is made they shall not go wholly to those in Oklahoma, but that those other members of the tribe who can prove their right and who are entitled to it shall also get their $100. I think it is germane to the paragraph. It is no more legislation than the provision in the original paragraph, and I submit that the point of order ought to be overruled.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have only to call the attention of the Chair to section 17 of the act of April 26, 1906, which provides that this money shall be distributed—per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes.

To state further, the Mississippi and Choctaw case has been fully settled. There has been a great deal said here about their not having had their day in court; but an act of Congress gave the Dawes Commission the right to settle this matter. They went down to Oklahoma and had a trial of a test case, which was known as the Jack Amos case. That case was decided adversely to the Mississippi Choctaws after a full hearing by the Dawes Commission. A subsequent act gave an appeal to the Federal district court of Oklahoma. This Federal court affirmed the decision of the Dawes Commission. It was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon motion of the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws was dismissed at their cost. You will find that in the case of Amos v. The Choctaw Nation (19 Supreme Court, 873).

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think there are Choctaws who are entitled to share in the funds who are not now on the rolls that you propose to distribute the funds of the tribe to?

Mr. CARTER. I am not prepared to say whether there are or not, but if there were, this is no time or place to determine those rights.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that the gentleman has introduced bills in this Congress, and has championed bills in this Congress, to put upon the rolls certain persons, naming the persons?

Mr. CARTER. No; it is not. I have not named any person to go on the rolls in any bill I introduced.

Mr. HARRISON. Has not the gentleman introduced bills saying there were certain persons that ought to be on the rolls?

Mr. CARTER. I have not.

Mr. HARRISON. Has not the gentleman introduced a bill——

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman keeps on guessing, he may guess right. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Has not the gentleman introduced a bill saying that the Mississippi Choctaws had the right to a home, and making provision for them?

Mr. CARTER. I have not; the gentleman will have to guess again.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I have been misinformed. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] has introduced bills of that character. I had the impression that in former Congresses the gentleman had been in favor of some bills and had introduced bills of that character.

Mr. CARTER. No; I introduced a bill directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the condition of the Mississippi Choctaws, with a view of seeing if it was practicable and just for the Federal Government to provide homes for them on the public domain. But whatever glory I may have had in that respect, Mr. Chairman, was completely stripped from me by another distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] who marked out my name, introduced my bill, sent it down to his constituents, and I had a hundred letters asking me to support the "Humphreys bill." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The section under which the Chair overruled the point of order to the paragraph to which this amendment is offered was section 17 of the act of 1906. It has been read many times, and the Chair will not undertake to read it again. In brief, it provides for the payment of funds to certain tribes, including the Choctaws and Chickasaws, upon certain conditions to those—quoting from the section—"whose names appear upon the finally approved roll," and so forth. The gentleman from Mississippi has offered an amendment, which has been read at the desk, and to which a point of order has been made by the gentleman from Texas, in which it is provided that certain others shall be paid from the fund per capita, and in express terms provides that certain parties—quoting from the amendment—"whose names do not now appear on the final citizenship rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations" shall be paid.

The Chair thinks it is only necessary to read the section of the act of 1906 to which he has referred and this portion of the amendment to show that it clearly seeks to change the act of 1906, and therefore constitutes new legislation. The Chair is therefore compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the paragraph, line 20, page 33, down to and including line 8, on page 34, be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the paragraph beginning at line 20, page 33, and ending line 8, page 34, as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, same to be made under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such members are Indians whose restrictions have not been removed the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for their benefit."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that by order of the committee debate on this paragraph has been limited to 45 minutes. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that there is 45 minutes for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. By a previous order of the committee debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto was limited to 45 minutes, of which time 20 minutes was to be given to those in favor of the paragraph, 20 minutes to those opposed, and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Has any of the time been used?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 33, line 22, to strike out the figures "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 33, line 22, by striking out the figures "$100" and inserting the figures "$200."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come when it is proper for me to state why I so strenuously took the position I did with reference to the point of order. During that discussion I simply stated that I did insist upon the strict legal position as I believed it to be because of what I believe to be the equities in the premises.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all that I know about this matter is gathered from various reports of the Department of the Interior. I hold in my hand a Senate document entitled "Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma." All of it refers to this question, and I undertake to say that no Member of this House can read that document without being convinced that a very gross injustice has been done to a great many Indians that are not now upon these rolls, who are as much entitled to this per capita payment as is anyone now upon the rolls.

Mr. Chairman, I have not time in five minutes to go into the history of this matter; but a statute of limitations was enacted in 1906 that gave claimants until March 4, 1907, to present their claims and the department to adjudicate them; and I find from the report of the department that on February 25, 1907, there were before the department unadjudicated claims to the number of 2,023; that they were compelled to adjudicate those 2,000 claims between February 25 and the succeeding March 4, 1907; in other words, in seven days. The department very frankly states that because of that short time it was impossible for the department to pass upon the merits of those claims, and therefore there are a very great number of these claimants who have done everything required of them under the act of 1906, but who have been denied enrollment simply because the department did not have the opportunity to pass upon their claims; and I read from the report of Mr. Howell, the assistant attorney, who was appointed by the department to make a full investigation and report. He says:

With the extra work imposed by the act itself in connection with the enrollment of the new-born children, it became absolutely impossible for the department to complete the work within the time prescribed, and today it may be said with perfect truthfulness that the word "complete" falls far short of describing the condition of the enrollment work and the citizenship rolls as of March 4, 1907.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had the time to go into this more at length, but I will only say, as I said before, that no Member of this House upon reading the testimony can fail to be convinced that there are hundreds of full-blood Indians that upon every principle of right and justice are entitled to be upon these rolls, but who are not. If this paragraph stays in the bill, we will pay $100 per capita to these people now upon the rolls, something between three and four million dollars, and we will deny to those to whom we may hereafter do justice by putting them on the rolls any participation in this $4,000,000, which would be a very great wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recollect that the time was in the control of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CARTER. It is in the control of the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not understand it that way. I think there was no understanding as to who should control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma for five minutes and meanwhile will look up the record.

[Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some one in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

[Mr. WEAVER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], both on legal and equitable grounds. No one, I am sure, can point to any provision of a treaty or to any statutory provision that gives to those Choctaws who have for nearly 100 years refused to leave Mississippi and establish tribal relations with their kindred who removed to the Choctaw Nation under the provisions of the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

It being confessed that they have no legal right, let us examine what equitable claim they have to share in the Choctaw-Chickasaw funds, for be it remembered that this is not an effort to have the Mississippi Choctaws declared citizens of the Choctaw Tribe so that they can remove to Oklahoma, take allotments there, and become citizens of that State. This is an effort to take from the funds belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw people—several million dollars—and pay to each Choctaw who now resides in Mississippi the sum of approximately $8,400. These Mississippi Choctaws, under the Dancing Rabbit treaty, had the option of remaining in Mississippi or going with their brothers to the reservation in the West.

If they remained, they secured script which entitled them to public lands of the United States, and those who remained received this. Even after all this the Choctaws who removed from Mississippi and took up their abode in the Choctaw Nation ever since 1832 have been admitted to citizenship in the tribe and have enrolled all Choctaws who subsequently removed to the Choctaw Nation and identified themselves with the tribe. That is not all. In 1902, when the supplemental agreement was entered into between the Choctaws and Chickasaws and the United States, section 14 was incorporated in that treaty, and it provides for the identification of those Mississippi Choctaws who remained in Mississippi and for their removal to the Choctaw country. The Dawes Commission sent its agents to Mississippi to identify these people, and they were identified. We had in Oklahoma at that time a number of men who followed the commission to Mississippi for the purpose of seeing that the Choctaws there were identified and to remove them to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country. These men went into the highways and byways of Mississippi, sought out the Indians, and did everything they possibly could to have them identified, so they could bring them to our State, allot them, and secure leases on their lands. In the three counties of the fifth congressional district of the State—Murray, Garvin, and McClain—there are more than 500 of these Mississippi Choctaws. I know how the work was done, for I was there and observed it. Those Choctaws who are in Mississippi at this time are there not from necessity, but from choice. I personally know that a large number of those who did come from Mississippi to take allotments in our country left and returned to Mississippi as soon as they had made the proper proof, so they could hold their allotments.

I think, therefore, that the Government of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians have done not only what they ought to have done, but much more, and all they possibly could do, to assist the Mississippi Choctaws to become citizens of our State and participate in the allotment and distribution of the tribal property. The only objection I have to the bill as reported by the committee is that it carries a per capita payment of only $100 to each Indian. This amounts to a little more than $2,000,000. It ought to be $300 per capita instead of $100, and I sincerely trust when this bill reaches the Senate that body will raise the amount to that sum. The Choctaws and Chickasaws had on deposit, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on January 17, 1914, the sum of $7,425,213.20. A payment of $300 per capita could be made and a million dollars would yet remain in his hands. In addition to the money on deposit belonging to these two tribes, the appraised value of the timberlands, segregated coal lands, and all properties belonging to the Choctaws and Chickasaws on that date amounted to $23,673,845.

APPROPRIATION IN AID OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation in aid of the common schools for the Five Civilized Tribes ought to be much larger than $275,000, the amount carried in this bill. We ought to have at least a million dollars per year for this purpose during the time the Indian land is exempt from taxation. When the United States entered into treaty stipulations exempting Indian land from taxation, provision should have been made for the resultant loss to the State and the added burden that would attach by reason of higher taxes on personal property and lands that were not so exempt. I think a mistake was made in exempting these lands from taxation where restrictions on alienation were removed. If a man is competent to handle his property and sell or dispose of it as his wishes may dictate, he ought to stand on exactly the same footing with every other citizen. In the case of incompetents, this would not be so; but in the case of incompetents provision should have been made, where they owned property exempt from taxation, that the Government pay the taxes and not make it a charge on the people of Oklahoma. Exemption from taxation is most unfortunate for the people of my State, both white and Indian, who do not belong to the class having restrictions imposed upon them and commonly known as "incompetents," the whites for the reason that they see burdens imposed upon them by the Government that are not imposed upon their wealthier and more fortunate neighbors, and the Indian who has no restriction against handling his property very largely shares in these views of his neighbor.

There is no antagonism between the whites and Indians in that part of Oklahoma where I live. They are friends and neighbors. The Indians are among the most intelligent, most energetic, and most enterprising of our citizenship. They are engaged in every line of industry. They are merchants, bankers, real-estate dealers, and farmers. Three out of the nine presidents of the national banks in my county are Indians, and the directorships of those banks will show an equal proportion, though the percentage of population as between the Indians and whites is much smaller than this. I have heard a great deal about the white man grafting the Indian, but I submit that does not apply to that portion of the State where I reside. The Indian has always been able to take care of himself, and my observation has been that the grafter has not been able to get much the better of him. We also hear a great deal about the probate courts of Oklahoma. I had occasion to say a few days ago what I thought on that subject, and I will not repeat it here. I only want to add that the most flagrant violation of a trust toward the Indians in my part of the State has not been by the county judges, but by an Indian agent, appointed by the Union Agency at Muskogee—one Daniel A. Crafton—who was the field agent at Pauls Valley during the years 1909 and 1910 for the counties of Murray, Garvin, and McClain. In a number of cases he was appointed by the different county judges of these counties as guardian of minor Indians, and he thereby secured possession of a large sum of money, absconded, taking it with him, and has never been heard of since. Serious charges are made on the floor of this House against county officers and guardians of the State of Oklahoma, but this case—more flagrant than any case that could possibly be imagined on the part of the citizenship of my State—has never been mentioned.

Getting back, however, to the subject, I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the total area of that part of the State of Oklahoma formerly comprising the Five Civilized Tribes is 19,525,966.36 acres. The amount subject to taxation is 8,374,187.6 acres, and the amount exempt from taxation is 11,151,777.3 acres. It will be seen that nearly three-fifths of the total area of the eastern part of our State is not subject to taxation. If all this land were bearing its just proportion of the burdens of taxation—State, county, city, township, and district—it will be readily seen how taxation that now rests so heavily on our people would be lightened. Suppose this 11,151,777.3 acres of land were valued on an average at $15 per acre, which is a very conservative estimate of its real worth, we would have a tax valuation of $167,276,659.50, which would produce, at 1 per cent—which is about one-third the rate our people now have to pay—$1,672,766.59. Mr. Chairman, this amount coming into our treasury every year would reduce taxation, so that the thrifty, industrious, and enterprising citizens of Oklahoma would not be driven by the tax gatherer beyond the borders of our State. I am not complaining against the Indian because he takes advantage of the law and does not pay taxes on his land holdings. He is doing just what practically every citizen of Oklahoma would do if the law favored them in the same way. The fault is with the Government, that entered into a treaty which granted this exemption without compensating those upon whom the burdens of government were thrust by an appropriation that would take care of this condition. We may not secure from the Federal Government at this time an appropriation that will compensate our people for the amount added to their tax duplicate by reason of this exemption, but sooner or later the people will understand the justness of our claim and an appropriation will be made by this Congress to relieve our people of the unjust burden that is now imposed upon them.

ABOLISHING THE OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER TO THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES AND SUPERINTENDENT OF THE UNION AGENCY AT MUSKOGEE AND REORGANIZING THE INDIAN SERVICE.

Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of that provision of the bill which abolishes the office of J. George Wright, Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and Dana H. Kelsey, superintendent of the Union Agency at Muskogee, and provides for the appointment of an agent by the Secretary of the Interior to wind up the tribal affairs of our Indians. In 1895 the Congress of the United States passed an act creating what is commonly known in our State as the Dawes Commission; authorized this commission to treat with the Indians looking to the abolishment of their tribal status and the building of a State out of those reservations. It was expected by the Congress, by the people of this country, and especially by the people of Oklahoma, that this commission would speedily make it possible to divide in severalty and turn over to the individual Indians all of the vast property they had at that time and had theretofore held in common. Nearly 20 years have elapsed since that statute was enacted, and it seems to those of us who live in Oklahoma that we are not much nearer the end of tribal conditions in that State than we were when the Dawes Commission was provided for. Every man, woman, and child in my State—Indian and white—most earnestly desire the final settlement of the Indian property and the final distribution among the Indians of the tribal property.

The officers and employees of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the superintendent of the Union Agency, at Muskogee, have made a most dismal failure of winding up the tribal affairs and making final settlement of the tribal estates. I am firmly convinced that we will never be able to finally settle the Indian problem in Oklahoma and pay out to the Indians the money and funds that belong to them until we shall have effected a change in the personnel of the officers who represent the Interior Department in that State.

J. George Wright, Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and Dana H. Kelsey, superintendent of the Union Agency, have been in the service in Oklahoma for nearly 20 years. Wright, I believe, came to Oklahoma in 1897, and Kelsey's arrival, I believe, antedates Wright's. We can never secure a change of policy in that State until there is a change in the personnel of those who create and enforce the policy. It seems that the policy in existence down there at this time is to prolong matters just as long as possible and not wind them up and finally settle them. I believe if we can dispense with the services of these men, secure new blood and new ideas as to the final winding up and disposing of the tribal estates, we will speedily dispose of the Indian problem in Oklahoma, and I say this knowing that it is the universal wish of all the people of our State, both Indians and whites.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman in charge of the rest of the time proceed?

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this motion ought to prevail. The technical argument made by the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] to prevent the Mississippi Choctaw Indians who are not on this roll from ever participating in the funds and the lands that have been set apart for the Choctaw Tribe is specious, and for my part I believe is not in accord with equity and good conscience. This Government intended that the American Indian should have all of his rights, and because, forsooth, these Mississippi Choctaws did not have an opportunity to go to Oklahoma, because they never had the notice, because of the short time that was allowed for them to set up their rights and for them to know that they should go to Oklahoma, both because of the short time that was given and, on the other hand, the trickery of some schemers that never wanted to have these Choctaws to come in and take advantage of it, should cause this motion to be adopted now. It strikes me that these Indians who are back yonder in Mississippi yet should have that protection thrown around them under this motion and keep the fund from being dissipated and keep this $100 per capita—which amounts to $3,000,000—in the Treasury until the Indians of Mississippi can assert their rights; and, by the way, a $200 per capita amendment will be put on before you get through. Unless this motion to strike out the entire paragraph prevails, the ones who are now on the roll will get all the money, and those who were not fortunate enough to be on this roll, because of no fault of their own, but because of the negligence of the Government agents, will be barred from ever getting a dime of this fund. I am heartily in favor of this motion, Mr. Chairman. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. HARRISON. There will be but one speech on this side, and we would like to close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to argue the proposition, but I thought, Mr. Chairman, because I had offered the amendment we would have the right to the last speech.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, in the short time allotted to me I will not be able to give very much of the history of the relations between the Choctaws of Mississippi, the Choctaws of Oklahoma, and the Federal Government, covering a period of 84 years, but can only hope to touch the high and important places.

It has been repeatedly asserted on the floor of this House, and it was asseverated with the conclusion of a dictum that the Mississippi Choctaw never had his day in court. Let us see.

The Dawes Commission came to Oklahoma in 1893. By a subsequent act they were authorized to investigate claims of the Mississippi Choctaws to a division in property of the Indians west of the Mississippi. This commission made a most thorough investigation, not only in Oklahoma but proceeded to Mississippi and conducted there proceedings for several years. When they finally rendered their decision it was to the effect that the Mississippi Choctaws could not participate in the tribal property of the Indians in Indian Territory unless they should remove to and in good faith establish residence on that reservation.

This case was styled "Jack Amos et al. versus United States." It was appealed to the Federal court under authority given by a subsequent act. The Central United States District Court of Indian Territory took up the case and tried it de novo. This United States court affirmed the decision of the Dawes Commission, which was adverse to the Mississippi Choctaws, in a lengthy opinion, again setting forth that in order for one of these Indians to exercise any rights of citizenship and secure a division of tribal property of the Western Choctaws it would be necessary for them to remove to and establish bona fide residence in Indian Territory.

In the short time I have it will be impossible for me to read this long decision, but I will place it in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. This Amos case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and on motion of the attorney for the Mississippi Choctaws was dismissed at the cost of said Mississippi Choctaws. You will find this case in Nineteenth Supreme Court Reporter, page 873. So it looks, after all, as if our friends from Mississippi were somewhat mistaken as to the Mississippi Choctaws not having had their day in court.

Now, let us see what kind of representation the Mississippi Choctaw had in these cases. He had, I believe, Chester Howe, a leading attorney of this city, and J. E. Arnold, another attorney, also of this city. He had no less a personage than a present United States Senator, who is conceded to be one of the best lawyers on these matters in the United States Senate. He also had for his attorney W. T. Hutchins, of Muskogee, said to be one of the best attorneys in the Southwest. Do any of you think the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws were neglected with such eminent counsel as this? So our Mississippi friends were again mistaken as to their facts. But these splendid attorneys were only able to convince the court to order the enrollment of such as would establish bona fide residence on the western reservation.

An act of Congress was passed authorizing the Court of Claims to settle fees of these attorneys. They thought all the attorneys must have been included, but such vigorous demands were made by others that it was necessary, about 1908, to permit additional attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws to interplead and set up right to these fees, and these cases are pending in the Court of Claims now. So the Mississippi Choctaw, instead of not having representation before the courts, had so many attorneys that it required two acts of Congress at two separate sessions of Congress to find them all, and the courts have not yet been able to dig them all up and distinguish among them.

But this is not all. This decision was rendered in the year 1899. It had been provided by the Atoka agreement, approved June 28, 1898, that no person should be enrolled who had not prior to the adoption of that agreement removed to and in good faith settled in the nation in which he claimed citizenship. The supplemental treaty was made with the Choctaws and Chickasaws and approved July 1, 1902, three years after the decision in the Jack Amos case. By this agreement the former date of residence was again affirmed except as to the Mississippi Choctaws. The Choctaws and Chickasaws in Indian Territory very graciously extended the time of residence to their brethren in Mississippi until March 4, 1907. More than that, the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Indian Territory ever stood ready and willing to accept their fellow tribesmen in Mississippi into full citizenship and all its emoluments at any time they would remove West, establish residence among them, and become one of their citizens.

Now, let us see what the conditions were at the time the treaty of 1830 was made. Indian Territory was an uninhabited country when it was conveyed in common to the Choctaws, who removed to Indian Territory. No rights whatever were given or could be exercised by any individual unless he resided upon the reservation. The lands under this title in common could not be conveyed nor could they be leased for any number of years. So how was anyone to receive any benefits from this reservation unless they removed to and resided upon the land? At that time no one thought of allotment of land in severalty, there was no separate title to any part of the Choctaw and Chickasaw land, and the treaty of 1830 specifically set forth that it was to "inure to them and their descendants so long as they exist as a nation and live upon it." This provision about living upon the reservation was reiterated in the patent, and unless the Choctaws had lived upon it under the terms of the patent title reverted to the United States. What would have happened if the Indians now in Oklahoma had done as the Mississippi Choctaws did? Where would the title be now? It would be in the Federal Government, settled and owned by whites, and these Indians in Oklahoma would be exactly upon the same plane as those in Mississippi—that is to say, without a home.

I call the attention of my friends from Mississippi to the fact that the Choctaws who went to Oklahoma in the early days went there when there was no habitation in that part of the country. They went there when it was infested by the most warlike bands of Indians that this United States has ever seen. They went there when it was the refuge of desperadoes. They bared their breasts to the bullet of the white desperado and the arrow of the red warrior, when the Mississippi Choctaws were living in ease under the protection of the law, and many in luxury, down in the good old State of Mississippi.

When the Choctaws and Chickasaws moved to Indian Territory they were ceded something like 21,000,000 acres of land. They were ceded this land for what they relinquished when they abandoned Mississippi. It was not long before you came and forced them to give up a part of this land for settlement of what you called friendly Indians. These friendly Indians were the warlike Kiowas, Comanches, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Apaches, and the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Indian Territory were made the buffer to receive their attacks, which would otherwise have been inflicted upon the good people of Louisiana and Arkansas.

But this is not all. Finally these warlike tribes did become somewhat peaceful, and as soon as they did your white men came in. When they came these lands that had been taken ostensibly for the settlement of so-called friendly Indians were given into the hands of white men, and the reservation of the Choctaws and Chickasaws was therefore diminished from 21,000,000 acres to about 11,000,000 acres.

What was the next step? The Atoka agreement. Ah, Mr. Chairman, it took five years of conniving before you forced and cajoled the Choctaws and Chickasaws into accepting the terms of the Atoka agreement. When you did induce them to sign it you promised them by its terms that every one of the 11,000,000 acres of land which they then possessed would be divided equally among them, and this would have given them something over 500 acres per capita. But in 1901 you came back to them and told them it would be impossible to divide this land equally among them, but that if they would take a diminished allotment of 320 acres you would sell all the unallotted lands and distribute per capita the proceeds of the sales, which would be equal to the land. That is the sole purpose of this amendment. You promised them that this division should be made not later than March 4, 1907, and it is now almost March 4, 1914. All that is asked by this amendment is that you do what you agreed to do by the Atoka agreement. We ask you to keep faith with these helpless wards and pay the money that was promised them in the agreement of 1902. No man can vote to strike out this per capita amendment to-day without violating the sacred pledge of the Federal Government and without himself breaking faith with the helpless wards of this Government.

The decision in the Jack Amos case is appended hereto:

DECISIONS OF COURTS IN CITIZENSHIP CASES IN FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

CHOCTAW NATION.

(Opinion of William H. H. Clayton, judge central district of Indian Territory.)

There are upon the docket of this court, appealed from the commission to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes, known as the Dawes Commission, 241 cases, involving the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation of about 2,500 applicants.

All of these cases have been by my predecessor, Judge Lewis, placed on the equity side of the docket, and in the case of Mary A. Sanders, No. 63, a motion to transfer to the law side of the docket was filed and argued and by him overruled. It is not my purpose in these cases to disturb or to go back and open up questions already decided, but to adopt the past rulings of the court and to proceed as rapidly as possible to a final disposition of them. In passing I will remark, however, that it seems to me that the peculiarity of these cases, the many suits brought by persons having a common interest and a common purpose against the same defendant, the difficulties of enforcing the rights by judgments at law, and the many equities claimed by both parties to these suits make them proper cases for a court of equity.

The question of the jurisdiction of this court to hear and determine these cases has been raised by the pleadings. The counsel on neither side, however, have seen fit to press this question or to point out, either by brief or oral argument, the reasons for this contention. The statute giving the court jurisdiction is plain, and I know of no constitutional objections. It has been said, however, that Congress does not possess the power, under the Constitution, to give to the courts of the United States appellate jurisdiction over the final orders and awards of commissions and other such tribunals. This very question was raised in the case of The United States v. Ritche, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and reported in volume 58, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 524. In that case the proceedings were originally commenced before a board of commissioners to settle private land claims in California, under an act of Congress of March 3, 1851. Provisions were made by the act, at the suit of the losing party, for an appeal to the United States district court for the northern district of California. The board decided the case in favor of the claimant and against the Government. The United States appealed, in accordance with the provisions of the statute, to the aforesaid district court, where it was again tried de novo and an appeal regularly taken to the United States Supreme Court. In that court the question of the jurisdiction of the district court to try the case was raised. The contention is stated in the opinion. In deciding the case the court say:

"It is also objected that the law prescribing an appeal to the district court from the decision of the board of commissioners is unconstitutional, as this board, as organized, is not a court under the Constitution and can not, therefore, be vested with any of the judicial powers conferred upon the General Government.

"But the answer to this objection is that the suit in the district court is to be regarded as an original proceeding, the removal of the transcript, papers, and evidence into it from the board of commissioners being but a mode of providing for the institution of the suit in that court. The transfer, it is true, is called an appeal; but we must not, however, be misled by a name, but look to the substance and intent of the proceedings. The district court is not confined to a mere reexamination of the case as heard and decided by the board of commissioners, but hears the case de novo, upon the papers and testimony which had been used before the board, they being made evidence in the district court, and also upon such further evidence as either party may see fit to produce."

Following this decision, I will in these cases proceed as if they were originally brought in this court, try them de novo, and give to all of the parties all of the advantages of an original suit—that is, all cases brought here in conformity with the statute.

It is therefore ordered by the court that the claimants to the right of citizenship in these cases may have 15 days from this date—that is, until the —— day of July, 1897—in which to take and file further proof, and that the Choctaw Nation may have immediately thereafter 15 days in which to take and file further rebuttal proof—that is, from the said —— day of July, ——, until the —— day of July, 1897—and that all legal testimony heretofore taken and filed with the so-called Dawes Commission shall be considered as competent proof on the trial of these cases.

And that the trial of all of these cases, except such as may be disposed of otherwise, are hereby set for trial on Tuesday, the —— day of ———, 1897.

These cases naturally divide themselves into six heads or classes, to wit:

1. As to the right of citizenship of those Choctaws who, under the treaty of 1830, decided to remain in the State of Mississippi, called "Mississippi Choctaws," and have not since removed into the present Choctaw Nation.

* * * * * * *

[No. 158.]

I.—JACK AMOS ET AL. v. THE CHOCTAW NATION.

In this case the proof shows that the claimants are Choctaw Indians by blood now living in the State of Mississippi; that neither they nor their ancestors have ever removed into the present Choctaw Nation.

The claimants base their right to be enrolled as Choctaw citizens upon the terms of the second and fourteenth articles of the treaty negotiated at Dancing Rabbit Creek on September 27, 1830, and of the conditions of the patent to the lands of the Choctaw Nation executed by President Tyler in the year 1842. (Durant Ed. Choctaw Laws, p. 31.)

Articles 2 and 14 of the treaty of 1830 are are follows:

"ART. 2. The United States, under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it, beginning near Fort Smith, where the Arkansas boundary crosses the Arkansas River, running thence to the source of the Canadian Fork, if in the limits of the United States, or to those limits; thence due south to Red River and down Red River to the west boundary of the Territory of Arkansas; thence north along that line to the beginning. The boundary of the same to be agreeably to the treaty made and concluded at Washington City in the year 1825. The grant to be executed so soon as the present treaty shall be ratified.

"ART. 14. Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half of that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him over 10 years of age and a quarter section to such child as may be under 10 years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon said lands, intending to become citizens of the State, for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue. Said reservation shall include the present improvements of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

The conditions of article 2 of the treaty, that the land should be conveyed "to the Choctaw Nation in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it," are carried into the patent, and are the only portions of that instrument which shed any light on the question now being considered, and therefore article 2 and the conditions of the patent may be considered together.

The whole object of the treaty of 1830 was to procure the removal, as far as practicable, of the Choctaw people to the lands west of the Mississippi which they now occupy. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Choctaw Nation v. United States (119 U. S., 36), after reviewing the treaties of 1820 and 1825, says:

"In the meantime, however, under the pressure of the demand for settlement of the unoccupied lands of the State of Mississippi by emigrants from other States, the policy of the United States in respect to the Indian tribes still dwelling within its borders underwent a change, and it became desirable, by a new treaty, to effect, as far as practicable, the removal of the whole body of the Choctaw Nation, as a tribe, from the limits of the State to the lands which had been ceded to them west of the Mississippi River. To carry out that policy the treaty of 1830 was negotiated."

Again, in the case, page 27, the court says:

"It is notorious as a historical fact, as it abundantly appears from the records of this case, that great pressure had to be brought to bear upon the Indians to effect their removal, and the whole treaty was evidently and purposely executed not so much to secure to the Indians the rights for which they had stipulated, as to effectuate the policy of the United States in regard to their removal."

Article 3 of the treaty of 1830 stipulates that the Choctaws agree to remove all of their people during the years 1831, 1832, and 1833 to those lands. (7 Stat. L., 333.)

Article 14 of the treaty, however, provides for certain privileges and rights for those who might choose to remain in Mississippi with a view of becoming citizens of that State. They and their descendants were to receive certain lands and, after living on them for five years, intending to become citizens of the State, those lands were to be granted to them in fee simple. Then follows this very peculiar clause:

"Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

The difficulty in construing this clause of the treaty is to ascertain the meaning of the word "remove." To what does it relate and how shall we give it meaning? It certainly does not purpose to impose a penalty on the Choctaw who may choose to remove for removing, and for that reason forfeit his right to the annuity, because so long as he remained in Mississippi he was not entitled to any annuity, and therefore by removing he could not forfeit that which he did not have. If he removed he was to have no annuity, and if he remained he was to have no annuity. It is evident, therefore, that the word was not used for the purpose of forfeiting the annuity in case of removal. Then what are its uses? The very object of the treaty was to procure a removal of these people. The whole of the Choctaw Nation, with all of its sovereignty, its powers, and its duties, was to be transferred beyond the Mississippi. It was to exercise its powers, confer its privileges, and maintain the citizenship of its people in another place. Those who were left behind to retain not this Choctaw citizenship but only the "privileges of a Choctaw citizen;" that is, that when they put themselves into a position that these privileges could be conferred upon them they were to have them, and under the conditions and purposes of this treaty how would it be possible for them to put themselves in such a position without first removing within the territorial jurisdiction of the Choctaw Nation and within the sphere of its powers? What privilege would it be possible for the Choctaw Nation to confer or a Mississippi Choctaw to receive so long as he remained in Mississippi and out of the limits of the Choctaw Nation? By the very terms of the treaty they were to become citizens of another State, owing allegiance to and receiving protection from another sovereignty. If one Mississippi Choctaw were to commit a wrong against the person or property of another, the right would be enforced and the wrong redressed under the laws of Mississippi. The Choctaw Nation would be powerless to act in such a case. The Choctaws in that State can not vote, sit as jurors, or hold office as a Choctaw citizen or receive any other benefit or privilege as such. They can not participate in the rents and profits of the lands of the Choctaw Nation, because by the very terms of the grant the Choctaw people and their descendants must live upon them. If they do not, it is an act of forfeiture, made so by the provisions of article 2 of the treaty of 1830 and also of those of the patent to their lands afterwards executed.

The title of the Choctaw people to their lands is a conditional one, and one of the conditions of the grant, expressed in both the second article of the treaty of 1830 and the patent, is that the grantee shall live upon them. And who are the grantees? Who are these people who are to live upon the land? Unquestionably the Choctaw people and their descendants, for while the grant is to the Choctaw Nation the people seem to be included, both as grantees and beneficiaries. The language of the treaty is, and it is carried into the patent:

"The President of the United States shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee simple, to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it."

The Choctaw Nation is not "them" and can not have "descendants." And while it may exercise its sovereignty and its national powers within certain defined territorial limits it can not "live on land." Those provisions of the grant which are expressed in the plural and attach to "descendants" and which require as a condition that the land shall be lived on beyond doubt refer to the Choctaw people and their descendants. Whatever effect upon the title the limitation upon the right of alienation expressed in the patent, so that the lands can not be sold except to the grantor or by its consent, may have, there can be no question but that the second article of the treaty of 1830, negotiated 12 years before the execution of the patent, and in which no limitation on the right of alienation is expressed, was intended to convey a fee-simple title, burdened by two conditions subsequent, the one that the grantees should continue the corporate existence of their nation, and the other that the people of that nation and their descendants should forever live upon the land. A failure of either would work a forfeiture of the title to the grantor.

Now, why was it that this fee-simple title was to be burdened by the condition that the grantee must live on the land? In the light of the knowledge of the conditions that then existed the answer is plain. The policy of the Federal Government at that time, relating to the Indian tribes, was to move them upon a reservation and keep them there; and if the Indian, either singly or in numbers, should stray off, soldiers with guns and bayonets were used to drive them back. This very treaty was negotiated with the Choctaws for that very purpose. Hence the condition in the grant that they should live on the land or it should be subject to forfeiture to the United States. This condition was inserted for two reasons: First, to compel the grantees to remove upon the lands, and, second, to compel them to remain on them after removal. It was not intended that some should go and locate on the lands and hold the title for themselves and also for the others who should choose to remain. This would defeat the very object of the condition. These lands were conveyed to the Choctaw people to be held by them as tenants in common. This intention of the second article of the treaty of 1830 is expressed by the use of the words "them and their descendants" and of the clause that they were to "live on the land." Both of these clauses are expressed in the plural and evidently do not relate to the nation as a corporate body. That a tenancy in common was intended is made clear by a consideration of section 3 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for an exchange of lands with the Indians residing in any of the States or Territories, and for their removal west of the Mississippi River," approved May 28, 1830 (4 U. S. Stat. L., 412). The section reads as follows.

"And be it further enacted, That in the making of any such exchange or exchanges it shall and may be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guarantee to them and their heirs or successors the country so exchanged with them; and, if they prefer it, that the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same: Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same."

At the time the treaty of 1830 was negotiated, September 29, 1830, this act had been on the statute books of the United States for four months, and as a matter of course the commissioners to negotiate the treaty were familiar with it. But the language used in this act to limit the estate is "to them, their heirs, or successors." The language used in the treaty to limit the estate therein granted is "in fee simple to them and their descendants," and then conditions are attached not named in the statute. Why the word "successors" was left out of the treaty is plain. But why the word "heirs" was changed to the word "descendants," unless it was that a word should be used within the comprehension of those untutored Indians, who knew nothing of the technical phrases of the common law used in the conveyance of real estate, is not easy to determine. The word "successors" was omitted from the treaty because by its terms the Choctaw Nation was to have no successors. They were to live on the land forever, or it should be forfeited to the grantor. When the technical words "successors" and "heirs" were dropped and the common word "descendants" was used, these Indians could understand it. They knew what they and their offspring were. It was to them—the people and their children—that the land was sold and when the condition was added that the grant was to be made to them and their descendants only in the event that they should live upon the lands, they could not but understand that this implied a removal to and a continual residence upon them.

As a further evidence that the parties understood that by this transaction the land was to be held in common by the people, the treaty of 1833, article 1, provides, after describing the lands, as follows:

"And pursuant to an act of Congress approved May 28, 1830, the United States do hereby forever secure and guarantee the lands embraced within the said limits to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common, so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal undivided interest in the whole: Provided, however, No part thereof shall ever be sold without the consent of both tribes and that said land shall revert to the United States if said Indians and their heirs become extinct or abandon the same. (4 U. S. Stat. L., 276.)"

If this be true, there is no holding in trust by the corporate body of the Choctaw Nation for the benefit of the people, but the people themselves have the title and hold it in common.

"A tenancy in common is a joint estate in which there is unity of possession, but separate and distinct title. The tenants have separate and independent freeholds or leaseholds in their respective share, which they manage and dispose of as freely as if the estate was one in severalty. * * * The interest of one tenant in common is so independent of that of his cotenant that in a joint conveyance of the estate it would be treated as a grant to each of his own share of the estate. (Tiedeman on Real Property, 235.)"

And therefore any condition of the grant would be as binding on each of the tenants in common as if the estate was in severalty and vested in the individual tenant. And therefore the condition named in the second article of the treaty of 1830 and in the patent, that "they shall live on the land," is binding individually upon each and upon all of the grantees.

In the third article of the treaty the Choctaws agreed to move all of their people within three years, and the United States intended that they should go. But, by the fourteenth article of the treaty, provisions were made whereby those who should decide to remain and become citizens of the State of Mississippi, in the event that, because of the intolerance and persecutions of the whites, which they themselves had so bitterly experienced, or for any other cause, they might become dissatisfied with their altered conditions and their new citizenship and desire to follow them to their new homes, and thereafter exercise with them in their own country the privileges of citizenship, they could do so, except that they were not to participate with them in their annuities, the lands which they were to receive in Mississippi being deemed a compensation for that.

When the fourteenth article of the treaty was framed, the negotiating parties understood that the policy of the United States was that the Choctaws were to be removed. The Choctaws, in article 3, had just agreed that they should all go. The ink was not yet dry in article 2, whereby the condition was placed in this grant to the lands that they were to live upon them or they should be forfeited, and that no privilege of citizenship could be conferred or enjoyed outside of the territorial jurisdiction of their newly located nation. Understanding these conditions, the latter clause of article 14 was penned:

"Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove—that is, if they ever place themselves on the land and within the jurisdiction of the nation whereby those privileges may become operative—are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

In other words, if they ever remove, they are to enjoy all of the privileges of a Choctaw citizen except that of participating in their annuities. If this be not the meaning to be attached to the word "remove" as used in the clause of the treaty under consideration, it must be meaningless. But in the interpretation of statutes it is the duty of the court to so interpret them as to give to every word a meaning, and in doing so it must take into consideration the whole statute, its objects and purposes, the rights which are intended to be enforced and the evils intended to be remedied; it may go to the history of the transaction about which the legislation is had and call to its aid all legitimate facts proven or of which the courts will take judicial notice in order to find the true meaning of the word as used in the statute. Of course the same rule of interpretation applies to treaties. Adopting these rules in the interpretation of article 14 of the treaty of 1830, I arrive at the conclusion that the "privilege of a Choctaw citizen" therein reserved to those Choctaws who shall remain, thereby separating themselves, it may be forever, from their brethren and their nation, becoming citizens of another sovereignty and aliens of their own, situated so that it would be impossible, while in Mississippi, to receive or enjoy any of the rights of Choctaw citizenship, was the right to renounce his allegiance to the Commonwealth of Mississippi, move upon the lands conveyed to him and his people, and there, the only spot on earth where he could do so, renew his relations with his people and enjoy all of the privileges of a Choctaw citizen except to participate in the annuities.

As an evidence that the Choctaw people themselves took this view of the question, attention is called to the fact that their council has passed many acts and resolutions inviting these absent Choctaws to move into their country, and on one occasion appropriated a considerable sum of money to assist them on their journey, and until the past two or three years have always promptly placed those who did return on the rolls of citizenship, but never enrolled an absent Choctaw as a citizen.

On December 24, 1889, the general council of the Choctaw Nation passed the following resolution:

"Whereas there are large numbers of Choctaws yet in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana who are entitled to all the rights and privileges of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation; and

"Whereas they are denied all rights of citizenship in said States; and

"Whereas they are too poor to immigrate themselves into the Choctaw Nation: Therefore

"Be it resolved by the general council of the Choctaw Nation assembled, That the United States Government is hereby requested to make provisions for the emigration of said Choctaws from said States to the Choctaw Nation," etc.

The language is, not that they are entitled to the rights and privileges of Choctaw citizenship in the States named, but "who are entitled to all the rights and privileges of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation," and the prayer is that because of the fact that they are denied the rights of citizenship in the State that the United States will remove them to a place—their own country—where the rights of Choctaw citizenship may be enjoyed by them.

As a further evidence of the fact that all of the parties to the treaty, the United States, the Choctaw Nation, and the Mississippi Indians themselves, have always understood that the Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to none of the rights of a Choctaw citizen so long as they remained in that State, attention is called to the fact that the lands in Mississippi which were ceded to the United States by the Choctaw Nation by virtue of the treaty of 1830 were, under the laws of the United States, sold. The Choctaw Nation claimed that they had never been paid any consideration for them, and that the United States justly owed them the net proceeds arising out of the sale. For many years this contention was carried on before the departments of the Government, commissions, and other tribunals. Finally, by treaty, it was submitted to the Senate of the United States for decision. That body found in favor of the Choctaw Nation. The case then went to the Court of Claims, and from there to the United States Supreme Court, in which court judgment was finally rendered for nearly $3,000,000. This judgment was rendered in November, 1886. The money was turned over to the Choctaws by the United States, and by them, with the knowledge and consent of the United States, divided among their own people who lived in the nation. Not one farthing of it was ever paid to an absent Mississippi Choctaw, and no portion of it was ever claimed by them. During this whole litigation, running through many years, no effort was made to make themselves parties to the suit. And when the money was finally paid to the Choctaw authorities, to be divided among the people, they made no claim for any part of it and entered no protest to its being paid to the resident Choctaws, nor have they brought suit for their share since. The other party to the treaty, the United States Government, the guardian of these Indians, paid the money over without making any provision for the Mississippi Choctaws to get their share, or intimating that anything was due them. When it is remembered that this money was the proceeds of the sale of the lands in Mississippi belonging to the united Choctaw people while they lived in that State, and that the great bulk of the Mississippi Choctaws had never received one farthing for their share in the lands, if they, living in Mississippi, are entitled there to the rights of a Choctaw citizen, it is remarkable that they did not assert their rights.

Again, a few years ago, the interest of the Choctaws to lands lying west of their present boundaries was sold by them to the United States for a considerable sum of money. This, like the other, was promptly divided among the resident Choctaws with the knowledge and consent of the United States, and without protest or claim of the Mississippi Choctaws. If they are entitled to the privilege of Choctaw citizens without removing into the boundaries of the nation, they are and were entitled to their pro rata share of this money. If they do not understand that they have no claim to the rights of citizenship without moving into the country, why have they for the past 65 years silently stood by and permitted these kinds of transactions to be had without claim, protest, or suit?

The Eastern Band of Cherokees, now residing in North Carolina, sustained a relationship to the Cherokee Nation almost identical to that sustained by the Mississippi Choctaws to the Choctaw Nation. Like the Mississippi Choctaws, there were some among them who were averse to moving to their new country west of the Mississippi River. Provisions were made for them by the treaty of New Echota (the treaty of 1835) between the Cherokee Nation and the United States, similar to those with the Choctaws by the treaty of 1830. When the Cherokee people moved to the present home of the Cherokees, these remained behind in North Carolina, where they have ever since resided. Like the Choctaw treaty of 1830, the treaty of New Echota provided that their lands should be ceded to them and their descendants, etc. The Cherokee Nation, by virtue of a treaty with the United States, afterwards sold some of these lands. The Eastern Band of Cherokees, in North Carolina, unlike their Mississippi Choctaw brethren, promptly demanded their pro rata of the proceeds of this sale, and upon being denied at once sought and obtained permission of the United States to sue the Cherokee Nation in the Court of Claims for this money, and also, in the same suit, to sue for another fund which was created by the treaty of New Echota, consisting of certain annuities in the sum of $214,000, of which the Eastern Band of Cherokees claimed a pro rata share. The suit was brought and the Court of Claims, in a very elaborate and learned decision, decided against the right of the Eastern Band of Cherokees to recover, upon the ground that those Cherokees, by the act of remaining in North Carolina, had alienated themselves from the Cherokee Nation to such an extent that they could not claim any of the rights of a Cherokee citizen without moving into the Cherokee Nation and there being readmitted in accordance with the constitution and laws of that nation. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there the decision of the Court of Claims was affirmed. (Eastern Band of Cherokees v. United States, 117 U. S., 288.) In that case the Supreme Court, after reviewing all of the treaties and statutes relating to the matter, concluded by saying:

"If the Indians in that State (North Carolina) or in any other State east of the Mississippi wish to enjoy the benefits of the common property of the Cherokee Nation, in whatever form it may exist, they must, as held by the Court of Claims, comply with the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation, and be readmitted to citizenship as there provided. They can not live out of its territory, evade the obligations and burdens of citizenship, and at the same time enjoy the benefits of the funds and common property of the nation. Those funds and that property were dedicated by the constitution of the Cherokees and were intended by the treaties with the United States for the benefit of the united nation, and not in any respect for those who had separated from it and become aliens to their nation. We can see no just ground on which the claim of the petitioners can rest in either of the funds held by the United States in trust for the Cherokee Nation."

It seems to me that this decision of the Supreme Court, founded on a case so nearly similar to the one at hearing, conclusively settles the contention in favor of the Choctaw Nation. Indeed, in that case, the Supreme Court expresses a very strong intimation that those provisions of the treaty of New Echota relating to and providing for those Cherokees who should refuse to remove West were confined in their operation to that class of Cherokees then in esse, and the rights conferred by those provisions of the treaty did not descend to their offspring; that the descendants of those Cherokees did not succeed to the rights of their ancestors under the treaty. The language of the Supreme Court is:

"Nor is the band (Eastern Band of Cherokees), organized as it now is, the successor of any organization recognized by any treaty or law of the United States. Individual Indians who refuse to remove West and preferred to remain and become citizens of the States in which they resided were promised certain moneys, but there is no evidence that the petitioners have succeeded to any of these rights. The original claimants have probably all died, for 50 years have elapsed since the treaty of 1835 was made, and no transfer from them to their legal representatives is shown. (Ib.,310.)"

The court proceeds, however, to decide this case, as heretofore shown, on the ground that the Indians composing the Eastern Band of Cherokees had not removed into the Cherokee Nation and reassumed their citizenship under the constitution and laws of that nation.

I am disposed to the opinion, however, and will so hold, that the descendants of the Mississippi Choctaws, by virtue of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, are entitled to all of the rights of Choctaw citizenship, with all of the privileges and property rights incident thereto, provided they have renounced their allegiance to the sovereignty of Mississippi by moving into the Choctaw Nation in good faith to live upon their lands, renewing their allegiance to that nation, and putting themselves in an attitude whereby they will be able to share in the burdens of their government. The reason for this conclusion is, to my mind, made morally certain when it is remembered that ever since the treaty of 1830, now for the period of nearly 67 years, with the exception of the past two or three years, the Choctaw Nation, by its legislative enactments and by its acts so long continued that by custom they have become crystallized into law, have universally admitted all who should remove to this country and rehabilitate them in all of the rights and privileges of citizenship enjoyed by themselves.

The counsel for the claimants lay considerable stress on the effect of the provisions of article 13 of the treaty of 1866 between the United States and the Choctaw Nation. (14 Stat. —.)

By the eleventh and twelfth articles of that treaty a scheme was devised by which the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations were to be surveyed and divided and allotted to the individual Indians, provided the councils of the respective nations should agree to it, which, however, they have refused to do. A land office was to be established at Boggy Depot, in the Choctaw Nation. When all of the surveys were completed, maps thereof were to be filed in the said land office, subject to the inspection of all parties interested, and immediately thereafter notice of such filing was to be given for 90 days, calling upon all parties interested to examine said maps, to the end that errors in the location of occupancies, which were to be noted on the maps, might be corrected. Then followed article 13 of the treaty, which is as follows:

"ART. 13. The notice required in the above article shall be given, not only in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, but by publication in newspapers printed in the States of Mississippi and Tennessee, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Alabama, to the end that such Choctaws and Chickasaws as yet remain outside of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations may be informed and have opportunity to exercise the rights hereby given to resident Choctaws and Chickasaws: Provided, That before any such absent Choctaw or Chickasaw shall be permitted to select for him or herself, or others, as hereinafter provided, he or she shall satisfy the register of the land office of his or her intention, or the intention of the party for whom the selection is to be made, to become bona fide resident in the said nation within five years from the time of selection; and should the said absentee fail to remove into said nation and occupy and commence an improvement on the land selected within the time aforesaid the said selection shall be canceled, and the land shall thereafter be discharged from all claim on account thereof."

From an examination of this article of the treaty it will be seen that the Choctaws and Chickasaws recognized the right of absent members of their nation to participate in the allotment and the subsequent ownership of their lands to the same extent as they themselves enjoyed, but on conditions, however: First, that they should satisfy the register of the land office of their intention to become bona fide residents in the said nation within five years from the time of said selection; and, second, that within the said five years they should actually remove into the said nation (here is a statute of limitation); and third, that within the said five years they should occupy and commence an improvement upon the selected lands.

It will be observed that this latter clause imposes a condition on absent Indians nowhere required of the resident ones by any clause of the treaty. They were required to move into the country and show their good faith and their intention to remain bona fide citizens of the nation by actual occupancy of the land and an expenditure of money in its improvement. The notice was to be given them in order that they might have an opportunity of removing into the nation and there residing and resuming their rights as citizens; but care was to be taken, and safeguards provided by which their removal was to be actually had, and that it was to be done in good faith. First, the register of the land office was to be convinced, by such proof as might satisfy him, of the intention of the absent Indian to become a bona fide resident of the nation before he was allowed to make a selection; and, second, that was to be followed by an actual occupancy and improvement of the land; and if he failed in this, it worked a forfeiture of his rights. Nowhere within the whole treaty is any right recognized or conferred on an absent Indian except on the condition that he shall remove into the nation, and the right is not to be consummated or enjoyed until after actual removal. No treaty or act of the Choctaw council, or of any officer of the Choctaw Nation, since the treaty of 1830, can be cited, or at least I have not found them, whereby any right or privilege has been conferred, granted, or recognized in or to a Mississippi Choctaw, so long as he shall remain away from his people, but there are an infinitude of such acts and conduct granting and recognizing such rights and privileges to him after he shall have removed.

The provisions of the treaty of 1866, so far from being an authority in favor of the contention of claimants, seems to me to be strongly against them.

To permit men with, perchance, but a strain of Choctaw blood in their veins, who 65 years ago broke away from their kindred and their nation, and during that time, or the most of it, have been exercising the rights of citizenship and doing homage to the sovereignty of another nation, who have borne none of the burdens of this nation and have become strangers to the people, to reach forth their hands from their distant and alien home and lay hold of a part of the public domain, the common property of the people, and appropriate to their own use, would be unjust and inequitable.

It is therefore the opinion of the court that absent Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled to be enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation.

The action of the Dawes Commission is therefore affirmed, and a decree will be entered for the Choctaw Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the matter in hand. We have wandered a great way from the proper determination of the section, and I desire to read that part of the language which it is moved to strike out. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make a per capita payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, same to be made under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such members are Indians whose restrictions have not been removed the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payment and use the same for their benefit.

I hope that this will not be stricken out, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that there are sufficient funds in the Treasury now to take care of all the Mississippi Choctaws that remain in Mississippi, and a committee has been appointed to ascertain from the various bills now pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs the necessary data relative to the putting on the rolls of such Choctaws and Chickasaws as are entitled to go upon the roll. That matter will be passed upon in due time, and there is in the Treasury now to the credit of the two tribes the sum of more than $7,000,000. In addition, they have coal lands amounting to 400,000 acres; coal lands and asphalt lands that are worth anywhere from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000. They also have a million and a half acres of timbered lands that are worth at least $7,000,000. So that you will see that there are sufficient funds belonging to this tribe of Indians to take care of those Choctaw Indians in Mississippi.

There is at present in the Treasury $260 per capita. That does not take into consideration the coal lands and asphalt lands, and all that, but it is money actually in the Treasury to the credit of those Indians. If you take out $100, that leaves $160 in the Treasury per capita for the benefit of those Indians.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have only two minutes.

Mr. NORTON. What rate of interest is this money bringing the Indians in the Treasury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Four per cent, as I am informed.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know what rate of interest these Indians are paying for money down there in Oklahoma?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. About 18 per cent. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It runs up to the usury laws. It runs up as far as 10 per cent.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not fair and just that they should have this money?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. That is the reason why I think this $100 per capita should be paid to them.

Mr. MADDEN. That is to pay interest on what they owe?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is to buy bread and meat and clothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 12 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not want any member of this committee to think that either the Representatives of Mississippi or the Mississippi Choctaws are trying to get anything they are not entitled to receive.

I want to lay down one fundamental proposition, and that is that when civilization was progressing in Mississippi and all the Choctaws lived in Mississippi, the only way they could get the Choctaws to leave Mississippi was by incorporating the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, which provided specifically that every Choctaw Indian who desired to remain in Mississippi and continue to live around his happy hunting grounds and work occasionally in the fields that he had always plowed might do it by going to the agent of the Government and signifying his intention to stay there, and in that way remain in Mississippi; and by complying with the express terms of the treaty he would not lose any of his rights as a Choctaw citizen. And consequently I would, in the very beginning, disabuse your minds of any idea that simply because these Indians live in Mississippi they are not still a part of the Choctaw Tribe.

Now, the Government sent this man Ward there in order that these Indians might prove their right or intention to stay in Mississippi. He went there, and the evidence shows that he was so careless and so reckless and that he got so drunk and stayed so drunk that he accepted the applications of only 143 Choctaws, and every piece of law that has been written in the interest of the Mississippi Choctaws since that time has been based upon the fact that the Mississippi Choctaw had to do either one of two things: One was that he had to remove to Oklahoma, and thereby violate the fourteenth article of the treaty referred to, which guaranteed him the right to remain in Mississippi; and the other was that his ancestors had to actually receive a patent.

Now, the proof, as I say, shows that only 143 of them originally received a patent, and, consequently, if you confine it to this proposition, no one could every possibly prove that he had rights under the fourteenth article of the treaty.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] says that under the decisions of the courts so far every opportunity has been given to the Mississippi Choctaws to prove their rights. The gentleman is altogether mistaken about that. The gentleman also talks about Senator OWEN. Let me tell you what Senator OWEN says about the Mississippi Choctaws. He represented them, and in a brief filed in the court recently he says, in part:

It will thus be seen that there was a secret underhand opposition to the Mississippi Choctaws, because it must be remembered that this rule of identification, made by the Dawes Commission on March 10, 1899, and submitted by report to the Secretary of the Interior, was pigeonholed for eight years and then disapproved without notice. That is the roll where over 1,100 Mississippi Choctaws went before the Dawes Commission and proved their right to be enrolled, and when that list came up here it was never put on the final rolls of the tribe.

That is what the Senator from Oklahoma says. He differs from the distinguished Representatives of that State. He goes further and says:

The report declares that the Mississippi Choctaws were poor, ignorant, and helpless. This report in behalf of the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, signed by the Dawes Commission, was disapproved eight years later by Mr. Secretary Hitchcock, on March 4, 1907, without notice or warning, so that no person upon this roll ever knew for eight years whether he was so far identified as to be entitled to remove as an identified Choctaw, and finally the entire schedule was rejected without notice.

If the gentlemen from Oklahoma think that the Mississippi Choctaws are trying to get something that they are not entitled to, why have they introduced into this Congress bills asking that the Government of the United States provide homes for the Mississippi Choctaws? I will tell you what they want. They want to saddle the Mississippi Choctaws onto the Federal Treasury, and thereby have all the money for their own Oklahoma Indians. Be not deceived by it, gentlemen. They say that we are not entitled to receive anything. Let me tell you. In 1881 the Choctaw Tribe in Oklahoma sued the Government of the United States for injuries done to the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi. A part of the injury complained of was that the Government failed to give the Mississippi Choctaws their allotment of lands, failed to right the wrongs committed by this man Ward in Mississippi. They recovered a judgment for $8,000,000. You ask me where it went to. I say it went into the tribal funds of the Choctaw Nation. Are we doing anything that is not right when we ask you, the representatives of the American people, that this money shall, in part, go to those Indians in Mississippi, for whom the Oklahoma Choctaws recovered the judgment? Are we asking too much when we plead for simply that? And yet the Oklahoma Representatives say we are trying to get something to which we are not entitled.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this matter was up in the Sixty-second Congress on a bill that I introduced. That bill went before a subcommittee composed of distinguished gentlemen in this House, men who had no interest in Mississippi, who had no interest in Oklahoma. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] gave that bill full and exhaustive consideration. They held exhaustive hearings. The distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] was there at the hearings. The attorneys representing the Choctaw Nation——

Mr. CARTER. I was not at those hearings.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman was there at some time during those hearings.

Mr. CARTER. No; I was not.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I withdraw that statement. The gentleman knew what was going on all the time, and he had a right to appear before the committee.

Mr. CARTER. But I was not there.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman had a right to be there, because it was an open hearing and everybody had a right to appear before the committee. Here is what Mr. RUSSELL, the chairman of that subcommittee, said:

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, your subcommittee, to which was referred House bill 19213, introduced by Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, of which subcommittee I was made chairman, desires to submit its report.

Your committee has agreed upon a report, and I will submit the same in writing, after giving briefly my own conclusions and the reasons that have led me to such conclusions.

* * * * * * *

Our written report is as follows:

Your subcommittee, to which was referred H. R. 19213, having extensively considered the same, is of the opinion and recommends:

First. That a considerable number of Indians not enrolled are entitled to the benefits of Choctaw citizenship.

Second. That members of the following two classes are entitled to such benefits:

(a) All full-blood Choctaws.

(b) All mixed-blood Choctaws, who can prove descent from an ancestor who received or was entitled to receive a patent to lands under article 14 of the treaty of 1830.

Third. That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish this committee from records in his possession or under his control, and within nine months from the date hereof, a list of those who comprise the two above-named classes and who are not enrolled as Choctaws.

That is signed by that subcommittee. The gentleman says that in 1902 Congress passed a law here giving to the Mississippi Choctaws the right to go into Oklahoma and prove their claims. Ah, the act that the gentleman talks about is the act of this man McMurray, whom you read about occasionally in the papers, and who once got into a controversy with Senator GORE. That man McMurray boasted that he wrote all the laws that were passed while he was attorney for the Choctaw Nation. Here is what he said:

As a matter of fact, I am willing to take the responsibility of almost all the Choctaw and Chickasaw people's doings during these years on the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish. There was hardly a bill affecting the general affairs that was passed that we didn't O. K., and there never was a bill suggested by us that was not passed; so whatever there is in this work, good or bad, it rests upon us.

Gentlemen, let me tell you the contract that he had. He was getting $5,000 a year from the Choctaw Tribe for representing them, and under this law that he says he wrote and which he caused to be passed, he got a commission, in addition to his salary, for every Mississippi Choctaw that he kept off the rolls.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman does not mean to say that.

Mr. HARRISON. I know the gentleman differs with me on that.

Mr. MADDEN. How much was the total of the commissions which he would collect if this thing became successful?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. It was about $3,000,000, was it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Away up there—some stupendous sum.

Mr. CARTER. I am not going to put anything into the RECORD except this——

Mr. HARRISON. Do not take this out of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CARTER. I am going to put that contract in the RECORD, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman is so much in the confidence of Mr. McMurray that he can get his contract, let him put it in the RECORD.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman can get the contract, for it is a public record.

Mr. HARRISON. But the law that they say was so fair to the Mississippi Choctaws was written in such an astute and adroit way that the Mississippi Choctaws were not entitled to get anything under it. Let me read to you the beginning of it:

ART. 41. All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495) as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may at any time within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said commission, make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of such settlement to such commission within one year after the date of the said identification as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such commission as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to allotment as herein provided for citizens of the tribes, subject to special provisions herein provided as to Mississippi Choctaws, and said enrollment shall be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who receive a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said commission, but this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not a Mississippi Choctaw of the full blood, or who is not the descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw who received a patent to land under said treaty, or who is otherwise barred from the rights of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation. All of said Mississippi Choctaws so enrolled by said commission shall be upon a separate roll.

Under this act these Indians had six months after identification to go to Oklahoma, take up their allotment of lands, live there for six months and then be enrolled; but already under the law of 1898 the time for identification had expired or had almost expired. There was the joker. No matter which way they turned they could not get to Oklahoma under that act of 1902 and be enrolled, because the time for identification had expired.

I hope that the motion will prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LENROOT. I have an amendment to that.

Mr. MANN. What became of the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas?

The CHAIRMAN. That was withdrawn by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 34, by adding, at the end of line 8, the following:

"Provided further, That in the final distribution of moneys belonging to said tribes, the per capita payment herein authorized shall be taken into account in determining per capita payments to which each Indian shall be entitled."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, that it is new legislation, and not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I should not think it would require any discussion or consideration to show that the amendment is germane. It is proposed to pay a certain sum of money. We can pay it or withhold it. We can pay it on conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas) there were 43 ayes and 17 noes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-four Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum he had caused the roll to be called and 281 Members had answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum, under the rule had the roll called, and 281 Members answered to their names. A quorum is present, and the committee will resume its session.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the point of no quorum was made the committee was dividing on the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to strike out the paragraph. The question is upon his motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the paragraph which it is moved to strike out be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk again read the paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out the paragraph just read by the Clerk.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, all debate has been closed on this amendment, but I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, what was the vote in the Committee of the Whole just prior to the point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is material.

Mr. MADDEN. It was 42 to 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the paragraph.

The committee again divided; and there were 118 ayes and 49 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

By direction of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. LEVER reported the bill (H. R. 13679) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 295), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN, reserve all points of order on the bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. NEELEY of Kansas for one week, on account of important business.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill S. 48, the Alaskan railroad bill, with House amendments thereto disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House insist upon its amendments to the Alaskan railroad bill and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. DAVENPORT, and Mr. GUERNSEY.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11325. An act to authorize the reconstruction of the existing toll bridge across the Hudson River at Troy, in the State of New York, and the maintenance of the bridge so reconstructed.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1346. An act to authorize the Eastern Maine Railroad to construct a bridge across the Penobscot River between the cities of Bangor and Brewer, in the State of Maine; and

S. 3439. An act appropriating funds for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera and dourine.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 11325. An act to authorize the reconstruction of the existing toll bridge across the Hudson River at Troy, in the State of New York, and the maintenance of the bridge so reconstructed.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION—CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. On Wednesday last, after the previous question had been ordered on the Alaska railroad bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] propounded a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair as to whether the previous question having been ordered, if the House should adjourn, the bill would come up as unfinished business on the next day or if it should go over until the next Calendar Wednesday. At that time the Chair gave the opinion offhand that it would not come up the next day, but would go over until the following Calendar Wednesday. The Chair is now absolutely certain that he was wrong in rendering that opinion, and he has his own somewhat elaborate decision rendered last year to show that he was wrong. The opinion of the Chair last year will be found on page 1929 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. At that time the Chair gave as a controlling reason why it would come up on the next day that the House met, and not go over until the following Calendar Wednesday, the analogy to be drawn from the decisions as to Friday business and Monday business.

Of course, either ruling would have been sufficient originally, but the rulings ought to be harmonious and consistent, so that this Speaker and anyone else who follows him may have a system to follow, and the Chair now rules, notwithstanding the opinion he gave on Wednesday last, that under such circumstances where the previous question is ordered on a bill under consideration on Calendar Wednesday, if the House adjourn before the bill is disposed of, it will come up as unfinished business on the next legislative day and not go over until the following Calendar Wednesday.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13612, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to one hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and, pending the motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall be obliged to object to that. I have had requests upon this side for about an hour. Whether there are others who desire to speak I do not know. I think we ought to have on this side an hour and a half.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose we make it an hour on a side?
